During the last three years our calculations have been based on the ability of the German Communist Party to make a timely change in policy under the pressure of the masses. If our prognosis of yesterday were defined more sharply, it would be expressed as follows: "We cannot know as yet to what degree the German working class is weakened by past mistakes, zigzags and defeats and to what degree the sabotage of the Stalinist bureaucracy in combination with the capitulation of the social-democracy, have paralyzed the energies of the proletariat." We have frequently expressed the hope that the very approach of the Fascist danger would close the ranks of the proletariat and give rise to a power of resistance which would not allow Hitler to capture all positions at once. And every day in the advance of Hitler, even though he be already in power, would inevitably release a greater flow of confidence among the workers. The beginning of Civil War in its turn should have engendered a decomposition in the government camp and in the Fascist army itself. Vacillations in the camp of the enemy, should have again, in their turn, heightened the offensive force of the proletariat, etc., etc. Such was the dialectic perspective which we considered probable; at any rate, not excluded. And because of that, we had to, it was our duty to, exhaust all possibilities contained in the situation of yesterday.

However, now it would be insane to be ruled by an old perspective which has been cast aside by events. The Spanish comrades ask: "Is it possible that these few weeks" (Continued on Page 2)

SOLVE THE CONTRADICTION!

Our appeal to save the MILITANT has met with an immediate and fine response. A comrade in Cleveland shot in fifteen dollars. Comrade Wright in New York saved our linotype from the sheriff's clutches by paying the overdue notes. And Comrade A. Konikow in Boston took over the payment of the monthly notes, thus insuring its future use to us. Comrade Karner dug up a loan of fifty dollars to pay our electric and gas bills. Comrades Gordon and Clarke raised a donation of thirty dollars. Our comrades in Boston put their heads together and raised eight and a half dollars which they applied to their MILITANT account. Excellent!

But good as was this response it enabled us to get out only a two-pager! And it, by no means, solves the problem. Next week's issue is still hanging in the balance. Only the same continued prompt response will enable us to get back to a more "normal" basis.

SOLVE THE CONTRADICTION!

This situation, this financial sword of Damocles, which threatens every issue, is not a symptom of decline. Far from it! All the evidence points in the opposite direction.

Take the Chicago Mooney Congress! Our delegation represented forty-five thousand workers! Among our delegates were the representatives of the fifteen thousand left-wing miners of the P.M.A., the most advanced section of the American working class. Through the influence of the P.M.A. in the Congress, comrade Cannon was elected to the Resolutions Committee; and upon the insistence of the miners' delegation, to the Permanent National Committee. Without a doubt the Chicago Mooney Congress is, so far, the high watermark of the influence of the Left Opposition in the United States.

Who does not know what an indispensable part the MILITANT played in the hard years of preparation for this signal advance? It is a long record of great sacrifices in the struggle to overcome apparently insuperable difficulties. As our horizons widen the role that the MILITANT must play becomes even greater. Great tasks face us. We must not fail in a single one of them. Least of all can we afford to let the MILITANT stagger under the burden.

But therein is the danger. The MILITANT is encircled by a ring of debt. The financial crisis of the MILITANT stands in the sharpest contrast to our work ahead. Worse than that! Its failure to appear regularly and in full size hampers the work in the field. When the "main organizer" falters the whole movement is affected.

This contradiction cannot be tolerated. It must be overcome. Smash the circle of debt!

Act quickly! Next week's MILITANT must appear on time and in full size. Important material is being held over. The Manifesto of the International Left Opposition to the World Anti-Fascist Congress; material on the Four Power Pact, translated from Unser Wort, the illegal organ of the German Left Opposition; and many other important features cannot see the light because of the pressure of space.

Solve the contradiction! No more two-pagers! And every issue out on time! Air mail! Wire funds! To the MILITANT, 126 East 16th Street, New York City.

Progressive Miners Decisive Mass Support of Marxist Wing

Because of lack of space we are printing only a sketchy news report of the Chicago Mooney Congress in this issue. A full report by comrade Grotzer, an analysis of the great battle fought by the Left Opposition on the floor of the Congress by comrade Cannon, a series of illuminating paragraphs by comrade Oehler and the resolutions adopted at the Congress will appear in the next issue.

The outstanding mass organization present was far and away the Progressive Miners of America whose delegation was headed by comrade Alford. These delegates represented the crystallized left wing in the P.M.A., that is to say, the most advanced section of the American trade unions. Their influence counted heavily against the ever-weaker attempts of the Stalinists to sew up the united front conference with their routine, machine control, directed, in the first instance, against the Left Opposition. The P.M.A. delegation threw its weight into the scale against the Stalinists to elect comrade Cannon to the Resolutions Committee. And upon its demand comrade Cannon was elected to the Permanent National Committee.

The C.I. Retraces Steps 'New Deal' Diplomacy May 1 Manifesto Returns to "United Front From Below" Washington Parleys Prepare New World Conflict

There is no end to the crimes of Stalinism. Those serious Communist workers who have hoped that the heavy blows of Fascism in Germany might have served to give conclusive warning to the Comintern bureaucracy and to bring about a fundamental change of line, must have been overcome with dizziness by the newest crime of Stalinism. We refer to the entirely unexpected and breathtaking reversion to the infamous "united front from below" in the manifesto issued by the Communist International on the occasion of May Day and printed in a special Sunday edition of the Daily Worker on April 30.

Only six weeks before, the Communist International had issued a resolution, first published in the Manifesto of Paris on March 6, instructing the various parties to approach the Central Committees of the socialist parties and trade union centers in their respective countries, for united front negotiations and at that, to refrain from attacking the latter in the course of the united front activities.

The practical change of line that resulted brought a swing to the ultra-right which necessitated a warning on the part of the Left Opposition against new opportunistic excesses on the style of the discredited bloc with Chiang-Kai-Shek and the Anglo-Russian Committee. In the United States too, this turn toward opportunism became increasingly evident and at the various Mooney-Scottsboro and May Day conferences and committee meetings, the representatives of the Left Opposition had as their main task, the struggle against opportunistic distortions of the united front by the Stalinists. That was before April 30.

"New . . . Not Negotiations"

On April 30, the C. I. May Day manifesto, printed in the Daily Worker, not only has no word to say any longer about approaching the Central Committees of the reformists or against attacking them. It tells us in so many words: "Now we need United Front from below, not negotiations with top leaders!"

The reason? "For the leaders of the Second International, negotiations with officials on delay, hindering, and disrupting the united front of the working class."

The worker in the street cannot help being amazed by this lightning-quick swerve to the former, ruinous policy. The Communist worker can hardly believe his eyes. For years he had been breathing and talking "united front from below". On March 6, his International leaders tell him, now we must approach the top leaders (the Central Committees). A little bit confused, but as a disciplined comrade, the Communist functionary approaches the Central Committees of the S.P. and the A.F. of L.

Some go even so far as to let socialist speakers go unretired, without distinguishing themselves from their reformist jabbering. Some go to the extent of even distributing the socialist press from Communist platforms. (Witness

The series of conversations in Washington, intended to prepare for the international economic conference in London on June 12, between Roosevelt and MacDonald, Herriot, Jung, Bennett and others, were supposed to lay the foundations for an international understanding based on good-will and mutual cooperation. The avowed purpose was to prepare for the abolition or reduction of tariff barriers and other hindrances to international trade, to stabilize the currencies of the world, and to raise the level of international prices. There was even a suggestion of extending the "new deal" of peace and brotherliness to include the preparation for a real disarmament conference.

All these illusions were shattered even before the first of the conferences, MacDonald, set foot on dry land. The decision of Roosevelt to impose a gold embargo, precipitated a sudden depreciation of the dollar in the foreign exchange market, strengthening the ability of American capital to compete on foreign markets in the export of goods, at the same time as it weakened the ability of American finance capital to finance the export of capital. It amounted virtually to a declaration of financial war against Great Britain and France, by the ruthless assertion of the right of American capitalism to deal with its problems in its own way without regard to the pretense of an international understanding.

The British counter-attack was not long in coming. Two blows were struck — a trade agreement with Argentina which favored the export of British goods in competition with those of the United States, and the announcement that the British fund, for the manipulation of foreign exchange against the manipulations of Roosevelt, would be doubled.

The insincerity of the official declarations of the purposes of the conference had, of course, been made clear long before this by the fact that Soviet Russia, one of the largest buyers and sellers of goods on the earth, had not been invited to participate.

But if the Washington conference and the international conference to be held in London are not the purpose which they are officially supposed to have, that is far from meaning that they have no purpose at all.

On the contrary, the terrible pressure of the crisis has forced the antagonists between and among the imperialist powers into a more critical stage. Capitalism, organized nationally, cannot organize its contradictions peacefully on the international scale.

It was proposed, for instance, by some bourgeois economists to pool the world's central banking gold reserves in one place, such as the Bank for International Settlements in Basle, and issue an international currency against it. This immediately raises the question of who would protect the gold. There is no political organization corresponding to such an economic task.

The "Daily Worker" and the Defense of the Russian Bolshevik Leninists

Due to technical difficulties, we had to hold up the publication of the following letter till the present issue. It is a reply to the Daily Worker's slanderous attack upon the American Committee of Help to the Russian Bolsheviks (Left Opposition), sent to the press by its secretary.—Ed.

April 26, 1933.
To the Editor of the Daily Worker, Comrade Editor,
The Daily Worker of April 25th, under the heading "Norman Thomas Sympathizes with British Spies" carries an editorial describing our committee and characterizing its efforts. It describes this committee as "a group of renegades and adventurers who set up a special organization, the career of which is dedicated to calumniating the Soviet Union," and as "the American branch of an international organization headed by Trotsky who in all his actions lives up to the characterization of Comrade Stalin as leader of the advance-guard of counter-revolution." The rest of the article is mostly taken up with a vicious and slanderous attack on Sidney Hook, and other members of the committee. Nowhere, of course, is there the slightest attempt to show any connection with either Norman Thomas or the British spies.

We consider it necessary, first, to state our own position, and second, to expose the two fundamentally false statements quoted above: that the tried and tested Bolsheviks whom we are trying to save from hunger and privation are a gang of counter-revolutionaries, and that we are calumniating the Soviet Union by pointing to the harsh conditions of life in all strata of the population in the Soviet Union, and particularly to the imprisoned and deported Bolsheviks of the Left Opposition.

We are not conducting a general humanitarian appeal for men in distress, nor on the other hand are we appealing only to those who accept the principles of the Left Opposition. Most of the members of our committee are not members of the Left Opposition. We appeal to all friends of the October Revolution to help save from actual physical extermination, a group of fighters who have been in the forefront of the revolution in the Bolshevik camp, for the sake of what they have done and what they can do for the revolution. We have received unimpeachable evidence of the frightful conditions under which these men are suffering, and the recent removal of Bakovsky to a distant point in northern Siberia, the deaths of D. B. Riazanov and of V. Smirnov in exile, confirm our fears that the physical existence of these men is in danger. We have a right to ask that all friends of the October Revolution, for the sake of the revolution, help us keep these men alive.

And in fact, so far most of our contributions have come from members and sympathizers of the Communist Party.

It is charged that these men are counter-revolutionaries. Well, anyone who claims to be a Marxist come forward with one single Marxist reason why hundreds and thousands of revolutionary fighters, who have gone through the Czarist terror, through exile and prison, through the civil war and the famine, should have gone over to the counter-revolution precisely when the socialist revolution is achieving great triumphs, in spite of all mistakes and difficulties? It is not a question of one individual or a handful, but of thousands, of an essential part of the cadres of the revolution. Is any Marxist satisfied with such a vulgar bourgeois "psychological" explanation as the "reason" of one individual, as the "egotism" of thousands of the Russian Bolshevik cadres of yesterday were transformed into counter-revolutionaries? And on top of tremendous victories and successes of the dictatorship, at that?

That those victories and suc-

Martial Law Reigns in Farm Area, Prepare for National Grain Strike

Fifteen hundred farmers, assembled at a convention of the National Holiday Association in Des Moines, Iowa, have voted drastically to relieve their misery and to save off the attack of the bankers and the government in their much-flaunted but highly deceptive "reorganization" schemes. The shadow of the stirring anti-foreclosure battles at Lemars, Denison and other centers of the farm fight area, the convention went way above the head of the hen-livered organizers and leaders in the militant sentiment of the farmers.

A. C. Townsend, the National Partisan League organizer, warned the farmers that they were being forced into "bloody revolution". "Let her come," somebody shouted and the shout was greeted with loud cheers. The convention adopted the proposal for a grain strike to be begun May 13 and to sweep over no less than thirteen of the decisive agricultural states.

Several days before, 600 farmers, protesting against attempts of insurance companies and banks to foreclose mortgages, dragged Judge C. C. Bradley from his courtroom in Lemars, Iowa, when he refused to swear he would sign no more mortgage foreclosures. The judge was released only after he had been roughly handled by the enraged men. In Denison, the farmers, 600 deputies and prevented them from selling the farm of J. F. Shields. More than 13 counties in northern Iowa are affected by this wave of struggle.

The financiers, the American Legion, the pulpits have all risen en masse against the embattled farmers and the national guard has been sent into action. Martial law has been proclaimed by Governor Clyde Herriag in Plymouth County where the farmers are most active. The civil courts in the same county have been suspended and court martial substituted. It is reported that many will be tried on charges of criminal syndicalism.

A bill against foreclosures, which was passed recently by the Iowa General Assembly, has been declared unconstitutional by the District Court and this decision is being used as the basis for further foreclosures and sheriff's sales under the guard of troops. The cry of "Red agitation" has been raised in the effort to scare the farmers and to justify the measures against them.

The wave of militancy on the farms is all the more noteworthy since it shows that the farmers are not being taken in by the hullabaloo about Roosevelt's "New Deal". The struggle is going on in spite of the administration measures, especially the so-called "controlled inflation", which is supposed to aid in the solution of the agrarian crisis. The rebellion of the farmers can and should be co-ordinated with the movement of the workers against the Roosevelt program which will further depress the living conditions of the city toilers.

To expect the farmers, in their location, to carry the fight through to the end or to expect them to give the lead in a mass revolt against the attacks of capitalism is mere utopia. The farmers can and will fight against capitalism only under the leadership of the working class and its revolutionary party.

The need of the moment is a national working class movement to fight against impending inflation wage cuts, a national organization which will get contact with the broad movement of the farmers and conclude fighting agreements with it. For that, it is necessary for the Communist party to creep out of its sectarian ground-hole and take the lead. The main task is to rally the workers for united action. Under the leadership of a united working class, the fighting alliance of the proletariat and the farmers can open up dreamed of vistas of successful action.

The roll call: from St. Louis—representatives of 3,000 in the local united front Mooney conference; from Minneapolis—representatives of 5,000 workers in the Teamsters Union; from Los Angeles—a representative of 5,000 workers in the Los Angeles Unemployed League; and, of course, the representatives from the Gillespie Trade Union Conference and Progressive Miners of America—30,000 workers.

As the Congress proceeded the decisive weight of our delegation made itself felt. Other forces were attracted to our banner. Left Socialist, Yipsel, United Workers Party, I.W.W. and other P.M.A. delegates voted with us on various questions. On our minority-report amendment to the main resolution we mustered the largest minority vote of the Congress.

The Stalinist steering committee attempted once again to reel off a hollow masquerade for a united front. Once more the Marxist wing of the movement raised its voice for a serious consideration of policy and program. Fighting tooth and nail we carried the day. We quote from comrade Oehler's notes:

"Until the afternoon of the third day the conference was, in the main, just one long mass meeting. In fact, the Stalinists intended to call off the third day's session to enable them to carry on two days of mass meetings, to wind up with the big May Day Stadium mass meeting and end up the conference by passing a manifesto bursting with propaganda, but void of a concrete program of action. At the end of the first day the mass protest of the delegates prevented the change in plans, caused the Stalinists to retreat and continue with the three-day session. On the second day they forced the election of a Resolutions Committee, a committee the party 'forgot about' while they kept everybody entertained with propaganda speeches but nothing substantial on policy and program."

We can sum up our participation

C.I. Retraces Steps in May Day Manifesto

the case of the demonstration against the Hitler-Birthday Celebration in Teutonia Hall, New York. See the Militant of April 29).

Now, in the May Day Manifesto, the International leaders once more tell him: "Now we need United Front from below, not negotiations with top leaders!" Can the Communist worker help bring about this? Can this latest step do anything but increase the confusion in the Communist ranks? Can such people, who change their policies with the weather, expect to maintain their authority or even to be taken seriously at all?

What Will Be the Consequences?

The revolutionary movement is not a game of leap frog and no matter how deeply the disease of bureaucratic centrism, of unexplained commands from above may have penetrated into the ranks of the Communist party, the Communist worker cannot go on switching his line of march with such fierce twists indefinitely. The laws of friction have their function in politics as well. And any one of these numerous Stalinist turnabouts, without explanation and without previous preparation, must finally serve as the straw that breaks the camel's back.

The bureaucratic reversion to the "united front from below"—if, in its aim to cover up the bankruptcy of the whole previous Stalinist "third period" course, it does not stop with the mere mouthing of phrases in manifestos—is bound to call forth a violent reaction within the ranks of the party. Many responsible and serious comrades breathed a breath of relief when the March 6, C.I. resolution cleared the road for actual progress in mass united front actions.

The Leninist united front tactic applied to the American socialists in the Mooney and May Day conferences and actions has thrown the reformist party into convulsions and brought about successful and concrete results.

The question of the united front has sharpened the internal conflict within the S.P. tremendously and the treacherous, die-hard stand of the Hilquit faction has served to increase the Left wing trend within it.

The whole Chicago district of the S.P. and other numerous Y.P.S.L. locals have been expelled by the Hilquit clique on the very issue of the united front with the Communists, which the former have carried through in several localities.

The powerful May Day demonstrations and the healthy reactions of the socialist workers to them were in themselves the best vindication for the Leninist united front tactic. And all this has taken place within the brief period of the six weeks, in which the C.I. had given up the blunders of the "united front from below".

The responsible party comrades could not have overlooked all these developments and could not have missed their significance. The Stalinist bureaucrat will have a difficult time explaining to him what it is that prevented the leaders of the Second International from using "negotiations with officials on top" as "merely a method of delaying, hindering and disrupting the united front" on March 6 and why this suddenly becomes a fact only on April 30.

The serious Communist workers will reply to the bureaucrats and say to them: We know very well that the socialist leaders will attempt to delay, hinder and disrupt the united front of the working class. They always have.

What the Serious Communist Workers Will Say

We also know that the masses of reformist workers do want united actions. They have shown it on May Day, they have shown it by their struggle against the disrupting leaders inside their own ranks.

We can see, furthermore, the process of swift disintegration that is overtaking the Second International after the collapse of the German social democracy and the impending debacle of "Austro-Marxism". The reformist fakers have already begun to be alarmed and it is to be expected that in the future they will especially exert themselves with shouting for working class unity and for united action in the future.

The socialist masses are moving to the Left and the socialist misleaders will use every possible "Left" ruse to maintain their control of them. The task of exposing the reformist betrayers and of loosening their control of the masses that follow them is all the more urgent in this especially favorable situation.

The Leninist united front tactic, therefore, holds all its force as the only method of fulfilling the revolutionary task of the moment. It is our duty to apply it. We have no interest in replenishing the shattering prestige of the bankrupt Stalinist bureaucracy. Our interests coincide with the needs of the revolutionary working class.

The Left Opposition will continue its work of explanation and clarification and fed common ground with Communist workers on this basis. Together with them and in merciless struggle against criminal Stalinism, it will help in re-establishing the Marxist party of the international proletariat.

—S. GORDON.

Mooney Meet

tion in the Congress in the words of Cannon: "the greatest by-far-advance we have yet made in establishing our identity and prestige in the united front movement." The Left Opposition will not rest with that. Mooney is still in jail. Much remains to be done. The movement must rise to greater heights. And with it will rise the star of the Left Opposition.

The Congress was a smashing reply to the sabotage and disruption of the Socialist Party leadership. It is true that they held back large sections of the workers from participation in the Congress. But the Congress itself is an excellent take-off to overcome the division of the workers and unite the ranks for Mooney's release.

That depends on the further application of the correct united front tactic. We are striving with might and main to hold the party to the correct line. The Stalinists are swinging far to the right. The policy they pursue will be a result of their opportunism and the correct Leninist policy of the L. O.

It will be an uneven policy. Here it will be weak, there strong, depending on the strength of the Left Opposition.

The May Day Manifesto of the C. I. can affect this struggle only adversely. If the party attempts to revert to the united front, from below as the C.I. demands, the good work done so far in the Mooney movement — and not only in the Mooney movement — will be wrecked.

This must not happen. We do not believe that the party rank and file which has seen with its own eyes how fruitful the united front tactic can be for the movement and Communism will permit the C.I. bureaucrats and their cablegram appointees to ram this down their throats. The party members must take a definite stand against this new "turn" and press hard to retain what we have won at such great cost.

The Left Opposition will continue to fight for a correct united front tactic. Only with the use of this instrument can we build the movement to free Tom Mooney.

Washington Conversations Prepare the Ground for New World Conflicts

On the contrary, as the nation, the political expression of imperialism, has assumed increasingly heavy tasks (deeper intervention into economic affairs, tariffs, subsidies, government financing of private corporations, etc.) the international political organization of capital, the League of Nations, has increasingly proved its impotence (note especially the Japanese occupation of Manchuria in relation to the policy of the League of Nations).

The struggle for world markets, carried to a higher point by the force of the crisis, is being met with a series of proposals, constituting the program of the economic conference of London, which amount to a restoration of the "free market" of the Manchester liberals. At the same time it is proposed by government action, that is, by the negation of the free market, to stabilize currencies and raise world prices.

Nor are these aims separate and distinct. The contradiction cannot be solved even by attacking it part by part, one problem at a time. The connection of currency stabilization with the struggle for markets has been amply shown by Roosevelt's action on the gold embargo and by Great Britain's counter-attack. The connection between the international price level and the international movement of commodities is equally close; the purpose of the manipulation of trade barriers and wage levels has been to maintain as high a level of prices internally as possible, while at the same time exporting competitively as much as possible and thus breaking down the international price level.

Basic Conflict: Anglo-American Interests

The forthcoming economic conference, prepared for by the conversations at Washington, will therefore be a battleground of conflicting imperialist interests. The basic conflict between the United States and Great Britain, which has already blazed out in the preliminary skirmishes centering around the gold standard and the Argentine market, will be moved to another international arena. Appropriately enough, after Washington comes London.

It is entirely probable that agreements of a technical character may be reached as to currency regulation, perhaps even as to certain details of trade restriction. These will not minimize the conflict of imperialist interests, but on the contrary prepare the ground for it.

Monopoly capital will not voluntarily abdicate, through international agreement, the specific advantages which it derives from its control of the national State. Nor will it create any international political authority which can decide from above on such questions of life or death as the struggle for markets. The only kind of international agreement which is possible is that which is imposed by a victorious nation, or bloc of nations, on a defeated enemy bloc; in other words, the Treaty of Versailles on a still further enlarged scale. By exhausting the alternative possibilities of rather impossibilities of peaceful agreement, as well as by opening up the direct economic and

SHAW AND STALIN

George Bernard Shaw, the patron saint of Russia and the man who read Marx before Lenin, is no ordinary person. No indeed! With-out attempting to analyze the peculiarities of the Fabian mind, it is illuminating to point out the tendentious similarity of ideas which exists between one of the authors of Shavian Socialism and the theoretical exponent of socialism in one country.

In his speech a few weeks ago, Shaw, emphasizing the inadvisability of applying Marx's doctrines to England or Russia (he didn't say whether they were or any country) extolled the virtues of Stalin because he had deleted Marx. Shaw mentioned that at the time the Labor party was organized in England they knew about Marx and German Socialism, but when it was brought before the English public there was not a single word about Marx in it. He simply forgot to mention the fact that Marx, in studying the development of capitalism, used not Germany for his experimental work but England. His monumental achievement, Das Kapital, concerns itself chiefly with the growth of capitalism in England. Why then did the leaders of the Labor party find it inadvisable to apply Marx's conclusions to the very country from which they were drawn? The shameful betrayals of the English proletariat are no accidents. They are only the by-products of a consistent policy laid down at the very outset.

Yet this host disciple of Marx finds his counterpart in the best disciples of Lenin. Stalin is a great leader, he says, because he is a nationalist. All the mistakes made by the other Communists (presumably he means Lenin and Trotsky, although no names are mentioned) were due primarily to a Marxian policy. From this line of reasoning it follows that the October revolution was a mistake, a defeat; while the nationalist policy of Stalin which brought ruin to the Chinese and German revolutions was no mistake but a great victory. It is only necessary to ask, for whom? The Stalinists, long before Shaw discovered them, also knew how to call a defeat a victory. The infallibility of the leadership is preserved, even with the aid of Bernard Shaw. This mountebank has the temerity to say that Stalin has been successful in his policies.

As for America, Shaw advises us to scrap our constitution. But how? Not a word about this. Unquestionably he would prefer to have us throw overboard not a Hefline but an anchor, since it makes no difference to him whether we use Marxism or Stalinism. However, in this all important matter the Left Opposition will eventually prove to the American working class, as well as the world proletariat, that this can only be done under the banner of Marxism.

coses are incomplete and in part even contradictory, must not only be admitted but emphasized, in considering the situation of the imprisoned and deported Bolsheviks of the Left Opposition. Where do we get the idea that there is a shortage of food and manufactured goods in the Soviet Union, that the production of many branches is unsatisfactory in quality and quantity, that many areas which had been prepared for sowing this spring are suffering from a shortage of seed? From the official publications of the Soviet Government, of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, and of its organizations from Pravda, Isvestia, Economic Life and the rest? Do these facts constitute counter-revolutionary calumny when Pravda and Isvestia print them, or only when someone else prints them, accepts them, or draws the necessary conclusions from them?

The Daily Worker, in the same issue as it denounces our committee for "calumniating the Soviet Union," writes in the same tone and in part using the same figures as the optimistic article of the "Ignorant" and "misleading" bourgeois correspondent of the New York Times, Walter Duranty (see Daily Worker of May 3), on the increased area of spring sowing. It has consistently concealed the difficulties and dangers of the economic situation in the Soviet Union. Is that supposed to be Leninist policy? Has the Daily Worker any excuse for denouncing the appeal of this committee as "calumny of the Soviet Union" merely on the ground that it points to the real difficulties and dangers of the present crisis in the Soviet Union, as affecting the situation of the deported and imprisoned Left Oppositionists?

Evidently the childish argument is implied, that whoever tells an "unfavorable" truth about the Soviet Union is "objectively" aiding the counter-revolution. And Pravda? And Isvestia? Does anyone think that the real counter-revolutionists are not fully informed of the real situation in the Soviet Union, its strength as well as its weakness, and have to wait for us to tell them about it?

No—it is obvious that the whole editorial is nothing but a piece of political blackmail and ideological terrorism, intended to turn away support from our appeal by threatening open attack and veiled insinuations against those who realize, as we do, the urgent necessity of preserving the physical existence of thousands of tested revolutionaries who collectively constitute an enormous reservoir of revolutionary energy and experience. Such writing is a disgrace and a scandal to the Communist movement. Our answer is to rebuke our efforts to relieve the desperate situation of the imprisoned and deported Bolsheviks of the Left Opposition in the Soviet Union, and to call on all friends of the October Revolution to assist us.

can replace the perspective of long months or civil war? Of course, they have replaced it. A few weeks, even days have destroyed completely the possibility of that more favorable variant on which we counted. Hitler seized the material apparatus of power. He routed without the least resistance the apparatus of the Communist party, deprived the German workers of the press, forced the reformists to break with the Second International and to submit to the Fascist regime.

A United Front Now?

The sharp change in the situation is clearly revealed in the question of the united front. To propose a united front in Germany between the two parties now would be doctrinaire stupidity. There was a period when the social democratic apparatus found itself under the yoke of advancing Fascism on one side and the pressure of its own masses on the other—that time should have been utilized. Now, after the defeat, the social democracy licks the boots of Hitler and sees in that the only means for its salvation. If two years ago Breitscheid considered it necessary to scare the bourgeoisie by a bloc with Communists, now Wels and Co. are interested in receding demonstratively not only from the Communists but from the Second International itself.

The proposal of a united front now would only place the Communist C. P. G. in a ridiculous position and would be of service to the social democratic party administration. Politics knows no absolute formulas. Its slogans are concrete, that is, timed to definite circumstances. (What has been said above does not, of course, exclude, even today, agreements between the Communist and the social democratic organizations in the enterprises, in the districts, etc., as well as agreements with other Left wing groups which will inevitably break off from the official social democracy).

The German Workers Will Rise Again; Stalinism Never!

The average German worker as well as the average Communist feels like a traveler who has suffered shipwreck. His organizations, press, his hopes for a better future—all are drowned in the waves of Fascism. The thoughts of the shipwrecked are directed not toward building a new ship but toward getting shelter and a piece of bread. A depressed spirit and political indifference are the inevitable consequences of such gigantic catastrophes. But the political awakening of the more enduring, of the firm, and courageous will inevitably be tied up with the thought of a new ship.

As characterizing the present situation in which the deepest layers of the German proletariat find themselves, I consider most important the report that in the majority of enterprises the old shop committees have been ousted and replaced by cells of Nazis. This "reform" passed so quietly that the foreign press did not even reflect it. But this is not a matter of the editorial board of a newspaper, or of the Liebknecht House, or even of a parliamentary faction, that is, it is not a matter of distant heights, but of the very base in production of the proletariat—the shop. The lack of resistance against the ousting of shop committees denotes an acute paralysis of the will of the masses under the influence of treachery and sabotage

The Isolation of the Apparatus

The Communist party has gathered during the last years up to six million votes. Into the struggle it did not draw even one hundred thousand. Even the members of the party did not respond to the appeals of the C. P. G. This fact alone indicates the frightful isolation of the apparatus. With each day this isolation will grow. The masses are not interested in shadings and trifles. They take events in toto. The masses will inevitably turn their backs to the party which quailed their anxiety with empty formulas, with boasts of the victories of tomorrow and led headlong to a catastrophe.

The situation of the German Communist Party changed so radically within the two or three weeks of March as in "normal", "peaceful" times it could not have changed in two decades. The imperialist epoch in general, is an epoch of sharp turns. One must learn to follow them attentively so as not to trip and crack one's head. We must not delude ourselves, we must give ourselves a full account of the extent of the catastrophe—of course, not to become tearfully downcast, but to start according to a new plan, the long and stubborn work required on a new historic base.

Nearly all those opposing, object to the comparison of August 4th, 1914 with March 5th, 1933: the social democrats, you see, betrayed the proletariat consciously and by that came nearer to the seats of power; the Stalinists, however, "did not know" how to defend the proletariat and landed in jails. This difference is, of course, very essential and not accidental. But we don't have to exaggerate its political significance. In the first place, the majority of the social democracy even in 1914 wanted, not to carve out a career, but to "save" the proletarian organizations, just as the leaders of the German Communist Party, blind to the commands of the Moscow bureaucracy, think first of all of their apparatus. Secondly, if in 1914 the social democracy came nearer to the seats of power, yet in 1933, despite all its baseness and degradation, it came nearer to jails. We need not doubt that in the end it will be crushed and will yet have its Mattoties; but does this change our general estimate of reformist policy?

We condemn the apparatus of the German Communist Party not for "stupidity" or "inability" (as certain comrades express themselves absolutely incorrectly) but for bureaucratic centrism. It is a matter of a certain political current, which bases itself on a definite social strata, first of all in the USSR, and adopts its policy to the needs of this stratum. Until the latest events, the question of what factor would win out in the German Communist Party—the interests of the Stalinist bureaucracy, or the logic of the class struggle, remained open. Now the question is completely answered. If events of such gigantic import could not correct the policy of the German Communist Party, it means that bureaucratic centrism is absolutely hopeless. And from this follows the need of a new party.

The Argument of the "International Scale"

But the question is solved on an international scale, object the opponents who turn a correct historic thought into a super historic abstraction. The question of the victory of the proletariat—also solved on an international scale. This does not prevent the proletariat of Russia, which attained its victory in 1917 from still waiting for the victory in other countries. And the opposite process can also develop unevenly: while the official German Communist Party is liquidated politically, in other countries, and primarily in the USSR, the party has not yet been subjected to a decisive test. Historic events unfold themselves, irrespective of the chess board of the Comintern.

But the Comintern bears the responsibility for the German defeat? Absolutely true. In the court of history, however, just as in an ordinary bourgeois court, not the one who bears the principal responsibility is found liable, but the one who has been caught. Now, alas, the apparatus of the German Communist Party has been caught between the tongs of history. The distribution of punishment is really "unjust". But justice in general is not an attribute of the historic process. And there is no appeal from it.

However, let us not slander the court of history: it is much more serious than the bourgeois court. The liquidation of the German Communist Party is only a stage. It will not stop there. If other sections of the Comintern will learn the German lesson they may rightfully deserve leniency of history. Otherwise they are doomed. In this way, the march of history gives to the other sections still some additional time to reconsider. We, the Left Opposition, are only the historic interpreters of the march of development. That is why we do not break with the Third International.

Gala Affair

An exceptional evening of artistic entertainment has been arranged by the International Workers School for its gala benefit program to be held next Saturday evening, May 13, at 8:15 p.m. at the Town Hall, 43rd Street and 6th Avenue.

Maria Theresa, of the original Isadora Duncan group, will appear in three groups of dance numbers to music by Chopin. Her style represents the most authentic interpretation of the classical dance with which she has been associated for years by all lovers of the dance.

Diego Rivera is not only the greatest mural artist of this generation, but has won a unique position as a speaker on art from the proletarian viewpoint. To the interest always aroused by his appearance as a speaker is added the fact that his subject will be the work which he is now in process of completing at Radio City, which has aroused such wide-spread discussion; to top it all, for the first time in America he will deliver a chalk talk to illustrate his lecture. Maria Wineska is an established reputation both in the opera-houses of this country and abroad, and as a singer of folk songs. Her rich and powerful voice and her sympathetic understanding will contribute to make the evening one to be long remembered.

Albert Meiff taught violin playing, in association with Effrem Zimbalist, at one of the premier musical conservatories of the world, the Curtis Institute of Music, for five years. His playing is both brilliant and solid, and will have a sure appeal for all music-lovers.

Tickets are priced at 35 cents, 50 cents, 75 cents and $1.00, box seats $2.00, and are available at the International Workers School, 126 E. 16th Street, as well as the Town Hall box office.

In view of its extraordinarily high level and diversity, as well as the cause which it represents, this entertainment program not only deserves but will richly reward the fullest support.

May Day Throughout the World

May 1st was a red letter day for the revolutionary working class of New York. With a militant spirit running high, with the determined slogans of Free Tom Mooney and the Scottsboro Boys from the capitalist frame-up dungeons, and jeers and hoots for the bloody rule of Hitler rising loud above the din of New York traffic, more than 100,000 working men and women marched and demonstrated under the red banner of proletarian revolt. This demonstration marks a milestone in the proletarian struggle for emancipation. It was one of the largest and most enthusiastic turnouts seen on the streets of New York for years.

The efforts of the leaders of the S.P. to break the unity of the revolutionary forces on May Day and their shameful collusion with the police did not succeed in dampening the ardor of the demonstrators nor stopping the powerful impulsion towards a common front of struggle on May Day. The salutary and perspicacious act of Carl Winters in calling upon the Socialist workers not to leave the Square after their demonstration had concluded, but to wait for the United Front demonstration that was beginning to march in, and the cheers that greeted him in face of the provocation of the police proved again the dynamic power of the Leninist united front policy and the innate possibilities inherent in it.

Both the strength and the weakness of the party were brought to light on May 1st. The May Day demonstration showed what reserves of sympathy are latent in the working class for Communism, but the inability of the party to mobilize these masses in its every day struggles, to rally them in the factories and the trade unions, to integrate them in the party is striking testimony to the blinders and criminal course of Stalinism—proof of what a brake Bureaucratic Centrism is upon mass action and the growth of the Communist movement. On the other hand, it took only the most elementary application of the united front tactic to bring huge masses into the streets and to begin a movement of the socialist workers away from the morass of reformism and towards the camp of Communism. The continued and correct application of this tactic can create a serious dent in the ranks of the social-democracy. The latest zig-zag of the C.I. (described in another part of this issue) if accepted and carried out will arrest this process and throw the party back into the isolation from which it is beginning to emerge.

The Left Opposition, whose tactics and policies were vindicated again on May 1st, marched in the United Front parade under its own banners and slogans. More than 150 members and sympathizers of the N. Y. Branch of the Communist League (Opposition) formed one of the most militant contingents of the demonstration. From its ranks echoed the only real international slogans of the entire parade. Thousands of workers heard our shouts of "Long live the International of Lenin and Trotsky," and as we marched into Union Square, hundreds and thousands of party members and sympathizers cheered and applauded this slogan for the regeneration of the proletarian International. A great step forward for the Left Opposition! A new era opens before the vanguard of the Communist movement!

In Europe May Day passed under the sign of reaction and under the effects of the German defeat. May 1st in Paris, once the home of the Commune, was observed by poodles! No disorders and demonstrations, says the capitalist press. In Berlin the hideous swastika replaced the hammer and sickle, the plans of Hitler for a conscript, enslaved German working class, were masters of the day. The proletarian banner lay furled in the torture chambers and concentration camps of the bestial Brown shirrs. Vienna was silent as the grave as 8,000 troops guarded the streets. In this city, where practically every inhabitant is a member or sympathizer of the Socialist party, no demonstration took place. The bankruptcy of Stalinism and the treachery of social reformism is graphically illustrated by the pitiful showing made in the capitals of Europe, once the citadels of proletarian revolt.

Soviet Russia was the only bright spot amid these heavy clouds of reaction. The cries of solidarity of the Russian working class for their German brothers in the toils of Fascism should have been heard long ago but even these shouts transformed into concrete action can once again herald the dawn of a new day for the upsurge of the European proletariat. A new rise of internationalism means the doom of Stalinism but the upsurge of a Soviet Europe and a Soviet world.

The Foltis Fisher Strike

Lessons of Stalinist Blunder Policy in the F.W.I.U.

Jay Rubins article, "Striking a Cafeteria Chain," in the April issue of "Labor Unity" contains a number of misstatements and misleading impressions which might hamper the effectiveness of the Food Workers Industrial Union.

I. He says, "The membership and some of the leadership had little faith in the possibilities of the Foltis-Fisher workers. This lack of faith expressed itself clearly by the membership not participating actively in this work."

The fact is that it was not the membership, but the leadership, which failed for a long time to see the possibilities of the Foltis-Fisher workers. The Foltis-Fisher organizational drive was started early in 1932 on the initiative of a group of comrades in the Cafeteria Department of the F. W. I. U., and was carried out in accordance with a plan proposed by them. For a period of months these comrades had the greatest difficulty in convincing the leaders of the necessity of this work.

At the beginning, the office committee mechanically appointed two of the comrades who had proposed this plan to carry it out, without discussion or consultation with the membership. Then they put in charge of this work Comrade Obermeyer, who had already applied for a passport to the Soviet Union, and was, to the knowledge of the F.W.I.U. preparing to go to the Soviet Union in a short time.

Naturally, under these conditions, the work was carried on half-heartedly. An additional excuse was found in the fact that summer was coming on and that many of the members would go to work in summer camps. As a result, three months more were allowed to pass by without results. The work was completely dropped until the Fall, by which time Comrade Obermeyer had left for the Soviet Union, without leaving any responsible comrade in charge or any preparations for further work, or any explanation or justification of this negligence.

Naturally it would not be correct to blame this comrade for this action without placing the responsibility on the F.W.I.U. and the leadership of the union, where it belongs.

II. Comrade Rubins fails to point out that the tactical line followed in the handling of the strike was vacillating and opportunistic. He says, "The union exposed this move (making the workers buy shares—J.G.) on the part of Foltis as a means of breaking up the organization built by the workers, as well as a way of indirectly cutting the wages of the workers."

The Foltis-Fisher workers were very indignant at this move of Foltis, but the union utterly failed to utilize this indignation in an organizational manner, and particularly to point out to the workers that this was an indirect wage cut, and thus to help prepare the strike, and thus to help prepare the strike.

When the strike was called, the Central Strike Committee decided that it must be spread to all the stores in the chain, in a week's time. This meant a large distribution of leaflets, mass picket lines, demonstrations, and in general dramatizing the strike so as to bring it to the attention of the unorganized food workers.

Falling into a Trap
Instead of this, the leadership fell into the trap laid by the bosses, of fake negotiations for a settlement, in order to stall for time, and further demoralize the strikers. The only Foltis-Fisher stores which were struck were those where the F.W.I.U. groups had already been organized, meaning 8 shops out of 20, with about 100 workers, of whom not more than 50 percent participated in the strike activities from the beginning.

In spite of the decision of last year's Food Workers Conference to "turn the face of the union toward the shops," not a single general membership meeting of the F.W.I.U. has been called to mobilize support for the Foltis-Fisher organizational drive. Outside of a dozen or 14 members of the Cafeteria Department, there has been no support of this drive, as a result of the "separatism" which prevails today throughout the union. The heavy financial burden of taxation for this work has all fallen on the Cafeteria Department, contrary to the policy of the F.W.I.U.

In the face of these facts, how can Rubins talk about "the mass pressure developed by the union" which was supposed to have resulted in Judge Bondy's refusing the injunction?

He says, "The union, through the F.W.I.U. and the I.L.D., called a conference of the F.W.I.U. unions, together with the Civil Liberties Union, obtained a legal staff, and mobilized sentiment against such an order."

The writer had proposed a real united front conference with A.F. of L. unions, and mass political and fraternal organizations. This was rejected on the ground that "it was too soon for such a step."

Instead, this "office" conference was held, with the "social fascists" of yesterday and the liberals of today—but without the masses.

III. The strategy which grew out of this conference was purely legalistic and in fact opportunistic. They proposed to "fight" against the injunction by behaving like very good boys, and conducting their strike no differently than the A.F. of L. depending on legal arguments in the court-room, not mass pressure in the streets. They were violently opposed to action proposed by comrades for the purpose of bringing direct pressure on the company as a whole.

When Rubins says that the "bug-atoo of the contempt of court order was waved in the faces of the strikers," he forgets to mention that the leadership of the union was the first to weaken and capitulate before this bug-atoo.

IV. Why does Rubins cover up the real facts about the so-called "mass activity" and indulge in demagogic boasting about the effect of mass pressure on the injunction order? Only in order to contrast this "mass pressure," which did not exist, with the correct line developed by a number of comrades in the organization. These comrades took as their starting point the real nature of the cafeteria organization, the small number of workers per shop, and the small number of workers who were actually being drawn into the strike activities. Instead of a lot of wind about mass pressure, they proposed to exercise more concentrated pressure on the part of the limited number of strikers; particularly after their efforts to organize a real mass basis through a broad united front had been defeated by the sectarian line of the "office" conference.

Yet this same Rubins says, two sentences later, "The union is faced with certain peculiarities, as for instance, Foltis and its 19 stores employ 650 workers, spread from one corner of the city to another, and this requires very large forces to permit mass picket lines in front of the different stores. Though the need for mass action is very great, the distance between the stores makes it impossible (my emphasis—J.G.) both financially and physically to carry on mass picket lines."

But what conclusion does he draw from these admitted facts? That the comrades just mentioned were right? No—that they were "renegade Trotskyites!" What a shameful contradiction!

Doesn't Rubins realize the difference between the textile industry and the food industry, especially its cafeteria branch, from the standpoint of mass participation? Has he nothing more concrete to propose than "to rally sufficient forces behind the Foltis-Fisher workers? Any child realizes that. What we want is to draw the specific lessons from the whole history of the strike, so as to avoid similar mistakes in the future."

1. We must drop the kind of so-called "Bolshevik self-criticism" which consists in covering up the mistakes of the leadership and blaming everything on the membership. On the contrary, criticism of the leadership will be needed and will prove healthy in the future. An open admission of the weaknesses and mistakes of the leadership will go far to regain the confidence of the membership.

2. By doing this, the leadership must once for all, learn that when it begins an organizational drive it must be carried through consistently and at all costs. The method of changing the leadership by degrees has had much to do with the loss of confidence of which Rubins complains.

3. Opportunistic tactics must not be covered up by phrases about mass action, but must be exposed and eliminated.

4. A genuine united front conference must not be rejected in favor of fake "office" conference.

5. We must adopt the policy of dramatizing our strikes, as opposed to the A.F. of L. method of conducting a strike.

6. The line of certain comrades in the union who have been accused of "favoring individual acts" has proven to be correct, when the bourgeois press was compelled to break its complete silence on the strike and thus bring the question home to all food workers, and especially the Foltis-Fisher cafeteria workers. This was a little late so far as this particular strike was concerned, but it shows the right road for the future.

7. In conclusion, we must expose and eliminate certain right-wing capitulatory policies of the F.W.I.U. and particularly the Cafeteria Department, in the last six months. They have completely abandoned the principles and rules of the union by accepting wage cuts as high as 40 to 50 percent without explanation to the members, and under the slogan of "save the shops" have compromised the principles of the union, in the following way. When the boss does not like a worker because he is a good union man, the worker is sacrificed, thrown out of his job, and so actually eliminated from the union. This has happened in so many cases that it is a genuine threat to the future of the union and to the confidence of the members in the union.

If these lessons are fully learned and properly applied, the union has before it a great future in the revolutionary trade union movement, but it cannot go on as it has done in the past without paying the heaviest penalties in loss of growth and influence.

"Under the Leadership of General O'Ryan"

The logical consequence of the policy which led to the catastrophe in Germany by the rejection of the united front of workers organizations "under the leadership of Comrade Stalin" was poignantly depicted the other day. The official Communist party marched in the united front with Rabbi Wise and Judge Hofstadter at the Jewish anti-Nazi protest—"under the leadership of General O'Ryan," so to speak . . .

The Designs Behind the Four Power Pact

Nazi-Fascist Diplomacy and the U.S.S.R.

About a year ago, comrade Trotsky wrote an article for the New York magazine, The Forum, under the heading "Hitler's Victory Means War Against the U. S. S. R." (The magazine itself entitled the article "I See War With Germany"). It was reprinted in the Militant of July 16.—Ed.). This perspective has since been confirmed with surprising rapidity. To be sure, Hitler and Goering have declared that their struggle is directed against the enemy within their own country, and not against Russian Communism. But such declarations are very cheap. It is only necessary to recall that all the powers who participated in the World War assured each other up to the very last moment of their reciprocal friendship.

In reality, the world bourgeoisie is rather surprised by the facility and the lack of danger with which Hitler has succeeded in his task, that of clubbing down the working class for the bourgeoisie. And it is drawing the consequences therefrom. Up to the present, the world powers have been against German armaments, since they did not have any confidence in the "authoritarian governments" which did not possess any authority. They had no way of knowing whether the conquerors of Bonapartism would be the proletarian or not and whether the armaments granted to Germany would not be directed against the world bourgeoisie itself. On the other hand, they did not stake too much on Hitler, since the eventual outcome of the Fascist crusade against the working class and likewise uncertain. At present, however, the question has been decided. The counter-revolution has been victorious. It is possible to do business with it, without taking too much of a risk. The stocks of the armament industry are climbing to the skies. MacDonald visits Mussolini. The latter pulls a ready-made "peace pact" out of his pocket. In Germany, the first armored cruisers—approved at the time by the late S. P. G.—are leaving their docks. Only the Soviet politicians remain blind to all these coincidences. Thus Voroshilov declares in a salutary address to the Red Army on its 16th anniversary: in the West the Soviet Union is guarded by the non-aggression pacts, dangers threaten only from the East. Thus also, Prevedas recently declared itself satisfied with Hitler's hypocritical declaration with regard to his foreign policy.

What position does the Soviet Union take in general on the victory of the Fascist counter-revolution? We quote from the Pravda: "What is to follow? All the problems, which in the course of the last few months were posed so ominously before German capitalism, stand with the same force before the government of the Fascist dictatorship as well. Never in the post-war years has Germany been in such a weakened external political situation. In contradistinction to Italian Fascism, German Fascism came into power under the conditions of the conclusion of relative stabilization and the entrance of capitalism into its second chapter of revolutions and wars. A number of countries are taking measures for the weakening of the external political and economic position of Germany and for the limitation of German exports. The German mark is hanging on by a hair. The policy of the government is driving the country toward inflation. Prices for commodities of mass demand are mounting. Unemployment is not decreasing. The struggle between the National Socialists and the Nationalists is developing. The whole humdrum about the 'national revolution' is calculated to veil the impotence of the government when it comes to solving the 'curious problems' of German capitalism. The Fascist government does not even indicate a trace of a positive program. It is impossible to deceive classes. Lies and demagoguery cannot be converted into bread for the hungry. The clique of the capitalist magnates is again turning toward the social democracy which is to help Fascism in continuing the deception of the masses. The social democratic leaders are preparing to supplement the Fascist terror with the deception of the masses. But neither the Fascist terror, nor the treacherous maneuvers of the social democratic leaders are capable of restraining the rising wave of revolution in Germany."

The tremendous success of the Communist Party of Germany in its Bolshevik tactic lies in this: that it understood, in face of the terror, the provocations and the basic betrayal of the social democratic leaders, how to lead its forces out of the firing line, how to retrain its cadres and how to continue the struggle under new conditions.

"The ruling classes have gone mad. Their doings are turning everything in Germany on its head. They are completely denuding themselves, they are exposing before the broad masses the whole mechanism of Fascist domination. Thereby they are conducting millions of new fighters into the camp of revolution."

The theory of socialism in one country has built, in the minds of the Stalinist theoreticians, a fence around every nation, which it cannot trespass. It does not occur to these people at all that the Fascists cannot possibly wait until they are smothered within their own national framework, but will have to resort to the means of war, and war against the U. S. S. R. at that. It is hard to believe that the Stalinists are really so blind; in all probability they do not even want to see where they have landed with their theory. They are sitting at the wheel of an auto which is racing down a precipice at top speed, but they close their eyes and tell themselves that the road leads to the main thoroughfare.

Hitler, however, and all the other imperialist powers are forced to conduct war. The rise in the international contradictions and the contradictions between the powers themselves are becoming sharper with every new day. These contradictions must be brought out into the open. There is only one opponent which tightly interwoven international finance capitalism can come to an agreement to destroy—that is the Soviet Union. There are already in circulation, in the boulevards of the diplomats, the secret maps which pass from hand to hand, and upon which are inscribed the new boundaries in the East. It is a matter of dividing a sixth of the earth and the their appetite is tremendous.

First of all, article 5 of the treaty draft (of Mussolini) provides that the four powers—to which Poland, the Little Entente, Japan in the East and America, as protector of the whole project may join—attempt to follow a common line outside of Europe and in colonial affairs. Against whom? Such a European alliance can very well be directed also against the U. S. A. But all these states are dependent upon America, and Roosevelt, who feels the point of this alliance pressing up against himself, will attempt with all the greater energy to turn the whole alliance against the U. S. S. R. Europe will obey, that is indisputable. Furthermore, the American bankers are naturally counting upon calling great riches from such a war, since the American armament industry will be in a position to fill the orders of the whole world.

The powers, England, France, Germany and Italy are guaranteeing European peace. But who is it that threatens this peace? The Soviet Union does not even begin to think of starting a war. All the worse for her. The German Communists, too, did not think of begining the civil war, that is why the blow caught them unprepared. It is not our business to worry about who will next "put fire to some Reichstag." We can leave this to the Fascists. It will, indeed, be all the worse for the unsuspecting Soviet politicians when blow after blow rains down upon them unexpectedly. In the Far East, Japan is only waiting for a chance to grab for itself Vladivostok and Chinese Eastern Railway. At Japan's back there is, to be sure, a China. But this China is sick from the effects of the criminal Stalinist policies of the last seven years and is for the moment not to be reckoned with as a point of support for the Soviet Union. And in the West, Hitler is marching on the super-Wagner and at his side, Mussolini, Pilsudski, Horty and all the bigger butchers of dying capitalism. Capitalism is once more drawing up to its full height in order to smite the young world of socialism—which does, to be sure, bear within its body the English sickness of Stalinism—in order to rejuvenate itself in the blood of this young world. Here, too, the Stalinists have squandered all their reserves. The Communist parties of Western Europe have been laid in ruins by ten years of Stalinist policy in the Comintern.

The perspective is rather unfavorable, especially when we take into account the crisis in the Soviet Union as the most significant factor accelerating counter-revolution.

And yet, in such a war are latent tremendous, incalculable possibilities for the world revolution. On August 4, 1914 the Second International collapsed and on October 26, 1917 the Third began to unfold its power over one-sixth of the earth. The coming war will bring in its trail a complete dissolution of the state households of all the participating countries, will call forth a famine against which the misery of the last war will appear pale. Only the dictatorship of the proletariat will be able to lead the masses out of this misery.

Today it is necessary to call attention to the acute war danger and to mobilize the forces of the proletariat against the war. That can only be done by leading the proletariat in every one of the participating countries in the class struggle against its own bourgeoisie.

SCOTSB'RO

When the news that the president had refused to see the delegation reached the ears of the workers assembled outside the White House, a concerted boo echoed and reechoed throughout the entire Capital grounds. The bill was then presented to Speaker of the House, Rainey, to Vice-President Garner and to the Negro congressman from Illinois, Dr. Priest. These gentry of the Negro and White ruling class demagogically and cynically promised to give the bill its "due" attention. As the marchers were awaiting the answer of the president the police initiated a novel method of provocation by scurrying up and down the line on their motorcycles creating a raucous din and emitting volley after volley of carbon monoxide. But the provocation proved futile.

The marchers then assembled at a near-by park where they were addressed by William Patterson, of the L. I. D.; James W. Ford, Negro candidate for vice-president on the Communist party's ticket; Mother Wright, Ruby Bates, former star witness for the prosecution and now chief witness for the defense; and Clarence Hathaway who spoke in the name of the Communist Party. Patterson stressed the new keynote of the campaign to free the Scottsboro boys when he reiterated what the Militant had all along demanded, namely: "that no attorney of amount of attorneys will set these boys free—only mass struggle can accomplish that."

It was unfortunate that the United Front was not as broad as it should have been. But here the blame rests squarely with the leaders of the socialist party who have consistently sabotaged every attempt at a United Front offered them. The only two political organizations represented on the march outside of the Communist party, was the C.P.A. (Muste group) and the Opposition. [The C.P.A. just thrived in the reflected glory of participating in an action with Communists.

As for the political aspects of the demonstration, they will be dealt with in a future issue.

GLEE-ROSS

Young Workers Revolt Against "New Deal"

Working Class youth which entered the forestry conservation corps, deceived by the Roosevelt "new deal" propaganda, is in revolt. Already 371 of the Camp Dix contingent of 1,407 have quit. Forty-five of these are charged with inciting a revolt and 141 refused to take the special oath for forestry service. The rest left because of illness and discontent.

There is increasing reluctance among workingclass youth to further enlist in these thinly disguised concentration camps. In Nassau County only 213 of the allotted 805 jobs have been taken.

Almste was the Stalinists' "best bet" for a front because the club held for bargaining was none too big. Sad to say for the Stalinists, every time the delegates from the Progressive Miners were put on committees, they were able to exert such great pressure, due to the masses they represented, that they more than once upset the well laid plans of Stalinism and were a great factor in helping keep the Mooney Conference on the path of workers' democracy on the path of the correct united front, in general, helped keep the Stalinists within "civilized" bounds and helped round out a policy in order to build a powerful movement on this start. More power to the Left wing of the Progressive Miners of America.

Until the afternoon of the third day the conference was, in the main, just one long mass meeting. In fact, the Stalinists intended to call off the third-day session to enable them to carry on two days of mass meetings, to wind up with the big May Day Stadium mass meeting and end up the conference by passing a manifesto bursting with propaganda but void of a concrete program of action. At the end of the first day the mass protest of the delegates promoted the change in plans, caused the Stalinists to retreat, continue with a three-day session. On the second day, they forced the election of a Resolutions Committee, a committee the party "forgot about" while they kept everybody entertained with propaganda speeches but nothing substantial on policy and program. Instead of reporting at the beginning of the conference on policy and program, the delegates of the conference had to fight the Stalinists up to the afternoon of the last session before a report on resolutions and policy was given, and then the half day that was left was to be used by the more than fifteen hundred delegates to discuss the program.

Political Forces
Without a doubt, the two main political forces of the conference were the Stalinists and the Left Opposition. The Stalinists who have been exercising on us for the last several years up to a few months ago by kicking us out of conferences were forced to recognize us officially. The presiding committee was forced to nominate us for the Resolutions Committee. We were elected to the Permanent National Committee. We compelled the adoption of some important points of our policy.

This was not due to any change of heart by the Stalinists. It was due to the fact that the Left Opposition had a mass pressure great enough, in relation to the pressure of the Stalinist forces, to demand recognition. The Left Opposition had delegates from bona fide trade unions, unemployment organizations, defense committees, etc., that could not be ignored without ignoring a decisive section of the conference itself. For example, to ignore the large delegation from the Progressive Miners of America would have been to ignore the most important mass organization in the conference.

The Lovestone right wingers had a hard fight to obtain the right to the floor for even five minutes. Their floor tactics were terrible and their right wing policy was even worse. A clear line of difference on policy could be seen between them and the Left Opposition. The right wing had no pressure of importance relative to the pressure of the organized Stalinist caucus, while the Left Opposition had a pressure and policy that was able to make drastic inroads into the Stalinist original plans. On the other hand, with our pressure we were able to throw our force with the Stalinists on specific issues where they were in the main correct and thereby keep intact the unity of the conference as well as weaken the anti-Communist tendencies of the conference that the Stalinist blunders helped free. This is the correct function in a united front.

The Resolution
In the past the Stalinists had to be criticized from the right, because their united front from below was an ultra-left deviation. In this conference, where the united front of organizations replaced the old formula, we had to fight them from the left, because they deviated to the right of the Leninist concept. In the main resolution, they had a sentence stating that there would be no attacks on organizations participating in the united front. This is a non-aggression pact, no matter how one tries to explain it away. One must not confuse two different kinds of attacks, slander and criticism of policy. We presented a minority report on the main resolution stating the following: "Each organization entering the united front obligates itself to discipline in action but retains its complete independence and its right of criticism."

Scott, representative of the Molders Defense Committee said he wanted to safeguard the conference from communist control. This went over big with the anti-communist element. This position has nothing in common with the anti-Stalinist position of the Left Opposition.

Goldman, a delegate from Chicago, pointed out that the conference was a good start but too narrow, saying that over 75 percent was Left wing workers. Scott, who replied to Goldman's criticism on this and many other points made a poor job of it. He said on this point that Goldman objects to having a conference with 75 percent Left wingers. Goldman had pointed out that 75 percent of the conference was Left wing in order to show that we have been able to bring the Left wing element together in a united front but that we must now build up and around this Left wing a broad layer of other American workers.

Some members of the committee and most Stalinists cannot distinguish positive from destructive criticism.

THE ONLY ROAD

By LEON TROTSKY

The Only Road follows out the line of thought advanced by Trotsky in What Next and applies it, in a brilliant Marxist analysis, to the situation in Germany as it developed up to the period immediately preceding Hitler's accession to power.

The Only Road is an indispensable document for an understanding of the social forces at work in Europe. It throws the light of Marxist illumination on the roles of bourgeois democracy, Bonapartism and Fascism in the service of the capitalist repression of the working class.

It makes a damning indictment of the treacherous passivity of the social democracy which held back millions of workers from struggle against the advancing menace of Fascism. And it harshly condemns the criminal and capitulationist policies of the bureaucratic centrists in the Stalinist apparatus of the C. I. and the C. P. G.

Against these policies which, in their totality, betrayed the German working class to the butchery of Fascism is advanced the concrete analysis of the Left Opposition which, now, must assimilated be in order to lay the ground for the resurgence of the revolutionary movement.

Collapse of C.P.G. and Our Tasks

But how can we build a new party in Germany without breaking with the Comintern, rejoin the ones who, despite all, would like to force the contradictions of the historic process into the framework of the constitution. We must say that this side of the question seems to us least important. Why, even at the time when we were excluded from the Comintern and declared ourselves a faction thereof, the matter of the constitution was not of highest standing. For us it is a question of a political course, and not of the bookkeeping. If any section of the Comintern will get satisfied in rebuilding itself on a healthy basis, we will, of course, lean on this position to hasten the rebuilding of the whole Comintern; then our relations with the constitution also will become much improved. If, however, the Stalinist bureaucracy will bring the USSR to ruin, then no one will recall the constitution. It will be necessary to build a Fourth International.

Let us however return to Germany. In the first days of March the German Communist Party still meant a centralized apparatus, tens of newspapers, thousands of units, tens of thousands of members, millions of votes. This declared ourselves a party of this party and by that took a responsibility for the party as a whole before the outside world; of course, for the sake of the Stalinist apparatus but for the sake of the lower units connected with it. With their aid we hoped in time, that is, prior to a catastrophe, to renew the leadership of the party. Now, when the official apparatus, armored by ultimatum and illegality, must transform itself completely into a Stalinist agency, there can be no thought of influencing it through the lower strata from which it is completely cut off.

True, the Stalinist press of all the world talks of the "regeneration" of the German Communist Party underground (the illegal Rote Fahne, leaflets, etc., etc.) That the local organizations would start to stir after a temporary daze, was clear in advance. That the apparatus of such a large party, disposing of a numerous personnel and money, can issue illegality and semi-legality a considerable quantity of literature—there is nothing surprising in that. But we must repeat again: the German Communist Party has no illegal apparatus connected with the masses. What it has are the remains of the old organization which by the will of Hitler found themselves in an illegal state. This is not one and the same thing. If the German Communist Party is active today it is due to the fact that Hitler has just started his executioner's job and that the reaction has not penetrated deeply enough into the party. Both these processes however are on the order of the day. They will go parallel to each other, notwithstanding and accelerating each other.

For an illegal Communist party a special selection of people is necessary who understand the extent of the catastrophe and have a clear perspective and confidence in their banner. Such a selection can be made in no other way than on the basis of an irreconcilable criticism of the past. The collapse of the organization of the Stalinists, inevitable in itself, will release elements and clear the soil for the creation of an illegal revolutionary party.

But, one of the German comrades objects: politically the party is, of course, a corpse; organizationally it is alive. This formula reveals best of all the erroneousness of the position of my opponent. A party which is dead politically cannot have a "live" organization, since an organization is only a tool of policy. If however, the party is dead we must make the diagnosis openly, before the face of the workers, with all the necessary conclusions. What part of the old heritage will be transformed to the new party, what will be the terms of the transfer, what will be the stages in the development of the new party, what the relations between the builders and the remains of the old organization—all these are very important questions, which will have to be answered depending upon the development of the whole situation. But in order that the answer shall not be false, not illusory, we must start from what is irrevocably established by history: politically the Stalinist party is dead. Ambiguities and subtleties are impermissible: they would only throw us off our own path.

"The Party Dead—The Organization Alive?"

The same comrade writes: "The slogan of reform is meaningless, as we do not know now what and how to reform; but we are also against the slogan of a new party since we do not consider that the fate of the old party is finally decided." One contradiction is piled on top of another, despite the fact that the writer is an observant and keen comrade. If the party is "politically dead," that means that its fate is decided. The apparatus will not resuscitate it; as testified by experience, an apparatus can kill the living but not resuscitate the dead. If the slogan of reform of the old party is "meaningless," then nothing remains but the slogan of a new party.

The opponents are mainly frightened by the relation of forces: we, Bolshevik-Leninists, declare as liquidated a big organization which is still capable today of issuing ten times as much literature and spend a thousand times more money than we, and yet, we "proclaim" a new party in the name of the small Left

New Party is Only Marxian Policy

Opposition. To pose the question in this manner is to be steeped through and through in apparatus fetishism. Today, as yesterday, our main task is to form cadres. But this is not merely an organizational problem, it is a political problem; cadres are formed on the basis of a definite perspective. To warm up again the slogan of party reform means to set knowingly a utopian aim and by that to push our own cadres toward new and ever sharper disappointments. With such a course the Left Opposition would only become the hanger-on of a decomposing party and would disappear from the scene together with it.

Agreeing with the fact that the old party is liquidated and even admitting in essence the inevitability of creating a new party, one of the opponents strives for delay, for a moratorium of a kind. His arguments are of the following nature: only 10 percent of the party members, true, the most valuable ones, are critically inclined and listen to us; the remaining 90 percent and mainly the new recruits, have not at all understood yet the mistakes of the party. From this, it follows, that we must explain to these 90 percent, step by step, what occurred and only after that, start to build a new party. This is an abstractly propagandist, and not a political—or speaking philosophically: a rationalist and not a dialectic—approach to the problem.

It would of course be splendid if we could place 90 percent of the young Communists into a big school and give them a full course of study. But alas, these 90 percent fell into the school of Hitler. Today already they are not only half-torn from the party but from politics in general. A part will go to Fascism, a more considerable part will become indifferent. These processes will develop within the next few weeks and months: counter-revolution, just as revolution, works fast. Under the influence of the decomposition of the party, the political sterility of the apparatus, all the best elements of the old party will keep on asking themselves and others: what to do? In this situation, to provide

Shanghai, China

Dear Comrades:
I am sorry to tell you about the near collapse of the Stalinist Party. Three months ago there was a great change in the Communist movement. Many faithful and important Stalinists are now registered in the Kuo Min Tang party. According to custom, when a renegade takes the step, he must register at the "Department of USSR Return Students, Registry of CEC of KMT Party." After registration they must officially publish a detailed account as to why and how they became renegades. These renegades all formerly belonged to the CEC of the CP.

The first brave renegade is Hwang-Pin. He was a member of Political Bureau of the Party. He went voluntarily to Nanking. When he registered, the Party not only did not know anything about his action but urged the workers to collect money for the support of his family and asked the "Human Rights Defense League" under the leadership of Mme. Sun Yet-Sen, to do something for him, that is to get his release. (But Hwang took a hundred thousand dollars from the KMT.) The Party also told the workmen that "revolutionary" Hwang will be executed by the KMT. But only three days after our "revolutionary" Hwang dispatched a very brave article, "My Political Creed" to the Chinese press in which he tells us that according to his 15 years of revolutionary experience, the Communist movement has nothing to do with the national salvation that it rather forces upon China more colonization. The Chinese Communists, he says, take the roubles from USSR and spend it for themselves. "They have common ownership for women members." In conclusion he tells us that the only road to life is under the banner of KMT's three principles!

The same article is also signed by other Stalinists. One is the Chief of the Organization Committee of Y.C.C. and another is a member of the CEC and member of Red Trade Union International, his name is Yee-Fee.

Dear Comrades, these gentlemen were all well known pioneers of the Anti "Counter-Revolutionary" Trotskyist Struggle.

After these renegades deserted, many party branches and cells through China were destroyed by the KMT and many revolutionists were arrested.

As to our Left Opposition since the "Old Man" (Chen Du-Siu) was arrested, no one cell has been destroyed by KMT. Our organization is strong and our comrades are faithful.

A very valuable bit of news is them with the slogan of "reform" would simply mean to mock at them. In moments of greatest crisis we must proceed not from the quickly changing moods of the party mass, but from objective changes in the political situation. Many of those Communists who today are still afraid to break with their bureaucracy, will blame us tomorrow for deluding them, for keeping up the fiction of the old party; pushing off from us, they will go to the Brandenbergs or to the anarchists. The Brandenbergs, as is reported, are already calling for a new party; this shows that, although opportunists, they are politicians. If we, with our revolutionary platform, should prove ourselves doctrinaires, then opportunistic politicians will always succeed in pushing us aside.

What practically speaking will be our relations with the Stalinist organization in Germany in the next period? This question, naturally, interests the comrades most. Must we, ask our opponents, break with local organizations of the old party? No, that would be absurd. We must recruit the revolutionaries in all workers' organizations, and primarily in the units of the old party, insofar as they exist. When the Third International proclaimed the complete break with the Second this did not prevent the Communists from working for a considerable period of time within the social democratic parties and even of conquering the majority of the French party together with P.Humanité. All the more so, our course towards a new party cannot and must not prevent our working in the units of the old party.

But, we hear the objection, the very slogan of a new party will antagonize against us the rank and file on this basis are possible; but we had also conflicts in the past despite the slogan of "reform." We need not doubt, however, that in the life of the active units of the old party much more space will be given to the relations with their own Central Committee than to the question of our new perspective. Here we may expect ever sharper conflicts. The Central Committee will defend Stalin and itself; therein lies its main objective. The workers' Communists will demand honest answers and clear perspectives. While we stood on the position of reform, we did not advocate the breaking of discipline. Now the situation is known about the "Old Man": He was arrested about a half year ago and will stand trial in April. He has written a "defense" pleading guilty. This "defense" yesterday was sent here by his lawyer. Here in brief, are the details, as follows:

1) It is a classical type. This type is just the same as his "Declaration of Revolutionary Literature" ten years ago. This Declaration marked a new period for Chinese life. 1925-27 revolution is its product.

2) Comrade Chen tells us why he transformed the literary revolution into the political revolution and why he became a Communist.

3) There follows, in detail, the aims of Communist Society.

4) The Communist party's new tactics, follows the "Draft Program" of L. D.

5) A condemnation of the KMT. "From the bourgeois point of view the meaning of nation contains 3 elements—but now the KM has truly beaten the people," handed over Manchuria to Japanese imperialism. In short, the KMT doesn't really know its master—International Imperialism.

6) So he is not a traitor. For he did not sell his nation but rather worked to save the nation of oppressed people. Today the KMT doesn't command the army to fight against Japanese imperialism but concentrates at Kiangsi to fight against the Red Army whose aim is to free China from the hand of International Imperialism.

7) He is not guilty. His guilt is fighting against the KMT which now prepares to sell China to the Japanese and other Imperialists.

We are collecting money to publish this "Defense" and will translate it into German, English, etc. It can prove our "Trotskyists" are quite different from the Stalinists. Though we are in prison we fight the KMT; but Stalinists capitulate to the KMT when free.

Comrades! tell this news to American workers.

IN THE NEXT ISSUE

Lack of space and a delay in the mails have forced us to relegate several important documents on the Chicago congress to the next issue. Among these are the main resolution, and the motions and amendments presented by the delegation of the Left Opposition; supplementary notes by comrade Glotzer and an analytical article by comrade Cannon. In the next issue also, the discussion on the new tasks in Germany, opened up by the article of comrade Trotsky, will be continued. Including among other things, a recent resolution of the N. E. C. of the German Opposition. An additional feature will be the Declaration of the International Left Opposition to the Anti-Fascist Congress, to be held in Copenhagen the coming month. A review and analysis of the reformist "Continental Congress" at Washington has also been withheld for lack of space, until next week.

radically changed. We will propose in the units the refusal to distribute worthless official literature, the boycott of the apparatus, the break with the C. E. C. It is understood that we will do all this tactfully and sensibly, considering the level of each unit and the circumstances. But our main line will be that of a new party. And we need not doubt that in spite of this line our relations with the revolutionary party units, in a new situation, in illegality, will be incomparably more friendly, than in the preceding period when we wanted to be only a faction.

We must not forget also that it is not a matter of the Communist party alone. The political collapse of the social democracy makes the appearance of a new "independent" party from its midst very probable. Can we suppose even for a moment that the Stalinist apparatus will be capable of attracting the left social democracy to its side, or even of influencing it in a revolutionary fashion? By this ultimatum, as well as by their whole past, which they do not want to and cannot renounce, the Stalinists will only slow up the development of the social democratic opposition, playing, in the service of Wells, the role of a garden scare-crow. From this point of view also, the perspective of a new party places itself imperatively on the order of the day.

No Illusions!

Behind the majority of political and logical objections, there really lurks an unexpressed sentimental consideration: the Stalinist apparatus is under the blows of Fascism, many devoted and unselfish comrades are trying with all their might to save the organization—is it permissible under such conditions to "discourage" the fighters? This argument can be best expressed by two lines from a verse of a Russian poet: "Elevating illusion is more precious to us than the darkness of bitter truth." But the philosophy of Pushkin is not the philosophy of Marxism. When, at the beginning of the century, we struggled against the party bourgeois illusions and adventurism of the Social Revolutionaries, many good souls not only in the Narodnik camp, but even in our midst, indignantly broke with the Leninist Iskra which, you see, allowed itself to criticize terror unmercifully at the time when the terrorists were perishing in the hangman's noose. We replied: the aim of our criticism consists precisely in tearing away the revolutionary heroes from individual terrorism and in leading them to the road of mass struggle. The illegal apparatus, appended to Mandelstam-Stalin, can bring nothing to the German proletariat save new misfortunes. We must say this openly and without delay, in order to save hundreds and thousands of revolutionaries from a fruitless waste of their energies.

Labor Writhes Under Nazi Whip

Only seven weeks were required for the German counter-revolution to complete its first stage. The Hitler government emerged on January 30. At its pompous session in Potsdam on March 21, the Reichstag sealed the fate of parliamentary democracy and conferred full power upon the government. That period decided for the time being the issue of Communism or Fascism in Germany. With that commences an entirely new historical period for the working class which will have its serious repercussions through out the world. The German workers retreated without a struggle. The Communist party leaders were revealed as the organizers of defeat. Fascism remained the victor and has now been able to consolidate a virtual dictatorship.

But the Stalinist leaders continue in their previous course. In a manifesto issued from their place of refuge, dated March 15, it is said that: "Our party has fought in brilliant fashion." Despite the pompous declarations of the government, March 5 is not a victory for Fascism, it shows on the contrary that the masses of the toiling people are resolved to wage the struggle boldly and courageously. And from the Stalinist headquarters it is maintained in Pravda of March 6: "The working masses of Germany cannot be intimidated either by provocation or slander. They are on the side of the Communist party and under its leadership will put an end to the Fascist regime."

It is necessary to make a correction here. The working masses were prevented from being on the side of the Communist party by the fatal policy of its leadership. And it is well to add that the new tasks in Germany will belong to the new Communist party which in no case will be organized by the Stalinists.

For the moment the sad truth must be recognized. It was the empty boasts of Stalinism which contributed so much to render the party impotent of leadership. They have nothing to do with a Marxist analysis because they are not based upon reality and can result only in adding further confusion to the demoralization created by the serious defeat suffered. Above all, they do not correspond with the complete failure of resistance. Parliamentary democracy took leave in a blaze of torchlights, ac-compulsed by the roar of guns and ringing of churchbells, blessed by the sermon in the Potsdam church over the text: "If God be with us (the Fascists) who can be against us." And the god who is always on the side of the strong bayoneted his rightful place in Fascist Germany. Hitler also fitted himself into this general setting and made a venture into the stratosphere by dedicating his address to the people "on the elevation of the soul." Now he will proceed the more ferociously on terra firma, in destroying the only progressive class and exterminating its organizations. He has already opened a number of concentration camps in which the most active Communist fighters and social democrats are to be interned and kept under the Fascist lash. One of these camps is located at Dachau near Munich. It has "accommodations" for 5,000. The "camp" is located at Heuberg in Warttemberg. While the activities took place in Potsdam, 400 Communist prisoners were on their way to the latter camp.

Fascist Strategy in Name of "Defense"

Chronologically one can trace the sweeping rapidity of the Fascist rise to the full fledged dictatorship and to the just as rapid, disorganized retreat of the Communist and social democratic movements. Its blunt strategy could become possible only in view of the failure of the proletarian leaders, Communists and Socialists alike. Their common failure prepared the road for Fascism. To recount this strategy has value not so much from the point of view of merely recording what has passed, but primarily for the sake of assimilating the lessons of these events for the future tasks.

As soon as Hitler and his lieutenants entered the government they set as their first aim the control of the police, not for the national coalition, but for the Fascists themselves. This they accomplished in the name of the defense and security of the people, strange as it may seem. Having the affairs of the interior regime of Prussia well guarded in the hands of Goering, they proceeded to appoint police commissioners for the other states, Bavaria, Wurttemberg, Saxony, etc. These were not just mere chiefs of police but fully authorized commissioners whose powers were symbolized by the act of von Epp, commissioner for Bavaria, in appointing a new government for the state. Elsewhere, within the various states and cities followed in rapid succession the removal of the elected governments, legislatures, mayors and even regular functionaries and hired employees who did not swear to the Fascist colors. At first it took place by the more polite method of granting leaves of absence but later the victims were violently chased out. All were replaced by Fascists. Step by step with these broads grew the suppression and complete proscription of the workers' press, their meetings and their organizations.

The Communist press and even the Socialist press formerly counting of 192 papers is entirely proscribed. The Communist auxiliary organizations are dissolved and prohibited. These actions were supplemented right along with the necessary emergency decrees. But in all of these the Fascists had fully learned the art of taking the measures in the name of the defense and security of the people. The Fascist strategy managed to put the working class organizations in the position of being the offenders—the terrorist monster against which they were defending the people. The workers who had naive to speak in the name of, and to take measures for, their own defense, and thereby the defense of the majority of the people, failed to do so. To put it more correctly, their parties to which they had given all their confidence—their workers' parties and more particularly their party leaders—failed to give such leadership, failed to give any leadership at all. The Fascist strategy, although crudely and clumsily carried out nevertheless became superior. The working class' lack of strategy, and where any was shown, its false strategy, hastened the defeat.

To fully comprehend the enormous chasm presented here it is necessary to make a historical comparison with the process of the Bolshevik revolution under Lenin and Trotsky. For example, at the time of the attempted Kornilov counter-revolution, the Bolsheviks mobilized the weight of the masses and through their deep antagonism to the Kornilovists impelled the Mensheviks to fight militantly with them under the slogan of the defense of the people's revolution. Also, at the time of the Kerensky attempt to strip Petrograd of its revolutionary soldiers, the Bolsheviks frustrated it under the slogan of the "defense of the revolutionary capital." The subsequent breach with the army headquarters was made in the name of "defense of revolutionary order against counter-revolutionary attempt." And again, up until the very last days before the insurrection, the heavy attacks were made in the name of defense under the immediate leadership of formally established "Defense Committees." The Red Guard was organized and as late as October 22 defined to be: "An organization of the armed forces of the proletariat for the struggle against counter-revolution and the defense of the conquests of the revolution." No class-conscious worker will today deny the historical right and correctness as well as effectiveness of the Bolshevik strategy carried on in the name of defense. Yet these lessons have already been lost to the proletariat. Its leaders falsified the lessons of October.

Archio-Marxists Wage Independent Struggle in Elections in Greece

The events that took place during the last 12 months in Greece proved the currentness of the thesis of the first convention of the Greek

Left Opposition which convened in March, 1932. The numerous strikes of May and June 1932 coupled with many peasant uprisings in almost every part of Greece and especially the General Strike in Athens and Piraeus showed that the revolutionary movement could have gained many victories once the activities of the working class were directed by genuine Workers' Councils supplemented by the peasants' committees. The Stalinists sabotaged this concrete proposal of the L. O. and the heroic struggles of the Greek proletariat were not guided by a central body of action. Also the peasant uprisings were drowned in blood because they were spontaneous and left without direction.

The high priests of Stalinism were unable to apply this method of action because of the contradiction with the famous "united front from below." The catastrophic results of this criminal policy created confusion among the workers engaged in the General Strike. The reformists were able to strengthen their position as a result of the Stalinist stupidities and the only section that kept high the banner of Communism was the Left Opposition.

Despite the heavy sacrifices of the Opposition, including the death of Comrade Adamopoulos in the picket line, our comrades were unable to overcome the treachery of the reformists (whom the Stalinists assisted to a great extent by their "Social-Fascism" theory) in smashing their reluctance to fight when they saw clearly that the Strike was spreading to other cities of Greece and assuming an acute revolutionary character. Women and children joined their fathers and husbands on the picket line.

Stalinism in Greece, as in every other country where it is confronted with an actual struggle, succeeds only in one point, that is, in disgracing the name of Communism. Every action of the Stalinists shows this very clearly. The aim of the Left Opposition is one of defending the banner of Communism which centrism soils.

While Stalinism allies itself with every kind of petty-bourgeois element under the banner of the Workers' and Farmers' bloc, it refuses not only co-operation but even support to the Bolshevik-Leninists. It even resorts to physical violence to avoid co-operation of the Archio-Marxists with the party; it does not let them approach the masses near the party and never gives them the opportunity to speak. But while this policy is able quite often to stifle the voice of small oppositional groups, it is unable to stifle the voice of the Archio-Marxists. The Greek Opposition has outstripped long ago the stage of a mere Opposition and is transformed into a positive Communist force and in a section of the working class is considered as the only guarantee of the revolution.

These conditions imposed upon our Greek comrades the duty of directly approaching the masses which Stalinism disappoints and which become passively inclined, giving an easy victory to the reactionaries. These duties our comrades understand very well and as a first step they decided to put up 5 independent candidates during the elections of last March 5, at the same time agitating for all the other candidates of the party.

By running their candidates our comrades did not expect any tremendous victories. On the contrary, as Marxists they explained to the thousands of workers that gathered at their election rallies why they ran their candidates and what they could expect from the elections. Also they carried long articles in their daily paper Pali Ton Taxoon explaining in detail this important turn in policy.

First of all, they explained that they did not expect to get thousands of votes. For the two candidates of Athens, comrades George Vitsoris and Charalambos Alexopoulos, they expected 500 votes. For the Salonica candidates, comrades Alex Sakkos and John Kefalas, 400. For the candidate of Oetfyon, comrade Petro Androni 100. These expectations were realized with the exception of Salonica, where the reaction attacked the Labor Centre, killed seven workers and wounded 100, confiscated the registration book of the workers and thus prevented them from voting. Comrade Androni was arrested during his election campaign and was beaten into unconsciousness.

The Archio-Marxists ran their five candidates primarily because the Stalinists did not run on a Communist ticket and, what is more important, in order to speak to the masses and prove that Communism is not responsible for the crimes of Stalinism.

The thousands of Stalinist votes are not a genuine proof that they are able to mobilize all these voters. On the contrary, they are pathetic gestures of numerous petty-bourgeois and newly radicalized workers. The Stalinists, as usurpers of the October revolution, are able to get thousands of votes as official representatives of the Soviet Union.

In view of these favorable conditions of Stalinism, every vote of our comrades is a genuine vote for Communism. All the influence of Stalinism will be transferred to the Archio-Marxists once they succeed in sweeping Stalinism aside and building the United Communist Party. The most powerful struggle between Stalinism and Bolshevism is taking place at present in Greece and its development is earnestly followed by those who wish to see the rising of Bolshevism

The Daily Worker of May 8 boasts about the gains of the "Red Opposition" in Salonica. Although we lack detailed information about recent election, we are in a position to state that the Stalinists in Salonica always were able to muster a majority on account of the support they get from the "Spartacus group" (a Left Opposition tendency).

But the Daily Worker fails to mention that on February 16, the Labor Center of Salonica was attacked by the police and soldiers of the Military Garrison and that the local Archio-Marxists were involved in the clash with them and 7 killed and 105 wounded. With the Left Opposition handicapped by such heavy casualties it is not surprising that in a small Union the Stalinists were able to muster a majority.

The Archio-Marxists have already made headway in the heavy task of creating a United Communist movement by sweeping aside the Stalinists. The very boasts of the Stalinists prove that the blows of the Greek Opposition are becoming effective. The development of the struggle will be reported regularly in the columns of the MILITANT.

National Mooney Meet Prepares Broad Fight

The Left Opp. Comrade Cannon declared: The Opposition does not consider the present congress as the culmination of the movement to free Tom Mooney, but rather as the beginning of the struggle, the basis upon which to broaden the entire movement. He proposed to begin a new series of local and district united front conferences mobilizing ever-broader sections of the working class, drawing in new forces into the united front, and preparing for a national and international Mooney Day. All this work, Cannon stated, must lead to the organization of another national congress with a goal of at least 10,000 delegates. "The policy for all this work," said Cannon, "which shall govern the activity of the leading committee on a national scale and all the local organizations is the policy of the united front of workers' organizations." He closed with the declaration that the Left Opposition would present motions on program and policy and along this line to the resolution committee. It was only following the speech of comrade Cannon that efforts were made by other speakers to touch upon the subject of policy and program.

With the first session drawing to a close, Muste in reporting for the presiding committee made the preposterous proposal to conclude the congress on the afternoon of the second day in order to bring the congress to a fitting climax with the Mooney Mass Meeting scheduled for six o'clock in the evening, at the Chicago Stadium. This proposal took the congress by surprise. The congress had no sooner settled down when this proposal for adjournment was made. Herbert Zam, the delegate of the Communist Party (Opposition) rose immediately on the floor to object to the proposal of the presiding committee. He was followed by a representative of the Proletarian party. An obvious confusion existed among all delegates, who found it difficult to understand the nature of this proposal. In speaking of this proposal, comrade Glatzer stated for the Left Opposition, that the most important task of the congress, policy and program, was still to be reported upon and discussed. He pointed out that until then the congress had merely reviewed the Mooney case; but it had not even elected a resolutions committee (scheduled for the next day) nor begun the decisive work for which the congress was called. Considerations of a financial character or the desire to bring the congress to a fitting climax could never outweigh the importance of the deliberations of the congress itself. Throughout the hall delegates rose in objection to the proposal of the committee. A motion was made to table the proposal until the following day. In observation of the mood of the delegates, the presiding committee accepted this substitute.

Election of Resolutions Committee
The second day of the congress opened with Wm. Leader in the chair. Discussion continued on the report of comrade Minor, while waiting the proposal of the presiding committee for the Resolutions Committee. This committee was the most important of the congress. It had to take up the question of policy and program and report back to the congress floor. The committee was composed of delegates from the Proletarian party, A. F. of L. locals, the socialist party, the YPSL, the YCL, the TUUL, the Communist party, other Mooney local conferences, and the Left Opposition (comrade Cannon). The selection of comrade Cannon was more the result of pressure by certain delegates, rather than by the presiding committee in which the party had the majority. The proposal to add Zam to this committee, to represent the Right Opposition was defeated by the overwhelming Party vote. At the conclusion of this point, the resolutions committee went into session and the discussion of Minor's report continued.

Before the closing of the second day of the congress, it was decided to continue the congress on the third day as originally scheduled. The proposal was made the night before for adjournment, stood out even more ridiculous, on the second day, when it became clear that even after the second day, the congress had not yet concerned itself with the question of policy and program, or with a report of the resolutions committee.

In behalf of the presiding Committee, Bill Gebert proposed to adjourn the congress in time to permit the delegates to attend the May Day demonstrations held by both the socialist party and the May Day United Front Committee (Left wing). This proposal was unanimously accepted by the congress. All delegates were to be present at the Mooney Mass meeting in the evening.

The Third Day of the Congress

The congress reconvened on May 2nd, at the Masonic Auditorium, with Joe Weber, of the TUUL, acting as chairman. The resolutions committee which could not conclude its work remained in session while the congress continued the original discussion on the report of Minor. During this discussion comrade Alher Goldman, the Chicago Attorney for the International Labor Defense took the floor. He made two criticisms of the congress which were by and large correct. Goldman stated that in calling this congress the policy of the Molders Committee should have been directed to the organization of a joint arrangements committee representative of the socialist party, the A. F. of L., the Communist party, the TUUL, etc. Such a committee should have then called the conference into existence. While this policy was finally adopted, Goldman declared that it was adopted somewhat too late to be of real effectiveness.

His second criticism was on the manner in which the congress was conducted; referring to the abnormally long discussion of a purely agitational character and the failure of the congress to spend the major part of its time on the question of policy and program.

Scott rose to answer Goldman, but his reply did not meet the criticisms made. During the course of his answer Scott made clear to the delegates that he was not a member of the Communist Party nor the International Labor Defense. Among the following speakers were Gebert and Zam. In the course of his speech Gebert again raised the question of the united front from below. In this he only repeated the remarks of Amter, who had stressed sharply this same policy before. Zam declared his opposition to linking the general struggle for workers' rights, or the Scottsboro case, with the fight for the release of Tom Mooney. Speaking in the name of the Communist party (Opposition) he informed the congress that it was their position, that the congress and its policy line itself exclusively with the issue of Tom Mooney, without raising the other questions of workers' rights.

The Reports of the Resolutions Committee
Discussion on the report of Minor closed with the arrival of the resolutions committee, which remained in session during the first part of the last day of the congress. C. A. Hathaway reported for the resolutions committee. On a number of minor resolutions there was agreement, but in discussions of the main resolution different points of view were presented. He said that resolutions presented by the Lovestonites and the Left Opposition were tabled. Differences existed on the main resolution over one particular point upon which there will be a minority report by comrade Cannon. The I. W. W. presented separate resolutions favoring a boycott of California products and the calling of a general strike in the event that Mooney is not freed or continues to remain in prison. The resolutions committee while not opposing these resolutions in principle proposed their non-adoption by the congress, because of their inapplicability at the present stage of development of the workers' movement in this country.

Returning to the resolution, Hathaway declared that a sharp difference existed between the majority of the Resolution which says in effect: that during the existence of the united front, there shall be no attacks by the participating organizations upon each other, so long as each logically carried out the decisions of the congress. Hathaway attempted to convey the idea that this does not mean to liquidate the independence of the organizations involved, or abolish the freedom of criticism though in reality it is precisely a weapon which the misleaders of labor are looking for. This was a concession to the leaders of the A. F. of L. and the socialist party to get them into the united front, Hathaway said. It was designed to prevent them from saying that they could not participate in the united front because they refused to be attacked by the Communists. It is to show the workers that everything possible is done to pave the way for the participation of their organizations.

In making the minority report, comrade Cannon called attention to the fact that the resolution of the Opposition was not tabled, but all of its points were incorporated in the main resolution reported on by Hathaway. When this was done it was not necessary to fight for the separate adoption of the proposals of the Left Opposition. "We are interested in the adoption of a correct policy," comrade Cannon said, "and if you will table all our proposals as you have this one, we shall not object."

Both the Lovestonite and Stalinist positions. We were opposed to the Stalinist attempt to turn the Mooney Committee into a Mooney-Scottsboro Committee, but we were equally opposed to the Lovestonite right wing attempt to separate the Mooney case from the Scottsboro case and other class struggle issues. Both the centrists and the Right wing confuse the question of organizational and propaganda relations, as well as the relations between different issues of the class struggle.

The final draft of the resolution had some bad points on this question, some wrong formulations, such as: "The unity of the workers and Negro people." In the main, however, it was correct, and we found common ground on which to vote with the Stalinists.

The C. I. May Day Bombshell
After the Resolutions Committee had adopted a very good and correct formula on the united front with the exception of the sentence dealing with "no attacks" the Stalinist steering committee, Amter, etc., discovered, through our information that the Daily Worker that had arrived in the morning of this session carried a manifesto from the C. I. on May Day that again returned to the united front from below. It was a wrong position and a return to the old formula. At least one thing was clear, that the C. I. formula and the formula adopted at the Mooney Congress were two different positions. Which one will the Stalinists try to live up to? This is their contradiction.

Lewis, Horner outfit.

The class collaboration in policy of the leaders of the P.M.A. was adopted because they "wanted a breathing spell." But upon this false foundation they have been losing ground to the Lewis machine in many districts. Breathing spells, as well as growth, cannot be had on the basis of class collaboration, if one has the interest of the workers at heart. Growth and consolidation is possible only on the basis of a Left wing policy, of class struggle.

Upon such a foundation the union was born, upon such a foundation the union will grow. Words about minority rights and expression, words about unity of all Left wing forces in the coal industry on a national scale, words about unemployment relief, words about the six-hour day, words must be changed into action. Not the kind of action in the immediate past. Action where the Right wing sat in the swivel chairs answering phones, sending the militants to the front line to carry on the work and to be used as a cover for their Right wing policies. Individual militants and Left wing class struggle fighters may have the best of intentions, but as such they will only be tools in the hands of the Right wing unless they have behind them and are subordinated to, an organized Left wing.

The Right wing uses the Democratic party as their machine in union elections. The Left wing must organize all their forces for their struggles and their policies.

Tasks for Next Period

A fight against the Right wing class collaboration policy must be launched all along, up and down the line, in the Progressive Miners of America, if the union is to be strengthened in the coming period if it is to be in a position to fight the Peabody forces. The red baiting campaign in the union must stop and the Communists must have the rights of minority expression as well as members of any other political party. The Left wing forces must formulate a minimum program around which to unite. These steps must be taken at once in every mine town, in every local of the P. M. A., if we are to defeat the Peabody.

Speaking for the Left Opposition, Cannon declared that aside from one clause, he supported the resolution which was in general correct. The amendment made by Cannon read as follows: "Each organization entering the united front obligates itself to discipline in action but retains its full independence and its right to criticism." This clause would permit of no misunderstanding by anyone participating in the united front. It is the only correct basis upon which the united front can be organized. To do otherwise is to tie the hands of the revolutionary elements, which could react favorably only to the reformists.

Toward the close of his minority report, comrade Cannon read from the Daily Worker of April 30, the declaration of the Communist International, revising again its position on the united front and calling for the resumption of the tactic of the "united front from below." As a parting question Cannon asked whether this meant that the Party would now change its position again and revert to its old policy. This change of line by the C. I. caught the Party members and in replying to a similar question put by comrade Gerry Allard, Hathaway replied that this did not mean a revision of the line, but applied only to the May Day demonstrations.

The conference adjourned to move to the People's Auditorium for the final session of the congress. Discussion followed upon re-nominating Roger Baldwin before leaving the congress made a statement in complete support of the majority of the resolutions committee. A similar declaration was made by Sol

We will do all that is possible to help the party find its way to the correct Leninist united front position expressed, in the main, by the resolution of the Mooney Congress and not by the C. I. resolution.

The Left Opposition was on the Resolutions Committee of the Mooney Congress but unfortunately was not on the Resolutions Committee of the C. I.

If the Mooney movement slips back to the old Stalinist formula of the united front from below, the Socialist Party and A. F. L. leaders will be greatly strengthened and rendered a great service by us.

Hathaway and Borich, speaking in defense of a confused formula on the united front that has elements of both the Mooney Congress formula and the C. I. formula, said, in reference to the Socialist and A. F. L. leaders: "The leaders will never come into a united front of this kind," meaning the Chicago Mooney Congress. The leaders never decide the question of joining or boycotting a united front. This question is decided for them by the use of a Leninist policy of the united front by the revolutionaries and the mass pressure of the workers upon and within their organization. If the united front policy is not correct and the pressure, consequently, not great enough then they will refuse. This the Stalinists must still learn, just as they must learn that we never must give up our independence or our right to political criticism in united fronts.

The 30 Hour Bill: Stagger System and Wage Cuts

Representative Connery asserted that unless the bill carried an amendment barring imports manufactured by industries operating on more than the thirty hours a week it would not carry. In this he was supported by those industries which are competing in the domestic market with the product of industries abroad. The administration is opposed to this provision. It contradicts all the presidential blarney about trade agreements and freely flowing international exchange (Ramsay Mac Donald).

William Green appeared before the House Labor Committee and opposed the minimum wage provision. (Later he appeared again and urged the passage of the bill as it stands.) The New York World-Telegram of May 1 reports that "insular representatives of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Engineers are in favor of the principle of the six-hour day for railroad employees—with no reduction in pay. A resolution endorsing it is sent to President Roosevelt, Secretary of Labor Perkins, and chairmen of interested congressional committees."

Under the accumulating pressure the administration retreated. Senator Robinson, the administration's "whip," announced that the bill is "not now in the picture." The bill will probably die in committee.

In the period when this bill which so vitally affects the working class was in the process of becoming legislation, the official Communist party, caught unawares, did not lift a finger to rally the masses against its inhumane provisions. The TUUL, to be sure, sent a representative to the Senate Judiciary Committee to put forward its view. That is one thing. Another is to organize a movement behind this delegation to give its view a force.

Why did the party stand by with folded hands? Why did it allow the initiative in opposing the bill to fall in the hands of Green and others?

The Seven Hour Day

There is a reason. The party was committed to the slogan of the reduction in pay advanced by the Left Opposition years before.

But the Stalinists do not say so openly to the party and the class. Worse! As yet they are confusing the struggle to the parliamentary field. Appearances before the Senate Judiciary Committee and the House Labor Committee (May 6) are undoubtedly correct. But when they are not backed by a mass movement they become opportunist.

That is how the question stands today. With a rise in the economic conjuncture the workers will begin to struggle against their bosses. A prominent place in these struggles will be occupied by the fight for the six-hour day. If the party seriously means to influence these struggles in a revolutionary direction it must begin now to lay the ground.

It must begin to organize the movement. The first prerequisite for this is an open admission of the change in slogans and a Marxist explanation for it.

The second prerequisite is the organization of the movement. The positions of the leading working class organizations on the question makes the situation favorable. The A. F. of L. is officially on record for the six-hour day. The railroad brotherhoods similarly. And the socialist party is also on record for it. A correct united front approach to these bodies by the party for a movement for this objective can yield fruitful results for the interests of the workers and Communism.

Over this possibility the policy laid down in the C. I. Manifesto hangs like an ominous cloud. This policy must be rejected. In its place we must adopt and apply the tactic of Leninist united front of workers' organizations.

Highlight of Meet -- Clash Between Stalinists and L.O. on 'Non-Aggression' Clause of Main Resolution

Larks, recently expelled from the YPSL, because of his struggle in support of the Mooney Congress and the united front. Larks is one of the leaders of the Left wing in the YPSL, and the socialist party. He supported the position of the majority on the non-aggression clause because in his opinion it would make possible further proposals for united front action to the socialists. Williamson speaking for the Party, made a vicious attack upon Goldman, Zam and Cannon. Coming when it did, the speech mocked the whole effort of the party to force through the non-aggression pact.

Glatzer Replies to the Critics of the Minority Report

Comrade Glatzer was given the floor in defense of the minority report. He declared that the main tactic of this congress should be the extension of the united front policy. The correct utilization of the united front tactic would make possible the increase of pressure upon the reformists. Only by such pressure will it be possible to force the leaders of the A. F. of L. and the socialist party into united front action. To expect this in any other way, for example, by a non-aggression pact, was a mere illusion. Paul Mattick, representative for United Workers Party, spoke again against the non-aggression pact and called for rank and file control of the united front. He declared himself against the resolutions on boycott and united front. He was followed by Hanson, a member of the IWW, representing the Kentucky Miners, who spoke in favor of the resolutions on boycott and general strike.

A motion was introduced to close the discussion. In view of the fact that many speakers had not yet had the opportunity to present their positions on the floor, protests came from all parts of the hall. Zam particularly protested this action. He pointed out that he made an amendment to the resolution; that the amendment had not been presented to the congress and that no one had had an opportunity to speak for it on the floor. A period of bedlam seized hold of the conference. During the confusion the motion carried and Hathaway proceeded to sum up his report and the discussion. During his summary speech, Zam again demanded to be given the floor to present his amendment and defend his position. At this point, Hathaway made the motion to give Zam five minutes to present his motion and to speak in defense of it. The motion carried.

The essence of the amendment by Zam, was designed to confine the Congress to the one issue of Tom Mooney and to leave the general question of the struggle for workers' rights out of the main resolution. In continuing his summary Hathaway attempted to cover the struggle of the Left Opposition for correct policy by asserting that the Left Opposition was only interested in presenting its political program in the congress. This remark made little or no impression—it was an attempt to declare the position of the party against the Left Opposition.

Voting on the Resolutions
An endeavor was made to vote on the main resolution first thus making it unnecessary to vote on the various amendments proposed. Such a motion was carried. The comrade Cannon took the floor to object to the procedure and proposed voting first of all upon the various amendments and then in the main resolution. In making his statement comrade Cannon declared that the delegation of the Left Opposition in voting for its own amendment (see above) would at the same time vote for the general resolution, excluding that section containing the non-aggression clause. This proposal was carried and the voting proceeded on the different amendments.

The amendment proposed by the Left Opposition received 63 votes. This was the largest minority vote in the congress. It showed, too, that next to the party, the Left Opposition was the strongest political factor in the congress. The boycott resolution of the I. W. W. received 27 votes, and their general strike resolution 57 votes. The amendment proposed by Zam got 51 votes. Thus, the overwhelming majority of delegates voted in favor of the general resolution.

The final report of the congress was the election of a permanent committee. The Presiding Committee proposed a committee of 43. The name of the committee was adopted as the: National Mooney Council of Action. Additional nominations were made to this Committee. Among those nominated was Zam. When the motion was made to elect the original 43, comrade Cannon in the name of the Left Opposition proposed voting individually on the additional nominations, because the Left Opposition was in favor of the Left Opposition of the Communist Party (Opposition) since they represented a definite current in the working class movement, had their own press and organization. In addition, it was made clear that neither the party nor the Left Opposition could represent their point of view.

This proposal was defeated and the project of the presiding committee carried by an overwhelming vote. The motion that the permanent committee, those residing in New York City, shall compose the working committee, and that New York should be the central headquarters also carried. In addition, the presiding committee proposed that the secretary of the committee should be C. A. Hathaway. The last proposal carried without any objections. Among those on the National Mooney Council of Action were: A. Remer, Proletarian party; George Smirkin, YPSL; J. P. Cannon, Communist League of America (Left Opposition); Van Gilder, socialist party; R. M. Lovett, I.W.O.; Selena Burrell, Women's Auxiliary of the P.M.A.; Pat Ansboury, Progressive Miners of America; L. Scott, Miners Defense Committee, Chas. Bloom, A.F. of L.; Emil Arnold, A. F. of L.; M. Olay, Anarchist; Robert Minor, C. P.; Wm. Patterson, J. L. D.; C. A. Hathaway, C. P.; J. Muste, C.P.A.; I. Amter, unemployed Councils; J. B. Matthews, Socialist Party; Joe Weber, TUUL, and Alec Frazer of the Progressive Miners of America.

ALBERT GLOTZER

seven hour day without reduction in pay. It has never explained why. At the meeting of the Resolutions Committee, in the N. Y. May Day conference, in voting down our proposal for the inclusion of the six-hour day slogan in the May Day Resolution, Winter explained that the A. F. of L. stood for the six-hour day and that the C. P. had to "distinguish itself from the demagogic A. F. of L. fakers!"

When the capitalists themselves proposed the six-hour day and the five-day week they inadvertently exposed the bankruptcy of the party's position on the question. The Black Bill made it impossible for the party to advance the seven-hour day any longer. And, as a matter of fact, the party press is now free of it.

Instead, with typical bureaucratic cowardliness the Stalinists have changed the slogan without saying so, and without explanation to the party membership and the working class.

And to what have they changed the slogan? On April 8 the Daily Worker said that to the capitalist wage cutting bill we must oppose the slogan of a shorter work day without reduction in pay. This formulation is broad enough to include the I. W. W. slogan of the four-hour day without reduction in pay. And it can also include the position of the A. F. of L. demagogic fakers for the six-hour day, from whom, said Winter, the revolutionary movement must distinguish itself by the clock!

But the Stalinists were unable to crawl out of a bad situation by the use of an ambiguous and confusing slogan. The struggle against the bill requires concrete measures and definite slogans. The Daily Worker of April 20 carried an article by Stachel, in which he reports that the TUUL appeared before the Senate Judiciary Committee and proposed an amendment to the Black Bill providing for the six-hour day, five-day week with no reduction in pay advanced by the Left Opposition years before.

But the Stalinists do not say so openly to the party and the class. Worse! As yet they are confusing the struggle to the parliamentary field. Appearances before the Senate Judiciary Committee and the House Labor Committee (May 6) are undoubtedly correct. But when they are not backed by a mass movement they become opportunist.

That is how the question stands today. With a rise in the economic conjuncture the workers will begin to struggle against their bosses. A prominent place in these struggles will be occupied by the fight for the six-hour day. If the party seriously means to influence these struggles in a revolutionary direction it must begin now to lay the ground.

It must begin to organize the movement. The first prerequisite for this is an open admission of the change in slogans and a Marxist explanation for it.

The second prerequisite is the organization of the movement. The positions of the leading working class organizations on the question makes the situation favorable. The A. F. of L. is officially on record for the six-hour day. The railroad brotherhoods similarly. And the socialist party is also on record for it. A correct united front approach to these bodies by the party for a movement for this objective can yield fruitful results for the interests of the workers and Communism.

Over this possibility the policy laid down in the C. I. Manifesto hangs like an ominous cloud. This policy must be rejected. In its place we must adopt and apply the tactic of Leninist united front of workers' organizations.

Chaco War Formally Declared

As this issue goes to press, it is announced that the war between Paraguay and Bolivia, which has been raging for nearly two years now, has been "officially" declared. A comprehensive article dealing with the Chaco mix up will appear in the forthcoming issue.

America Intervenes in European Conflict

HITLER DANCES TO ROOSEVELT'S TUNE. ORGY OF "PEACE" TALK PREPARES NEW SLAUGHTER AND ATTACK ON U.S.S.R. MOBILIZE FOR DEFENSE OF THE WORKERS FATHERLAND!

The past week was marked by a hectic development of the political tension on the European continent and by whirlwind American intervention to ally it. The surprisingly easy and rapid consolidation of the Nazi power in Germany—while France and the rest of the entente had expected a prolonged period of internal strife to keep the German nationalists tied to their strings—led to increasing boldness on the part of Hitler on the foreign front and served as the cause of something which is being described by the universal press as a "war hysteria comparable to that of 1914."

As long as the fate of Germany was undecided, as long as it was not certain that the proletariat of that country would not rise against the Fascist monster and institute its own rule, the ruling classes of France, England, etc., not only had no objections to the Nazi Storm Troops but regarded them as warriors in the defense of "civilization."

But the moment when it became clear that class struggle in Germany had for the time being, decided by the passive submission of the workers—betrayed by the socialists and kept divided by the Stalinist bureaucracy—the allied capitalists immediately saw the menace of German "rearmaments" in these same Brown Shirt formations.

It had been the original intention of the Versailles victors to solve the German crisis by maintaining their stranglehold on Germany on a new plane—showing a Fascist Germany to the forefront of war for the extermination of Soviet Russia, where it could make gains only as an agent of all the powers of Western Europe and only to the degree to which they consented. (Civil war in Germany would have left Hitler no other choice.)

With the inexpensive triumph over his internal enemy, the Nazi chieftain naturally gained inspiration to drive for a much better bargain—for a place among the equals in the family of robber capitalist nations. Now, if he is to attack Soviet Russia, he wants to make sure that he will have the force behind him to dictate his own terms and to turn the balance in favor of Nazi Germany in any case. The lack of proletarian resistance within Germany itself facilitates his devilish game of flirtation with the U.S.S.R., which is a club in his hands for the purpose of shaking the positions of the Western powers.

Hitler's excursions into Austria, and growing Fascist strength there, only served to further alarm his Allied opponents, whose aim is, of course, to hold on to that balance of power which they have held so tightly ever since Versailles. Therefore, lay the reasons for all the talk about "sanctions and preventative war" that so swiftly threw all of Europe into a frenzy last week.

It was at this point that Wall Street's "New Deal" president interfered. The heavy billions of American capital investments, of war debts and private contracts which constitute the economic basis of America's world hegemony were at stake. "Isolation" policy, which under the pressure of financial and economic intervention (Dawes Plan, Young Plan) had shrunk to the size of a flimsy formality, was definitely thrown overboard.

Retaining the traditional hypocrisy of Imperialist U.S. "pacifism," President Roosevelt addressed himself to the nations of Europe with something that amounts to a political ultimatum. Money talked and all the high and low politicians of Europe listened.

The Washington administration had been careful beforehand to make clear that it would definitely oppose all "sanctions" (the occupation of the Ruhr, etc.) but dropped a gentle hint to Berlin to bide its time. Roosevelt did, to be sure, tell the Nazis that he would not stand for German "rearmament." But at the same time, he just as categorically demanded French disarmament as a precondition for holding Germany in check.

Hitler's Reichstag Speech
The Roosevelt message was a bitter pill for the Western powers to swallow but they had no alternative. It takes finances to impose "sanctions" and to insure against possible consequences. Hitler's Reichstag speech, on the other hand, while indicating a turn to a slower tempo in the reestablishment of armed equality with the other powers, nevertheless showed that this was to be done only by bowing to Wall Street's wishes and not at all on the basis of French or British pressure.

America was to be considered as "guarantor of European peace," as a sort of super-arbiter. All in all, a handsome victory for United States imperialism and another strong twist of the American noose around Europe's neck.

It is not strange that the capitalist press in this country has welcomed Hitler's kowtowing to Washington. It is not strange that it now goes into poems of praise for Hitler, the pacifist. It is only some what ludicrous, part of the general comedy of armed pacifism.

That France and England will disarm—is hardly likely. That Hitler will, therefore, continue supplying German military forces up to France's level—gradually, to be sure, and on the "MacDonald plan"—is just as sure. The tension has only been temporarily allayed. The race of armaments will go on as fiercely as before. The final word will, however, rest with Washington.

Hitler and the Mussolini Pact

Significantly also, Hitler reiterated his determination to stand by the Four Power Pact of Mussolini. The direction of this pact—against the Soviet Union—has been made clear before this. The danger of war against the workers' fatherland is just as imminent as before. Only the preponderance in this looming attack against the fortress of the world revolution remains to be decided.

No amount of pacifist talk, no amount of flirtation with the USSR—by Hitler or by Roosevelt—can cover up that danger. To do so—as the Stalinist Daily Worker does—over the fact that Hitler's declaration of "aggressor nation" has been accepted by Geneva, can only have one meaning: To support all.

Two Expelled by Stalinists from Y. C. L.

The Young Communist League three weeks ago expelled two more of its members on the charge of "Trotskyism." Herman Gladstone, member of the Y. C. L. for two years, and Perry Mayers, member of the Y. C. L. for six months, were the victims this time of Stalinist "party democracy."

The basis for both the expulsions was laid at a recent district membership meeting held by the Y. C. L. on the German situation and the line of the Communist party in Germany. C. A. Hathaway, the district organizer of the party, expounded the united front policy in true Stalinist fashion.

At the conclusion of Hathaway's speech, one of the expelled members got up on a point of order and asked that there be a thorough discussion among the members themselves, so they would have an opportunity to express their opinions and hear those of the other rank and file. After a period of organized heckling among the leaders, Hathaway got up and pointed out that "the hour was late and to continue the meeting with an open discussion would mean to remain overnight." (Before this Hathaway had spoken for 4

Heroic Sacrifices Mark P. M. A. Resistance to Operators' Onslaught

Pickets beaten, blinded and murdered! Peaceful miners shot down at their homes or on the streets! Relief headquarters smashed! Women—wives and mothers of miners beaten and jailed! Local union and mass meetings broken up! All these are regular features of the struggle of the miners of Illinois to organize and function within a union of their own choice—the Progressive Miners of America.

The list of murders and outrages grows as Lewis gangsters, coal company thugs, deputy sheriff gorillas and National guardsmen with machine gun, bayonet, bomb and blackjack carry on the fight of the Peabody Coal Co. to force starvation wages, slave conditions and a gangster union on the miners of Illinois.

The casualty lists of dead and wounded as published regularly in the Progressive Miner are eloquent proof of how the "King Kong" of Capitalism treat starving and struggling workers in the era of "new deal" and under the beneficent reign of the grinning, democratic "dictator" in Washington.

An incomplete list of recent casualties follows:
Murdered
Mrs. Emma Cummelato—shot by a sniper in her own doorway.
Joe Colbert—shot by gangsters in his own home.

5,000 Walk Out In Philadelphia Dress Strike

Philadelphia, Pa.—On Tuesday, May 9, the dressmakers rose in rebellion against sweatshop conditions and starvation pay in Philadelphia. That day 5,000 waist and dressmakers, 95 percent of the trade, went out on a general strike call in their industry. Their working conditions, never good, had been worsened in the past several years that it could no longer be tolerated. Wages of $8 to $15 and even lower are now current. Regulations as to hours, etc., which the state government had in past years been forced to concede, were withdrawn. Work had to be taken home, was a spirit of resentment against such slave conditions which brought on this upheaval.

The extent of the strike and its depth, can be further judged by the fact that for about half of those out it is their first strike—a novel experience. All categories—operators, cutters, finishers, etc., have struck. This so successful walkout was in response to two strike calls that were issued, one by the International Ladies Garment Workers Union, the other by the United Front Committee of Dress and Waistmakers and the Needle Trades Workers Industrial Union. The part played by the Left wing NTWU is a sorry one. The response was overwhelmingly to the right wing ILGWU of Dubinsky and Reisker. But both unions were taken by surprise at the turn-out of the workers. So little did the officialdom understand.

To the doubtful "credit" of the ILGWU must be added an effort to prevent a walkout. At the general strike meetings on Wednesday, Pres. Dubinsky admitted that the International's office considered conditions inauspicious for a struggle. "We restrained, we cautioned . . . but you wanted it." The Left wing, desirous of struggle but lacking forces and a foothold among the workers, was as a matter of course unable to call a strike. They too thought the call ill-timed. It was too late in the season. At the time of the walkout, the ILGWU had registered 1200 workers. Its leaders expected only an additional 600 to come out.

This strike proves the general Communist position, that strike struggle can be successfully waged now, despite a severe unemployment situation. The strike has many

Broad United Front to Preserve Rivera Murals

A broad united front protest movement of working class organizations against the threatened destruction of Diego Rivera's mural paintings at Radio City by the Rockefeller interests culminated Wednesday in an open-air mass meeting at Columbus Circle and in mass picketing at Radio City and later at the home of Rockefeller.

Throughout the whole protest campaign the active and often leading role of the Left Opposition, with which Rivera openly showed his political sympathy, was evident.

At the first meeting of the provisional united front committee, on Friday, May 12, representatives of the cultural and educational organizations of the Left Opposition, the official party (John Reed Club, Workers School, National Students

Help Pull The Militant Thru

Our appeal to solve the contradiction between the political advance of the League and the financial situation of the MILITANT have met with an excellent response. Since last week's report the following returns have been made by our comrades and friends: Comrade Konikow in Boston paid another note on the linotype machine; the Chicago Militant Workers Club shot in nine dollars; comrade Duell in New Haven sent in one dollar; comrade Roehler in Youngstown, five dollars; Dr. E., two dollars; a friend in Los Angeles one dollar; comrade Kaplan in New York, three dollars; comrade Vomvas of Pittsburgh, one and a half dollars.

In addition the Chicago, Newark, Pittsburgh, Minneapolis, Toronto, Montreal and Boston branches all sent in various contributions. But best of all has been the response of the Kansas City and New York branches which by their efforts have steered the MILITANT through the worst of the breakers. Final figures of the exact results of the respective efforts of these two branches are not yet available. Next week we will give a full and detailed report.

Clear water is ahead at last.

There remains one more line of breakers. If we clear this we can say that the response of our entire movement has pulled the MILITANT through the worst crisis it has ever faced. In that case we will have taken a long step forward on the road to the solution of the contradiction between the political advances of the League and the financial situation of the MILITANT.

Our belief is that the response of the past three weeks will not slacken but will continue.

Despite the excellent response of the past week the MILITANT appears late this week. That is due to the financial situation which set us back. If all our comrades and friends will continue to make their response prompt, next week's MILITANT can appear earlier.

Organize Fight Against Mass Evictions

BULLETIN

As we go to press we learn from the evening papers of the savage assault made by the N. Y. Police upon demonstrations in New York at the Home Relief Bureaus where unemployed workers protested the slashing of relief and the cessation of rent payments by the city. The thugs in uniform brutally slugged the workers. Many were taken to the hospital for treatment.

The working masses of New York are getting their first dose of the Roosevelt "New Deal." Tammany Hall, "the friend of the people," has ordered the wholesale eviction of the New York unemployed from their homes. Working in cooperation with their election backers, the landlords and the bankers, the McGraws, the Currys, the O'Briens and the rest of the honest men in control of the City government have sent off all payment of rents for the unemployed. This is no small matter. It cuts into the lives of more than 1,000,000 unemployed, their wives and children. Tammany's brutal eviction order tells the jobless masses of this city to pack their belongings and to rent a sleeping place for themselves on the park benches, the subway or a flophouse—if they can get into one.

This is the fourth year of the economic crisis. The masses have watched the degradation of their standards of life with little or no resistance. So long as they were able to "get by" on the handouts of the relief institutions they remained dormant and passive. The Communists warned that even these pitiful doles would be retracted if the workers did not fight for their maintenance and for the granting of the only half-way substantial form of relief under capitalism—unemployment insurance. These warnings have now become a sinister fact. Relief has either been reduced or eliminated in various parts of the country. New York is now falling in line with new dole to be dispensed to the American workers—the dole of starvation and evictions.

The capitalist class is determined to carry out its cynical hunger program. Listen to what a capitalist information agency, the Kiplinger Washington letter has to say and draw your own conclusions:

Chicago Meet Unifies Jobless Movement

NATIONAL FEDERATION FORMED. SOCIALISTS FORCED TO INCLUDE ALL COMMUNIST TENDENCIES IN CONFERENCE. LEFT WING CARRIES PROGRAM AFTER HARD STRUGGLE.

Chicago, Ill.—The Chicago Unemployed Conference held at Lincoln Center on May 13, 14, 15, ended by forming the National Federation of Unemployed Workers Leagues of America, with the national office in Chicago, and the election of a National Committee of 15.

Huge Representation

Three national organizations, two others in the process of forming national, state, sectional and city organizations, represented 40 organizations with 826 branches, from 16 states and 25 cities with 95 delegates from all parts of the United States. The Workers' Committees, Workers Leagues and Unemployed Councils were represented. The Ohio Independence League, to be called by the CPUSA and the Industrial Workers Union, both in the process of forming national unemployed organizations, were also represented. Fraternal delegates from political organizations were also present. Al. Glatzer representing the Left Opposition.

Political tendencies from the extreme right to the extreme left attended the conference which was the high mark up to the present in the united front of workers' organizations. The following political tendencies were represented through different unemployed organizations: Republican, Democrats, Agrarian reformers, progressives, Borders' group, socialists, Right wing socialists, militant socialists, left wing socialists, anarchists, Industrial Workers of the World, Muskettes, Stalinists, Lovestonites, Right-centre Communists, ultra-Left communists and the Left Opposition. The different political tendencies

Move to Unify Unemployed in Ohio

Youngstown, O.—All the organizations in the Mahoning Valley that claim to represent the interests of the working class will be given the opportunity to prove how seriously they recognize the need of general working class unity in the immediate future. At the suggestion of a Left Oppositionist, the Youngstown Fourth Ward Unemployed League has appointed a committee of three to meet with similar committees from the Austintown Unemployed League, Fourth Ward Unemployed Council and the central branch of the Youngstown Unemployed Council for the purpose of drawing up a united front program and issuing an appeal for unity to all labor organizations in the Mahoning Valley.

This is going to be a test primarily for two national movements that are at present contending for leadership of the local workers. I refer to the Unemployed Council movement inaugurated and to this day dominated by the Communist party, and the Unemployed Leagues which have been built up by the Conference for Progressive Labor Action and which still generally follow the CPUSA leadership. Both the CP and the CPUSA do a lot of

Cannon Meetings Are Big Factor in Reviving Movement in Kansas City

Kansas City, Mo.—

Kansas City, with the tradition of the "Workers' World" and the other left-wing struggles still enshrined in the hearts of its militant workers, witnessed a revival in revolutionary activities, which we hope, will prove to be the turning point in the organizational activities of the Left Opposition, and lead it to greater heights.

In spite of the Stalinist slanders of the past few years, comrade Cannon's visit proved to be a huge success. From his arrival on Friday, May 5th, to his departure Tuesday, May 16th, the revolutionary movement in Kansas City took on a new lease of life.

His two lectures—"America's Road to Revolution" and "The Tragedy of the German Proletariat"—which were given on May 12th and 14th respectively, attracted overflow crowds. The results of the bankruptcy of the C.P. activities were very evident at these meetings. After scorching attacks on the Stalinist regime comrade Cannon not only invited but urged the party members or sympathizers present to defend their position—none arose to take issue. Silence reigned!

The local branch of the Left Opposition increased its membership by almost half when four new comrades were accepted into the group. In addition to that the members and sympathizers pledged $600—$125 spot cash. In response to the appeal of comrade Cannon for the upkeep of the Militant and continuance of work in the coal fields. Also the group set a goal of 30 new subs in the Militant drive. Comrade Caplan of the sub-drive, warns all those in the race for the prize—the three volumes of Comrade Trotsky's "History of the Russian Revolution"—that they must increase their efforts or else he is a sure winner!

Last but not least, a Young Spartacus group, with a membership of nine, was organized by comrade Huff.

"The K. C. Branch feels that the Left Opposition should recognize that the perseverance and patience of comrades 'Shorty' Roehler and Kassen have borne fruit. It is they who have received torrents of abuse from the Stalinists since the formation of the Left Opposition in K. C., and now that headway is being made all credit to them!"

were, in the main, divided into two different positions at the conference as Right wing and Left wing, with the I.W.W. delegates jumping back and forth. Struggles within the two main tendencies marked the high points of the conference and made it possible, thru the ironing out of secondary differences on immediate demands, to conclude the conference with unanimous decisions. The amendments to the reports of the committees were either adopted or rejected and then the report as amended was adopted unanimously.

The greatest numerical weight of the conference was held by the socialist delegates, who were instrumental in calling it. But the hopeless split between their Right and Left wings and the political bankruptcy of the main current of the socialists made them a sorry figure in the conference, which swamped them in defeat and wrapped them up in their own contradictions by obtaining unanimous decisions on the amended reports.

The Left Opposition's Objectives
The delegates from the unemployed organizations representing our political views (Left Opposition) went to the conference with the following objectives:

1. To fight for the seating of all unemployed organizations, especially the Unemployed Councils, which the Borders Committee had specified in the call would not be seated.
2. To have the conference adopt the correct position on the united front and establish it as a working basis for the unemployed organizations.
3. That the perspective of the conference be the establishment of one national unemployed organization.
4. To oppose any political, racial, color or creed or discrimination in the unemployed organizations.

These objectives became the established principles by conference decision because other delegates—on the one hand, independent of our and on the other hand, through discussion with us—fought for the same positions, thereby enabling the united Left wing to carry its program.

Our delegates, while concentrating on the above issues were unable to lead an adequate fight for the slogan of the six-hour day, five-day week, with increased pay, which in the main was lost in the resolutions committee.

Several draft programs from different organizations, including a statement of the Left Opposition were passed out to the delegates. Our statement will appear in a coming issue.

The Floor Struggles

The first difference of opinion in the conference came when the credentials committee reported, leaving out the credentials of the Unemployed Councils. Delegate Oehler moved amendment to the report of the credentials committee asking for the seating of the Unemployed Council delegates and the fraternal delegates from political organizations that were also left out. Delegate Waters, of the Workers' Leagues, amended this by specifying the number of votes they could have. This was agreed to by the representatives of the Unemployed Councils to the exclusion of the Left wing; the council delegates concentrated on one instead of two amendments. The amendment to seat the delegates from the Unemployed Councils and fraternal delegates carried by a vote of twenty-nine and a half to twenty-five and a half, thereby establishing at the start the principle of no exclusions from the united front. Without the support of the Workers' Leagues, the Lovestonites and the Left Opposition, the Stalinists would not have been seated.

The second important struggle revolved around the question of what kind of an organization this conference would establish. Some delegates, led by the Workers' Leagues, desired a national organization. Others wanted a continuation of the original Federation and the delegates from the Unemployed Councils merely wanted a continuation committee and united front local and sectional committees. The Muskettes, who are calling the July 14th conference, supported the position of the Unemployed Councils. The report of the constitution committee was rejected, the committee disbanded and a new one elected with Dennis Bait from the Detroit Citizen League as Chairman. They brought in a report favoring a National Federation with city, county and state federations. A Lovestonite delegate from the Workers' Committee amended the report of the committee and advocated a national federation of organizations which give the local units the right to enter or stay out of the federation. The committee and many delegates pointed out

LEAGUE ACTIVITIES

Opposition and Unemployed in Los Angeles

Los Angeles—Part of the machinery set into motion by the United Front anti-fascist letter of the C. I. was an anti-fascist united front conference in Los Angeles on April 28.

This conference was not called by the Communist party but by a united front provisional organization of German groups.

Proof that the "united front from below" under revolutionary leadership has gone the way of the "third period" and the "struggle for the streets" was had by the fact that neither the Communist party nor the Young Communist League were represented officially.

We presume, their assumption was that their presence there would frighten from the "broad united front" the three branches of the I. L. D., the I. W. O., the F. S. U., the friends of the Polish Political Prisoners, the L. S. U., the I. O. R., and the Unemployed Council as well as two or three German speaking organizations: Workingmen's Benefit, Maennerchor, etc. And by no means shall we forget the Cremation Society who were present, too.

The only Communist organization openly participating was the Left Opposition.

A delegate of the Left Opposition was placed on the resolutions committee. In this committee he proposed three resolutions, in addition to the two already proposed. One of the resolutions, on the struggle against Fascism, stood for a united front with all labor organizations against the fascist attacks, particularly with the socialist party. The socialist party was condemned for refusing to participate in this conference.

Other resolutions, on anti-Semitism pointed out that the struggle against Fascism and anti-Semitism by the Jews could only be waged by the lower social strata allying themselves with the proletariat, and demonstrated that only a new social order could abolish religious and racial prejudices.

The third resolution on the Defense of the Soviet Union showed that Hitler represented the spearhead of the attacks on Russia, and the labor movement particularly in the countries intervening between Russia and Germany must join the anti-fascist bloc. (The party voted against the resolutions of the L. O.) The party seems determined to make of the anti-fascist struggle an affair of fraternal German and Jewish groups instead of a labor affair. The local branch of the Opposition took a determined position against this. The consensus of opinion of revolutionaries here is that Stalinism is ready for a nice sanitary disposal.

The comrades in the Los Angeles branch of the League are very active in the class struggle particularly in the mass unemployment movement, the Unemployed Cooperative Relief Association in which they are very influential. The organization is slowly progressing. We are developing a group of erstwhile scab labor into class conscious battalions, although in this as well as in other activities we suffer acutely from lack of forces.

The organization has demanded $50,000 monthly from the city. This morning's newspapers state that Mayor Porter has appropriated $20,000. The cause for this "city grant" is a dual one, a combination of pre-election political activity, and the forestalling of our movement by a political concession.

The movement has also gone on record for the freedom of Mooney, has elected a delegate by proxy to the Free Mooney Congress in Chicago.

Some time ago, when the U. C. K. A. placed an evicted family in the home, the home, Tibbs, was arrested. After a nine day trial, costing the authorities at least $1,000, the verdict was "not guilty." This was a victory for the unemployed.

The unemployed are turning on their disconnected gas, light and water in the tens of thousands. A number of half-hearted arrests have taken place on this account, too.

Friday, April 27, a member of the organization was placed on the streets. The unemployed determined to make a demonstration in the form of a continual meeting 24 hours daily at a pitched tent before the workers' former home. This tactic had won shelter for the family before.

In the small hours of the night, when the members keeping vigil had dwindled to 35 warming themselves before bonfires, the police and "red squad" swooped down and brutally beat the unemployed. It was not that horror of horrors, a "red," that was "killed" but one of themselves. The unemployed are aroused.

So the lessons of the class struggle, of private property, of the role of the state are being beaten home. We are busy drawing conclusions, organizing the instinctive rebellion into revolutionary Marxist paths.

Organization Notes

New York City—

The affairs held recently by the New York Branch of the Communist League of America (Opposition) have helped greatly to alleviate the financial situation of the Militant, as well as to take care of other financial obligations. A movie showing on "Germany in 1933 and the Congresses of the Comintern" brought $80.00. The first showing of the movie of the Russian Revolution at the Labor Temple netted an excellent return. The gala affair at Town Hall, held through the medium of the International Workers School, at which Diego Rivera gave his talk on the controversy over his mural at Rockefeller Center, brought in a handsome profit, which will relieve the pressure considerably.

Now, a second showing of the movie on the Russian Revolution will be held at the Labor Temple on Saturday, May 27, and a third showing will very likely be arranged.

The branch has about completed its quota of $75.00 for the Left Opposition in Germany.

In a few weeks the first picnic of the season will be given under the auspices of the Branch. Other affairs are being planned.

Philadelphia Dress Strike more lessons and warnings. One is very important—it proves absolutely the correctness of the trade union policy of the Communist League. The strike marks a victory for the right wing union; a defeat for the false Stalinist policies which dominated politically and organizationally the Left wing union. How and why?

The strike call was issued after months and months of negotiations between the ILGWU manager Reiberg and the clothing bosses; after months of "restraining." A general call for "union conditions" took the place of definite demands. "The NTWU," weakened by years of a sectarian "third period" policy, was ignorant of the strike date. It just managed to limp along with an issuance of its prepared, and dateless strike leaflet, calling for a strike at the same time. Two big halls, the socialist Labor Institute and the Grand Fraternity, were rented by the ILGWU. The thousands of workers who responded to the strike call packed them. The strikers' hall on Eighth Street, rented by the Industrial Union, was desolate. Scores, instead of thousands.

Here is the latest fruit of incorrect policy. The shibboleth "United Front Committee" tacked on to the signature of the NTWU could not replace an isolationist strategy of years. The very mechanics of the struggle forced militant NTW and CP members into work with the masses from the shops—into the right wing union. Many times the Left Opposition comrades, in the strike halls and on the line, heard the worst story: "It's not my fault, they all went to the International." Shops brought down by the industrial union voted in the Left wing hall to go to the ILGWU. Not even in such a situation could the NTW union officers throw overboard their precious "line." As long as possible they expected a miracle, they clung to instructing comrades to go, though alone, to the Left wing hall. But of course it couldn't last long. It is no longer possible to ignore the hundreds of dressmakers in Reiberg's union.

After it saw the response and its own weakness, the NTW issued a call "for one strike"—"one united strike." Not yet one union but one strike! To this end it elected a committee of 50 to negotiate with the ILGWU before the eyes of the strikers. The Dubinsky-Reiberg (this clique refused to give the committees so much as a hearing or even to take a note of the strike meetings. This is how the fakers responded to an offer by recognized militants for unity and aid in a strike struggle. The fact that in several big shops the employers obliged the ILG by shutting off the power to aid the ILG walk-out also is not accidental.

Does this mean that industrial unionism and class struggle policy is dead? Most certainly not. It does mean that Stalinism on the trade union field (they were supposed to be our teachers in practical work) has here succeeded in dispersing a heritage of militancy, in dividing Left and Right workers, and in discrediting the Left wing, not to speak of the Communist movement. The Left wing can and it will be resurrected. But again, only on the basis of a correct policy. Now the comrades must recover from the shock, take stock of forces and policy and leadership, and so be prepared to go forward.

Boston Also On Strike

After we received the article from Philadelphia printed below, we also heard from Boston comrades that a dress strike had been declared there on May 16. As in Philadelphia, so in Boston too, the International Ladies Garment Workers Union has taken the lead; the turnout shows a very good response and the Industrial Union (under Stalinist leadership) is all the more surprising, since it is known that the NTWU only recently held a "Plenum" in New York which was supposed to deal with fundamental problems. An account of proceedings at this "plenum" and an analysis of the present strike movement and the various forces participating will appear in a forthcoming issue of the Militant.

The policy to be adopted must be on the recognition that the dressmakers are now in the ILGWU, a union, whose bureaucrats, as the NTW correctly maintains, are not to be trusted. The demand for one united strike is good. It does not go far enough. What now, that it has been rejected? The Left wing must demand ONE UNION. One union in the industry! We must insist on entry of the Needle Trades Union as a bloc into the International; without discrimination and without loss of privileges. This demand, which frankly recognizes the superior strength of the Right, cannot be refused by the fakers. It will undermine completely their splitting tactics. Let the Reibergs dare refuse—ways will be found of entering. Shall we enter to "expose" the fakers? The building of a militant union on the policies of the class struggle is what brings the union members into conflict with class collaboration officials. That aim, correctly pursued, will in itself serve to expose them.

Can the left wing develop and function within the ILG? What a question! The class struggle itself makes such an alignment inevitable. The NTW will, because of its militant past and its foresight and courage, act as a leaven. Already, with the strike not yet completely settled, voices of protest are raised. Reiberg's dues agreement will not satisfy the dressmakers, nor all their tastes.

Piece-work and home bundles, some of the sorest spots, are ignored in the settlement. In many shops workers are asking: "What did we get? Our piece work rates are not increased; last Saturday we worked till six o'clock. Is this our union?" The terms of the settlement in the hands of the class collaborationists will prove a sell-out. A 10 percent raise in wages for the lowest paid, means, after 35 cents dues are paid, a 25 cent raise per week for a dress worker getting $8 per week. A 40 hour week is promised after Jan. 1, 1934. At present, 44 hours. In actuality, even at this early stage the dress bosses laugh at it.

The Stalinist policies which left the workers in the reformist unions, to the unrestrained mercy of the reformists are dismally bankrupt.

The fakers have had a free rein too long. Will the party comrades and its Left wing militants recognize it—will they adopt the realistic Leninist tactics of the Left Opposition? Only in this manner can the defeat be avenged and a victorious struggle assured for the future. LEON GOODMAN

Big Crowd Attends Successful Affair of Int'l Workers' School

Before an enthusiastic audience of over 1300 at the Town Hall, in New York City, at an entertainment program given Saturday evening, May 13, under the auspices of the International Workers School, Diego Rivera proclaimed his admiration and respect for Leon Trotsky as a revolutionary leader and as a military genius who is needed, now more than ever, for the defense of the Soviet Union.

The program included Maria Theresa, of the old tsardom Duman group, and Maria Winetzkaja, soprano, as well as a choral talk by comrade Rivera on his Radio City mural paintings.

Introduced by comrade B. J. Field, who also acted as translator, comrade Rivera declared that the art of the proletarian, representing a class which is historically on the waning, was necessarily superior in vitality and artistic value to the art of the bourgeoisie.

He illustrated his talk by drawing in colored chalks, first, the plan of Radio City as a whole, then the structural lines of his main panel finally the principal features of the painting, including the portrait of Lenin which was the immediate occasion for the Rockefeller attack.

The affair was not only financially successful, but added politically to the prestige of the Left Opposition. —H. J. F.

hours, 2 hours on the banking crisis, 1 hour on the role of "Trotskyists" in general and the rest of his speech he devoted to the German Situation. The meeting, one could see, was carefully planned in advance.

Herman, district organizer of the YCL, informed one of our comrades, in reply to their inquiry, that there will not be any discussion at this meeting. Lerner, a section organizer, threatened one of the comrades in the hall, two minutes before the meeting started: "You get up and ask for a discussion and you'll get carried out of here," and "I pity you when we get you outside."

This was the meeting for clarification, and this was the discussion. Hathaway, however, did see the necessity for a question period. So there was a question period in which the members were told to hand in their questions on paper. The comrades objected to such un-Communist tactics and Hathaway thundered that "all YCLers with Trotskyist ideas must be driven from the league."

At their units the expelled members hardly were given the chance to defend themselves, interruptions taking place whenever they would attempt to speak.

Fight Against Evictions!

"Organized labor now has the chance of a generation to fix wages into the general scheme of production costs and to promote collective bargaining. Labor leaders do not seem to see it, however. You as employers seem safe in assuming continuing stupidity of labor."

This cynical but clear-sighted statement applies with equal force to the movement of the unemployed. But the failure to organize powerful unemployed organizations falls squarely upon the sectarian policy of the Stalinists which resulted in the division of the employed and unemployed. Yet, great opportunities still stand before the movement today. With hundreds of thousands of jobless about to be forcefully thrown out of their lodgings, with relief checks drastically slashed by the city, great masses of the jobless can be set into motion to frustrate the starvation orders of Tammany Hall. The Unemployed Councils of Greater New York have called upon all workers, for all are directly or indirectly affected, irrespective of color, nationality or political creed to come in huge numbers to a city-wide demonstration against the attacks of the bankers and landlords—to raise their voices and their fists against the mass evictions and the reduction of relief.

The Left Opposition stands solidly behind this movement and calls upon all workers to lend their fighting support to stay the hand of the Tammany evictor. All out on Thursday, May 25th!

N. Y. Conference Against Evictions and Relief Cuts

On May 18, in answer to a call of the Unemployed Councils of Greater New York, a provisional conference took place to organize the struggle against evictions, relief cuts and to prepare a larger united front which is to take place on June 4th.

Represented at this conference were the Communist Party, the F. I. D. L., the Unemployed Councils, the I. W. O., the C. I. A., the Association of the Unemployed (controlled by the Lovestones), the I. W. W., and the N. Y. Branch of the Left Opposition which, although uninvited, sent three delegates, comrades Milton, Lewitt and Clarke.

The conference began by an attempt of the Stalinists to excommunicate the Left Opposition from the provisional gathering through a motion by Benjamin to exclude all organizations not invited in the call for the conference. They, the Stalinists, benevolently granted, would have the right to participate in the broader conference (where they could be swamped by the host of local party auxiliaries.) By this procedure, the I. W. W., also not included in the original call, would be barred from the preliminary deliberations. The protest of Cohen of the C. I. A. and Skenary of the I. W. W. succeeded in forcing the Stalinists to retract and passed the motion of Lewitt to seat all city-wide organizations present.

Next came the choice morsel of the meeting, if we may call it that. The Lovestones from the Association of the Unemployed, Rubenstein, took the floor to make the most reactionary proposal yet heard from the Right wing camp. He demanded that the conference be restricted to unemployed organizations only. (This would mean that the only organizations eligible would be the Unemployed Councils and the Association of Unemployed, the S. U. unemployed organization having sat out the conference.) Rubenstein further stated that his organization was unanimously opposed to the participation of any political groups (!) This Right wing proposal, which one would expect from an A. F. L. Itel baster, could only succeed in ousting all trade union bodies which have a huge unemployed membership, (dividing the employed from the jobless) and all political bodies which are directly interested in the relief question as a political struggle. Rubenstein's attempt to take refuge behind the backwardness of the members of the Association of the Unemployed was futile as he directly implicated the Lovestones group by saying that this stand represented the unanimous opinion of his organization. The conference opposed this proposal as a man. Rubenstein withdrew from the conference, adding insult to injury and splitting the conference.

The conference then discussed and accepted a draft call for action and for the June 4th conference. It elected an Ex. Comm. from which they succeeded in barring the Left Opposition. As its part in this struggle the Left Opposition had pledged all its forces, the use of its headquarters for information and congregation to the jobless in the fight against evictions and relief cuts. —GEO. MAIN RESOLUTION OUTLINES BROAD PROGRAM OF ACTION IN FIGHT TO FREE TOM MOONEY Calls for "Council of Representatives of Various Organizations with Different Views"

The Free Tom Mooney Congress, assembled at Chicago, April 30 to May 2, 1933, to decide on ways and means to obtain the liberty of that militant champion of the workers' rights, Tom Mooney, 32 years a member in good standing of the International Molders Union, No. 164, and to combat the increasing wave of similar persecution of workers, farmers, and the oppressed Negro masses, adopts the following declaration:

The heinous frame-up and condemnation of Tom Mooney to death, and later to life imprisonment, and of Warren Billings to life imprisonment in California in 1916, was nominally for a crime with which they had no connection; and this frame-up had to do wholly with the fierce economic struggles between capital and labor.

Framed up by private corporation detectives solely because of fearless leadership in the struggle for the improvement of the standards of living for the workers, the continued imprisonment of Mooney and Billings for seventeen years is an insult, a challenge—a declaration of ruthless class war against the workers of this country.

In the course of his long martyrdom, courageously endured in San Quentin Prison, Tom Mooney has become the foremost living symbol of the American working class. As such, he is hated by all of the enemies of labor; and, as such, we fight for him, determined at all costs, in the interests of the working class, to secure his liberation.

The imprisonment of Tom Mooney has become the keystone of a whole arch of criminal frame-ups, ruthless attacks and denials of the rights of workers, farmers, and the oppressed Negro masses. In the midst of the present economic crisis, which brings hunger and starvation to millions of American workers, the imprisonment of Tom Mooney by the ruling powers of California is continued by those sinister forces as part of the tactics of the American capitalist class to throw the whole burden of the depression upon the workers and farmers in lowered standards of living and denial of relief and to enforce the acceptance of this through a ruthless reign of terror.

These persecutions are connected with violent breaking of strikes, the cutting of wages, the fall of the membership of the trade unions from over millions in 1920 to two millions in 1932, a fall of total payrolls to 38 percent of what it was in 1929, the suffering of millions left to starve without social insurance, with women and children dying of hunger in the cities, with tens of thousands of farmers dispossessed of their land and driven to the cities to join the unemployed in fruitless search for work or framed up and tried before military courts.

Just at the frame-up and imprisonment of Tom Mooney was connected with the preparations for the entry of this country into the world war, so now the continued imprisonment of Mooney, and other victims of capitalist class justice, with the increasing sharp attacks upon all rights of the workers, are connected with the militarization of the jobless workers in forced labor camps on wages standardized at $1 per day while thousands of millions of dollars are squeezed from small taxpayers are diverted to the treasuries of private bankers, and the spending of hundreds of millions of dollars in the preparation of a second imperialist war by the capitalist nations and against the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Just as Mooney was first saved from the gallows by international action and solidarity of labor on the part of the Russian workers, just so the struggle for the liberation of Mooney and other victims of capitalist class justice becomes more than ever an international cause in which the workers of all countries of the world must be enlisted to fight.

In this situation, the world-wide demand for the liberation of Mooney's martyr, Tom Mooney, is taking on gigantic proportions.

The power of labor to release its imprisoned martyrs is increased in proportion to the successful strikes which are now beginning to demonstrate that the working class will not tolerate the lowering of the standard of living to a starvation level. The power of the laboring masses successfully to demand the liberation of Mooney is greatly increased at a time when hundreds of thousands of American workers, in bumper marches are a living proof that the American people of all exploited classes have reached a turning point at which they intend to resist aggression.

The joining of white and Negro workers together in defense against their common misery brings a vast increase in the strength of labor to compel the release of victims of class and race persecution. The organization and struggle of Negro sharecroppers and farmers in the South, no less than the joining of great masses of white and Negro workers together in struggles against unemployment in the cities, testifies to a growing solidarity which makes now for a greater strength in the struggle for the rights of the exploited.

The joining of the two mighty currents of protest and demand for the freedom of Tom Mooney and for the freedom of the nine Negro boys framed up at Scottsboro, is the historic mark of the developing strength of the exploited masses against oppression.

Brother Tom Mooney for 17 years the symbol of working class martyrdom, must now become the living symbol of the unity of the working class.

The need of unity is a life and death question of the American workers today.

Disunity in the Past
In 1916 the frame-up of Mooney was not answered by a united front of the workers. The labor movement remained divided and the corrupt use of the name of "Organized Labor" who conspired to hang this labor organizer.

The frame-up and sentence to death or imprisonment of Tom Mooney and Warren Billings would not have been possible if labor had been united for their defense.

Their 17 years of imprisonment would not have been possible if at any time the whole of labor had been united in one firm demand for their release.

For such disunity the trade unions and the working class have paid and are paying a terrible price. The legal murder of the innocent Sacco and Vanzetti was a part of the price of disunity of the workers. It could not have occurred if, prior to that time, the unity of the workers in defense of Tom Mooney had been established. Countless other acts of savage violence, frame up, smashing picket lines, attacks on unemployed gatherings, such acts of violence as have become epidemic since the World War, were made easier for the reactionary forces because the workers had not successfully been united to resist this attack expressed in the frame-up of Mooney in 1916. Through this breach of unity has flowed a torrent of tyranny in the form of injustices and deprivation of legal rights.

A Call for Unity
This Congress calls upon trade unions and all workers' organizations, on the exploited farmers, and on all intellectuals and professional people to form an agreement of cooperation for those objects on which it is possible to obtain united action for the release of Tom Mooney and checking the persecutions of the working class.

Difficulties stand in the way of securing united action which arise out of divisions in the ranks of the working class. Yet, at the present time, regardless of these differences, the needs of the working class call imperatively for united action to halt the encroachments on the rights and interests of the workers.

Therefore, even while sharp differences will continue to exist on many questions, between the various workers' organizations, it is necessary to bring about concerted action of all workers and of their organizations for certain immediate objectives equally urgent for all workers and workers' bodies.

We proclaim the first of these to be united action of all for the freedom of Tom Mooney and Warren K. Billings.

In order that such unity of action be made possible under present difficult circumstances of division between workers' organizations, it is the opinion of this Congress that to obtain such united action, those organizations which enter into such a united front shall refrain from attacks on other participating organizations on the issues and problems which have at times served as an instrument in the hands of those posals of the united front during the period of common action and while such organizations are formally carrying out this agreement. Differences of opinion on policies and tactics, of course, can and must be discussed in the course of working out the proposals for common action in order to clarify the issues.

Criticism of even the sharpest sort should be directed against any opposed to united action.

National Council of Action

This Congress hereby establishes a National Tom Mooney Council of Action—a United Front for Workers' Rights and the Rights of the Negro People. In doing this we declare our purpose not to form a body which will supersede any organization, but to bring about cooperation and united action of all existing organizations. We propose a council of representatives of various organizations with different views, but having the common desire to fight for the liberation of Tom Mooney and other victims of capitalist "justice" and for the democratic rights of the working class and exploited masses.

Such a council, particularly, should not supersede the Tom Mooney Molders' Defense Committee, the General Defense Committee of the I. W. W., the International Labor Defense, or other workers' defense bodies, but should strive to eliminate friction between these two bodies and to unite support of the fight for workers' rights. The Tom Mooney's Molders' Defense Committee should continue to function as at present, assuming special charge of Tom Mooney's defense under his personal direction. The Council of Action will support the Molders' Defense Committee through financial assistance and by developing the widest possible mass movement for the release of Mooney and Billings.

1. This congress is conceived not shall be concentrated on the Mooney Case.

4. All the agitation and activity in the next period shall be connected with the perspective of a second National Mooney Congress with a goal of at least 10,000 delegates.

5. The policy for all this work shall govern the activity of the leading committee on a national scale and all the local organizations is the policy of the united front of workers' organizations. Only in this way is it possible to unite the masses of workers of varying political opinions and tendencies into a single fighting unit in the interests of Tom Mooney and the cause which he symbolizes. The failure of the leaders of some working class organizations to participate in the movement up to now, and their persistent attempts to sabotage the struggle, must not in any case lead to an abandonment of the united front policy with respect to their organizations.

On the contrary, the leading organs of the Mooney movements must make it clear at every turn that all organizations and their leaders are invited to participate in the movement and that the door is left open to them even if they have previously refused. Only in this way will it be possible to really rally the masses of workers within the various organizations and give them proper ground upon which to fight every attempt of the leadership to sabotage unity.

Heckert 'Explains' the Debacle

"Hypocrites will be found to say the Opposition is criticizing the party which has fallen into the hands of the executioner. Blackguards will add: the Opposition is helping the executioner. By combining a specious sentimentalism with venomous falsehood the Stalinists will endeavor to hide the Central Committee behind the apparatus, the apparatus behind the party, to eliminate the question of responsibility for the false strategy, for the disastrous regime, for the criminal leadership: that means helping the executioners of today and tomorrow."—Trotzky: "The Tragedy of the German Proletariat." (The Militant, April 8, 1933.)

"But the S. P. G. has nevertheless found an ally. This ally is Trotsky. Being a political zero in the workers' movement he has nothing to lose; he goes licking the Fascists' boots, hoping to have himself talked about and to come out at any cost, even if only for one small hour, from political oblivion. Marauding scoundrel that he is, he drags about everywhere where workers' blood has flown in search of some political racket. The working class of Germany is suffering bloody sacrifices. Hundreds of Communists have been massacred in Germany, thousands of Communist and the best leader of the German working class, comrade Thaelmann, are imprisoned. But the ally of the Weisels and Leipnarts, Trotsky, expects his utmost in throwing the responsibility for the Fascist seizure of power from the shoulders of the social democracy on to those of the C. P. G. But what is the real meaning of the Hitler-Trotskyist platform of the 'united front,' conceived in order to justify the social democracy..."

"It is in this cruel fashion that the facts have exposed the counter-revolutionary meaning of the platform of the social Hitler-Trotskyist, who has strained himself to prove that the social democracy and Fascism are not twins but antipodes. Under the appearance of a united front, Trotsky, Hitler's auxiliary, is straining himself to impose on the German working class the social Fascist tactic of the 'lesser evil,' that is to say, the reactionary united front which helped Hitler into power."—(Fritz Heckert: "What is Happening in Germany?"—Rundschau, No. 10, Basle.)

Fritz Heckert, member of the C.C. of the C. P. G. has made his report on the situation in Germany to the E. C. C. I. His report has appeared in its entirety in the International Correspondence. It has been unanimously approved by the E. C. C. I. This only characterizes the "internal democracy" of the Stalinist regime. This demonstrates to what lengths the callousness of the Stalinist grave diggers of the world revolution has gone. Consequently it is not a dissonance with Heckert that we have here but rather with Stalinism.

Heckert poses the question: Why has Fascism succeeded in taking power in Germany? After setting forth the fundamental realignment of class forces brought about through Fascism, he goes on to prove, with wearisome scholasticism, the permanent betrayal of the social democracy. The policy of the social democracy leads the proletariat to ruin—that is self-evident. The vanguard of the world proletariat, saw that in Aug. 4, 1914. Today the question is not whether or not the social democracy has betrayed, but how it was possible for the social democracy to conduct such a policy for 20 years and yet succeed in rallying the working masses behind its banner. Heckert refuses to answer these questions. How did it happen that the masses who were deceived and betrayed by the bourgeois republic, should find their way to the Fascist counter-revolution instead of the proletarian revolution? The Fascist party is not older than the Communist party, it did not have more time to win over the masses. Evidently, Fascism disposes of the material support of capitalism, but its ranks are recruited out of human dust. Its ideas spring from the barbaric middle ages. It is not capable of solving social questions. Communism, on the contrary, bases itself on the force of the first workers' state on the earth. It groups around it the flower of the nation, the proletarian vanguard. Its ideas are the most progressive of the 20th century. It alone is capable of solving all the questions of social life. How then was Fascism able to triumph over the petrified Weimar democracy, how was Communism defeated?

"Fascism Victorious... and the C. I. Correct"

Heckert maintains that while Fascism was victorious, the policy of the Communist party was nevertheless altogether correct. The policy of the C. P. which led to the seizure of power by Fascism was correct. The C. P. G. had foreseen the inevitability of this Fascist development. Heckert says literally:

"Have the C. P. G. and the Comintern foreseen the inevitability of this Fascist development of the social democracy? Did they warn the workers in advance against it? Yes, they foresaw and they forewarned. As far back as 1924, comrade Stalin had already given a steady definition of the development of social democracy toward Fascism which has been unexcelled in its exactness and in its incisiveness, a definition which became the basis of the program of the

The Stalinist Hypocrites Answer the Roll Call

Comintern and the policy of the C. P. G.

"Fascism," said comrade Stalin, "is a fighting organization of the bourgeoisie, an organization which supports itself upon the active support of the social democracy. The social democracy is objectively the moderate wing of Fascism. There is no ground for assuming that the fighting organization of the bourgeoisie can achieve decisive success in the struggle or in the conduct of the country without the active support of the fighting organizations of the bourgeoisie. These organizations do not negate one another, but rather supplement each other. They are not antipodes, but twins..." (The fighting organizations of the bourgeoisie today lend their active support to the social democracy by killing social democrats, destroying trade union headquarters and suppressing the entire S.P.G. press. That is how this whole business of supplementing really looks—H. E.)

This development was, then, inevitable? Then the C. P. G. lied when it signaled the proletarian revolution as standing before the gates? Why did the C. P. G. exist at all between 1924 and 1933, if this development was inevitable? To be consistent in "building up its policy upon this inevitability," it should have been dissolved in 1924.

There was one voice which did not consider this development inevitable. That was the voice of Trotsky and the Left Opposition. Heckert knows it. He knows that its prominence and its authority are powerfully on the upgrade in Germany. Cognizant of this, he unleashes his bad conscience in outbursts of wrath of unprecedented shamelessness.

Heckert and His Straw-Man

Heckert begins this section of his speech with a dastardly misquotation. Revolutionary Marxism rests upon truth. Stalinism upon lies. Since the Stalinists are powerless in fighting against genuine that it is in the local units and not in the national committee that we have the struggle for immediate needs and that there the need for united action is the greatest. National or state unemployed organizations joining the federation should see that their locals take part in the city federations.

Build National Jobless Union

The Stalinist, who at first did not want a centralized federation, decided to support the amendment and one of their speakers, Lamson, had already supported the amendment. However, Stalinist delegates were open to reason and after some discussion with us changed their position and threw their support to the report of the committee which advocated an organization with the city, county, and state federations leading up to a national federation. The vote was 56 for the majority and 32 for the minority report. The final vote to adopt the disputed section received a vote of 73 for and 17 opposed, and then it was adopted as a whole unanimously.

The Committee on Program and Policies

The third struggle of importance in the conference revolved around the report of the committee on program and policy and tried to tear the committee to pieces and dismiss them. They especially took exception to the program's position on the united front. They did not succeed in dismissing the committee. They did succeed in causing two of the committee, who supported the majority report of the committee, to resign. The rest of the committee agreed to stay and fight it out with them as well as Guss of the Unemployed Councils who was to bring in a minority report on the question of work relief, a social insurance Bill and the soldiers' bonus.

The program and policy committee came in the second time with a unanimous report, cutting down the original program but actually only condensing its form, and stating so in their second report. Guss, of the Unemployed Council, in compromising on the minority report did so for the sake of unity, in order to be able to better fight the right wing tendencies fighting the report as a whole which the Unemployed Councils, in the main, supported.

When the committee made its second report, the struggle revolved around the formula of the united front. The struggle revolved around the following formula, presented by delegate Oehler: "In this united front each organization retains its organizational independence; refrains from slander and personal attacks against each other; but maintains the right of minority expression and freedom of criticism. Under no circumstances can the united front exclude an unemployed organization from participation.

"Trotskyism," they falsify the views of the Leninists and then fight against their own falsifications. Heckert lies when he says that Trotsky demanded in his article in the Manchester Guardian of March 22 (see the Militant of April 29) that the basis of the united front with the social democrats be the "defense of the parliamentary form of government and the mass trade unions." What did Trotsky's article really say?

"Social democracy is unthinkable without parliamentary government and mass organizations of the workers in the trade unions. The mission of Fascism, however, is to destroy both. A defensive alliance between Communists and social democrats should have been based on this antagonism."

What consequences did the Left Opposition draw from the existence of this antagonism?

"It is necessary to force the social democrats into a bloc against Fascism... No common platform with the social democracy, or with the leaders of the German trade unions, no common publications, banners, placards! March separately, but strike unitedly! Agree only how to strike, whom to strike and when to strike! Such an agreement can be concluded even with the devil himself, with his grandmother and even with Noske and Graevsky. On one condition, not to bind one's own hands." (Trotsky: Letter to a German Worker-Communist, Member of the C. P. G., December 1931.)

"We must therefore openly tell the social democratic, the Christian and non-party workers that the Fascists want to bring the downfall of the present (Braun) government in order to seize power themselves; we, the Communists, consider the present government as an enemy of the proletariat, but this government supports itself upon your confidence and your votes; we want to tell this government (Referendum) against you. If the Fascists should attempt an insurrection, we Communists will fight against them to the last drop of blood—not in order to support the Braun-Truenkle government, but in order to

To get the advantage of the fifty percent reduction the following conditions must be observed: the sub must come in on the card; the cards are sold from the center in New York in minimum blocs of four; they must be paid for in advance.

It is getting close to the dead line, June 1, when the sub campaign closes. Comrades who want the set of three volumes of the history of the Russian Revolution (first prize) and the bound volume of the Militant (second prize) had better hustle.

L.O. Meetings in K.C.

Kansas City, Mo.—In the second of a series of two lectures held in Kansas City, Mo., May 12, and 14, comrade James P. Cannon described the role of Fascism in the present epoch, and proved that its rise to power in Germany was primarily a result of the "united front from below." He showed that Hitler's victory had not only crushed the German working class for some time to come but also paved the way for a capitalist attack on the Workers' Fatherland. The revisionist theory of National Socialism was held responsible and Stalin was characterized as the "organizer of working class defeats."

During the discussion that followed members of the official Communist party, of which there were several present, were repeatedly urged to take the floor, but they remained silent and thereby lent weight to the speaker's contention that Stalinism cannot stand the test of public criticism.

The first of comrade Cannon's lectures, May 12th, was devoted to "America's Road to Revolution." In a clear, Marxian analysis of the world's economic situation he foretold the coming of a cyclical recovery taking place within the reground the flower of the proletariat against suffocation and extermination, in order to protect the workers' organizations, the workers' press, not only our own, the Communist, but also yours, the social democratic organizations and press. We are prepared to defend any workers' home, any printshop of workers' newspapers against the attacks of the Fascists. And we demand of you to come to our aid in case danger threatens our organizations. We propose to you the united front of the working class against the Fascists."—(Trotsky: "Against National Communism," August 1931.)

At the XI. Plenum, we recall, Manuilsky declared that only a bourgeois liberal can detect any contradiction between Fascism and bourgeois democracy. Is Heckert not "fundamentally" something of a "bourgeois liberal?" (From "Unser Wort")

SUB DRIVE

The sub drive is catching on. Subs are rolling in. The seeds sown in the German campaign are yielding a crop of subs. The proof of this is to be seen by three facts:

1. The subs are from new contacts in the main;
2. They are widely distributed geographically;
3. The list of Militant Builders includes the names of comrades and friends which never appeared in this list before.

The list speaks for itself:

The German working masses instinctively knew their enemy and were seeking the means of defense; but the leaders failed and disarmed the workers each in their own way. The social democrats prevented the workers from preparing the defense, cancelled patience and trusted in the constitution for which, however, they said they would sound the call to fight should Hitler violate it and resort to "illegal" methods. The social democratic leaders who had long ago given up their pretense to socialism and become completely bound up with bourgeois ideology had thereby also long ago abdicated the fight for the defense of the democracy. So when the last shreds of democracy went down in the torchlight blaze and gunpowder smoke, trampled upon by Fascist heels, their miserable position became fully revealed.

But Hitler found the Weimar constitution, written by the social democrats, sufficiently flexible to serve his purposes. He could, by the failure of his opponents, carry out all measures necessary to complete the first stage of the consolidation of his power, including the crushing of the Communist party and the throttling of the social democrats.

The Communist party leaders started from the absurd idea of concentrating the main line against the social democratic party as the twin brother of Fascism. It was precisely the deep antagonism between the social democratic workers and Fascism which should have been made the bridge to the united working class defense. But even this simple historical lesson had been lost to the party leaders. Their heated exaggeration of party strength and frivolous claiming of the general political strike could not become a substitute. On the contrary, it threw confusion and demoralization into the ranks and accelerated the party catastrophe. In the industries and within the mass organizations, from which the united working class defense should proceed, the party policy had torn up its own roots. Save for its election victories, which were empty, it was in reality isolated from the masses long before the decisive hour had arrived. So much so, that Goebbels, the new Fascist minister for culture and propaganda, could declare, in a speech on March 31: "We broke Communism with one blow and we have isolated the social democratic party from the people."

The Party in the Industries

How well was the party rooted in the industries? We remember that for some years there has been within every German factory, shop, mill and mine a factory council, established by the factory council law. This law, it is true, imposes definite limitations as to their powers but nevertheless they have been in the position of functioning as important organs of struggle. In a certain sense they have furnished an embryo structure of future Soviets. Naturally they should be an important basis for Communist party activities. And there is also the place to actually gauge the strength of the revolutionary party. But it is precisely in this field that its fatal weakness was most glaringly demonstrated.

In this we can now much more clearly perceive the disastrous fallacy of the so-called united front from below practiced by Stalinism. The actual results prove a thousand times stronger than words that this sort of policy contradicts all tenets of genuine united front policy. The so-called united front from below was only a mask to cover up the refusal of the Stalinist leaders to build the bridge of the workers' unity of defense, composed of all organizations, Communist, social democratic and trade unions.

Actual working class unity against Fascism under the conditions existing in Germany would have smashed all of the bureaucratic incompetent leaders. And in this the Communist party leaders, equally with their prototypes of social democracy, feared for their positions and prestige. But from this state of affairs Fascism gained enormously in strength and self-confidence and the social democratic leaders escaped exposure.

Elections to the Factory Councils

The factory council elections particularly demonstrated the Communist party's weakness. One can argue, and with considerable justification, that in the Reichstag elections held March 5th, the party could not at all mobilize its full strength because of the pressure of the Fascist terror. But within the shops and factories at the factory council elections matters are different. That is at the source of production and exploitation where the workers are the most accessible and where they respond in the most direct sense to a correct revolutionary program. That it at the very foundation, where the class struggle receives its dynamic expression. At the present time it is necessary to add that with the increasing suppression of all of the rights of ordinary democratic channels and the general campaign of terror the party was duty bound to increase its efforts to connect the more solidly with the masses in the industries. In turn it was to be expected that the contacts below would be the stronger expressed. The party, however, was not rooted in the industries. That was proven by the factory council elections held during this period of seven weeks. To attempt to give a picture, I am presenting a cross section of these election results, reporting mainly the larger concerns.

In the "Leuna Werke," a chemical factory and one of the biggest concerns in Germany, the factory council election results were the following: The Reformist ticket received 2381 votes, Communists 884, Christian trade unions 285, Fascists 2034 and Steelhelmets 1043. In the "Wolfen Filin," the second largest chemical concern, the results were the following: Reformists 942, Communists 1753, Fascists 439, Steelhelmets 158 votes.

In the Hamburg Street Railway council elections the Reformists received 4319 votes, the Communists 189, the Fascists 158, others 106.

At the Elevated Railroad in Hamburg the results were Reformists 1152, Communists 416, Fascists 160 votes.

At the Troisdorf Dynamite factory the Reformists received 1249 votes, the Christian trade unions 309, the Communists 189 and the Fascists 189.

At the Bremen Street Railway council elections the Reformists received 869 votes, the Fascists 190, the Steelhelmets 190 and the Christian trade unions 72.

At the Phoenix Rubber Factory, Hamburg, the Reformists received 1593 votes and 13 delegates, the Fascists elected one delegate, others none.

In the various Kiel factory council elections out of a total of 61 delegates elected, 57 were Reformists and 2 fell to the Fascists. These results are only a general cross section, if a more complete tabulation was to be made the results would show even less favorable for the Communists.

The Party and the Factory Councils

When we add the total votes cast in these factories where exact figures are given we have the following results: The Reformists scored a total of 13,098 votes, the Communists 3,493 and the Fascists 3,210. There is a serious weight expressed in these figures but not on the side of the revolutionary party, despite the elections taking place at the most acute moment of attacks upon the workers. That more than anything else perhaps gives the lie to the delusions of grandeur continued in the empty boasts of the party leadership conjuring up altogether non-existing victories in this field. Thus for example the Wedding party congress held in June 1929 declared:

"The factory council elections in which the Communist Party of Germany came forward for the first time in the sharpest struggle against reformism as the bearer of the united front of the organized and unorganized, became a triumphal march in the most important industrial fields and large factories." The labor masses elected countless red factory councils under the banner of struggle against the state power, the employers and reformism."

Nothing more, nor less. The only trouble is that it was an attempt to ascribe to the party a strength it did not possess which subsequently had to be admitted by the party controlled trade union Left wing congress. Such is the method of inflating one's own strength out of all proportion and simultaneously minimizing the strength of the enemy. It is typical of the self-complacent barefacedness, but it is mortally dangerous to the party as the events have now so clearly proven. Against this the Left Opposition has many times warned:

"The way to get strong is not to begin by the mistake of exaggerating one's own strength." Not only that, but the policy of consistently separating the militant minority from the bulk of the trade union membership in the factories by their separate red election lists, even though appearing under the grand name of "unity lists," contributed heavily to the isolation of the party and to the disorganization of the movement. One can say that though the party apparatus never followed a consistent policy it certainly managed to be consistent in its mistakes, even to the extent of disarming the workers.

from the John Reed Club and the Workers School said that they would have to refer the matter back to their organization after voting against point 5 of the resolution.

At the mass meeting held in Irving Plaza on Sunday night, May 14, the John Reed Club was not officially represented. It distributed leaflets stating why it was not represented, which amounted in effect to a charge that it had been gagged and prevented from expressing its own point of view. The hall was crowded to the limit of its capacity of over 600, and as many more were turned away.

Irving Plaza Mass Meeting

Comrade Abern opened the list of speakers on behalf of the Left Opposition, pointing out the class significance of the Rivera case and the necessity for united working class support. After several others had spoken, Phil Bard of the John Reed Club insisted on having the floor. He was finally allowed to have it, on the insistence of representatives of the Left Opposition, and repeated in effect that the John Reed Club could not allow itself to be gagged. Comrade Abern, speaking again, pointed out the incorrectness of the club's understanding of the necessity, as well as the limitations of criticism within the party. He offered an out-and-out, unapologetic "non-aggression" pact to the socialist party.

Comrade Rivera spoke in Spanish, with Bert Wolfe of the Loveston group as translator. The revolutionary artist went on to an appeal for the unity of the workers against capitalism and Fascism, and declared that his paintings represent the banner of the proletariat.

"Capitalist buildings here and in Mexico contain my works," he said, "but if you will it, and unite, the day will come when those buildings and all that is in them will belong to the workers."

"I beg of you to omit the name of Rivera from this fight," he concluded, "and when the day comes that something more than painting or talk is required—on that day, either with your good will or without it, if necessary against it, comrade Rivera will stand in his place along with the rest of the revolutionary workers."

Preparations were announced for an open-air meeting and mass picketing to take place on Wednesday, May 17. When the united front committee met again on Monday afternoon, the delegates of the John Reed Club and the Workers School insisted that the resolution previously adopted by the committee be read and voted on again, point by point. This time they objected, not only to the point against recommitment based on past events unopposed with the purposes of the united front, but also on point 4, commending Rivera for his courageous stand against Rockefeller. They were again voted down on both points.

Comrade Field, representing the International Workers School, stated that his organization, and undoubtedly many others were repulsed on the committee, were anxious to have the John Reed Club and the Workers School continue to participate in the united front (interference from a socialist delegate "Not we!"); on the other hand, there was a reason to fear that the speakers of these two organizations intended to act in a manner which would disrupt and defeat the purposes of the united front. He therefore proposed that the delegates of these two organizations, although they had voted against certain points of the resolution, state that they were willing to consider themselves bound by the points and would continue to participate in the united front on this basis.

This involved of course a retreat by the John Reed Club and the Workers School from their previous position that these points "gagged" them and deprived them of legitimate rights of criticism. But realizing the corner into which they had been driven, they accepted comrade Field's motion and immediately drew up a statement, which was accepted by the committee.

United Front at Columbus Circle

The Wednesday mass meeting and demonstration, while not impressive from the standpoint of size (some 1000 participants with banners at most) did represent a genuine united front of all sections of the labor movement. This was clearly pointed out by comrade Abern for the Left Opposition in opening the speakers' list, as well as the fact that we do not overestimate the importance as propaganda of the specific issue around which the united front was built.

Joseph Freeman spoke for the John Reed Club and Robert Minor for the Workers School. Minor's remarks, generally satisfactory, however, laid down the bureaucratic ultimatum line of the party—no revolutionary action except under the leadership of the Communist party—and was rebuffed for it by the following speaker, Herbert M. Barker of the General Defense Committee. The meeting was treated to the spectacle of a syndicalist lecturing a Communist on the correct application of the Leninist tactic of the united front. On the whole, the meeting did constitute a demonstration of unity on the issue of class expression in art, and particularly significant was the proportion of workers who took part.

Following the meeting, several hundred of the participants marched down with their banners and picketed Radio City, singing and shouting slogans of "Preserve Rivera's murals," "Down with Rockefeller," and the like. The police made no attempt to interfere, although a few obviously provocative plainclothes men were stationed around Radio City.

Finally the procession moved to 54th Street, in front of Rockefeller's house, and shouted in unison, "Unveil Rivera's murals!" After passing in front of the house several times, the meeting dispersed. The campaign has demonstrated the soundness and effectiveness of the united front tactic for which the Left Opposition stands; unity in action, without confusion of banners, without compromise to sectarianism on the one hand or to opportunistic "non-aggression" pacts on the other. FOR THE CONGRESS OF STRUGGLE AGAINST FASCISM

The victory of Hitler in Germany shows that capitalism cannot live in conditions of democracy, cannot even cover over with democratic trappings. Either the dictatorship of the proletariat or the open dictatorship of finance capital: Either the workers' soviets or the armed hands of the desperate petty bourgeois populace!

Fascism has not and cannot have any program of solving the crisis of capitalist society. But what does not mean that fascism will fall automatically a victim of its own contradictions. No, it will maintain capitalist exploitation by ruining the country, by degrading capitalist civilization and by continuing to introduce greater savagery into the customs. The victory of Fascism is the result of the inability of the proletariat to take the fate of society into its own hands. Fascism will live as long as the proletariat does not rise.

Social democracy delivered the proletarian revolution of 1918 to the bourgeoisie and thus, once again, saved declining capitalism. It is the social democracy and it alone which gave the bourgeoisie the possibility to lean, in the following stage, on the fascist banditry. Descending from one step to the other, in pursuit of the "lesser evil," the social democracy, inspired by the reaction of the reactionary head marshal, Hindenburg, who in his turn summoned Hitler to power, demoralizing the proletariat by illusions of democracy in decadent capitalism, the social democracy deprived the proletariat of all its powers of resistance.

The attempts to cast this fundamental historic responsibility on Communism are absurd and dishonest. Without Communism the Left wing of the proletariat would have, a long time ago, taken the road of Anarchism, or terrorism, or would have simply swelled the fighting troops of Fascism. The example of Austria shows only too clearly that where Communism is extremely weak and the social democracy reigns unchallenged in the ranks of the working class within the framework of the democratic state created by itself, its policy prepares, step by step, the triumph of Fascism.

SOCIAL DEMOCRATIC LEADERS LICK HITLER'S BOOTS

The top layers of the German social democracy are now trying to adapt themselves to Hitler's regime in order to preserve the remainder of their legal positions and the benefits that accrue from them. In vain! Fascism has brought with it a swarm of starved and ravenous locusts who demand and will obtain the monopoly of jobs and securities for themselves. The penalty of the reformist bureaucracy, a secondary result of the defeat of the proletarian organizations, represents the payment for the uninterrupted chain of treachery of the social democracy since August 4, 1914.

The leaders of the other social democratic parties are now trying to separate themselves from their German brothers-in-arms. It would be impermissible light-mindedness, however, to believe the words of the "left" critics of the reformist International, all of whose sections find themselves on different degrees of the same road. As in the time of the imperialist war, in the process of the fall of the bourgeois democracy each section of the Second International is ready to rebuild its reputation on the back of another national party. But basically they do the same work. Leon Blum supports the militarist and imperialist French government. Vandervelde, president of the Second International, has not withdrawn, as far as we know, his signature from under this same Versailles peace which has given German Fascism its present dimensions.

FIRST 4 CONGRESSES OF C. I. VINDICATED BY EVENTS

All the fundamental principle theses of the first four Congresses of the Communist International: on the decadent character of imperialist capitalism, on the inevitability of the decomposition of bourgeois democracy, on the impasse of reformism, on the necessity of the revolutionary struggle for the dictatorship of the proletariat, have found their irrevocable confirmation in the events in Germany. But their correctness has been demonstrated "ad absurdum": not by victory but by catastrophe. If, despite almost fifteen years of existence of the C. I., the social democracy succeeded in carrying the policy of the "lesser evil" to its final conclusion, that is, to the worst evil that can be conceived of in modern history, we must look for its cause in the fact that the Communism of the epigones has shown itself incapable of fulfilling its historic mission.

RLUNDERS OF STALINISM HAVE SHIPWRECKED REVOLUTIONS

Up till 1923, the C. I. marched forward in all countries, almost without a halt, weakening and ousting the social democracy. In the last ten years, not only did it not make any new quantitative conquests, but it suffered a profound qualitative degeneration. The shipwreck of the official Communist party in Germany is the fatal termination of the "general line" which passed through the adventures of Eshkonia and Bulgaria, through the capitulation before the Kuo Min Tang, through the not less infamous capitulation before the trade union bureaucracy in England, through the Canton adventure, through the convulsions of the "third period," through the break with the mass trade unions, through the theory and practice of "social Fascism," through the policy of "national liberation" and "people's revolution," through the rejection of the united front, through the banishment and persecution of the Left Opposition, finally, through the complete stifling of the independence of the proletarian vanguard and through the substitution for democratic centralism—by the omnipotence of an unprincipled and dull witted apparatus.

The essence of bureaucratism resides in the distrust of the masses and in the tendency to replace their conscious revolutionary activity by combinations from above or by naked commands. In Germany, as well as in other countries, the Stalinist bureaucracy posed continual ultimatum before the working class. It fixed for it, from above, the dates for strikes or for the "conquest of the streets." It arbitrarily fixed "red days" or "red months" for it. It ordered it to accept all its slogans and zig-zags without criticism; it demanded that the proletariat recognize its leadership in the united front in advance and without question, and on this monstrous ultimatum it based its struggle, intense from end to end and impotent, against Fascism.

NOT ACCIDENTAL ERRORS BUT AN ERRONEOUS SYSTEM

Errors are inevitable in the struggle of the proletariat. Through their own errors the parties learn, select the cadres and educate the leaders. But in the present C. I., these are not errors but an erroneous system which renders a correct policy impossible. The social agents of this system are a large bureaucratic stratum, armed with enormous material and technical means, in fact independent of the masses and conducting a furious struggle for self preservation at the price of the disorganization of the proletarian vanguard and its weakening before the class enemy. Such is the essence of Stalinism in the world workers' movement.

In the last years, the Left Opposition, before the eyes of the entire world, followed the Fascist tide in all its stages and traced a policy of true revolutionary realism. As early as the Autumn of 1929, that is, three and a half years ago, at the very beginning of the world crisis, the Left Opposition wrote:

"Just as revolutionary situations developed more than once out of the conflict between liberalism and monarchy, which later went over the heads of both opponents, so a revolutionary situation can develop out of the clash between social democracy and Fascism—two antagonistic praxes of the bourgeoisie—which will pass over the heads of both of them.

"The proletarian revolutionist would be worthless if he did not understand, in the epoch of the bourgeois revolution, how to estimate the conflict between the liberals and the monarchy, and instead of utilizing the struggle in a revolutionary manner, threw the two opponents into one pot. The Communist it not worth a copper who in the face of the collisions between Fascism and the social democracy, shouts down this formula with the barren formula of social Fascism, which has no content at all."

The policy of the united front should have been built on this general strategic perspective. Step by step in the course of the last three years the Left Opposition followed the development of the political crisis in Germany. In its periodicals and in a series of pamphlets it submitted all the stages of the struggle to an analysis, unmasked the ultimatum character of the formula "only from below," took upon itself where it could, the initiative of united defense committees, supported the initiative of the workers in this direction and demanded incessantly the extension of this initiative over the whole country. If the C. P. had resolutely set out on this path, the reformist bureaucracy would have shown itself impotent to restrain the pressure of the workers for the united front. Smashing up against a new barrier of each step, Fascism would have opened all its wounds. The local defense bodies would have grown irresistibly, in fact transforming themselves into workers' councils. Marching on this path, the German proletariat would have dealt a decisive blow to Fascism and with one last stroke would have swept away the whole leading oligarchy. The whole situation laid the basis for the revolutionary victory of the German proletariat.

STALINIST BUREAUCRACY TAKES PATH OF SABOTAGE

The Stalinist bureaucracy, however, took the path of unconscious but nevertheless actual sabotage of the revolution. They forbade agreements of Communists with social democratic organizations, destroyed the common organs of defense created by the workers and, under the name of "counter revolutionaries," expelled all the defenders of a correct revolutionary policy from its ranks. It could be said that such a manner of acting was especially created to isolate the Communists, to consolidate the bonds between the social democratic workers and their leaders to prepare the unobstructed ascension of the Fascists to power. The results are apparent!

On the 5th of March, when the fate of the proletariat was already decided, the E. C. of the C. I. not only declared itself ready for the united front from above—true, on a national and not on an international scale—but consented, so as to satisfy the reformist bureaucracy, to renounce mutual criticism during the period of the united front. A jump from incredible bluntness, from ultimatum presumptuousness to characterless concessions! The Stalinist bureaucracy, having stifled criticism within its own party, had evidently lost its understanding of criticism in the political struggle as such. Revolutionary criticism determines the attitude of the proletarian vanguard, that is, of the most critical party in contemporary society, towards all classes, parties and groupings. A real Communist party can no more renounce criticism, not even for a day, than a living organism can renounce respiration. The policy of the united front does not exclude mutual criticism in any case, on the contrary, it demands it. Only two bureaucratic apparatuses, one of which is weighted down with betrayals and the other with a fatal chain of errors, can be interested in the suspension of mutual criticism, transforming the united front by that same fact into a silent conspiracy behind the masses, the aim of which is their own preservation. We, the Bolshevik-Leninists, say that never and under no conditions will we join in such a conspiracy; on the contrary, we will unrelentingly denounce it to the workers.

SURRENDER CRITICISM BUT RETAIN "SOCIAL FASCISM"

At the same time that it consents to renounce criticism, the Stalinist bureaucracy seizes upon the repulsive boot-licking of Wells, Leipart and Co. before Hitler to revive the theory of social Fascism. In reality, this theory remains as false today as it was yesterday. Those who were only recently the masters of Germany, fallen under the boot of Fascism, are licking this boot in order to gain indulgence from the Fascists; that corresponds exactly to the miserable nature of the reformist bureaucracy. But that does not at all signify that there is no difference for the reformists between democracy and the Fascist boot, and that the social democratic masses are not capable of struggling against Fascism when an issue is opened for them on the arena of struggle.

FASCISM BUILT ON LIES; COMMUNISM ON TRUTH

The policy of Fascism rests upon demagoguery, lies and blunder. The revolutionary policy can only build on truth. That is why we are obliged to condemn resolutely the Organization Bureau for the convocation of the present congress, which has given, in its appeal, an optimistically false picture of the state of things in Germany, speaking of the powerful development of the anti-Fascist struggle. In reality, for the moment, the German workers are retreating in complete disorder without fighting. Such is the bitter fact which cannot be blurred by words. In order to stand on its feet, to regroup and to concentrate its forces the proletariat, represented by its vanguard, must understand what has happened. Away with illusions! They are precisely the illusions which led to the catastrophe. We must say what is, clearly, honestly, openly.

The situation in Germany is profoundly tragic. The butcher has only begun his work. The victims will be legion. Hundreds and thousands of workers in the Communist party are imprisoned. Severe tests await those who remain faithful to their banner. The honest workers of the entire world are giving their whole-hearted sympathy to the victims of the Fascist butcher. But it will be the height of hypocrisy to demand silence on the fatal policy of Stalinism because its German representatives have at the same time become its victims. Great historic problems are not settled by sentimentalism. The supreme law of the struggle is to conform to the end goal. Only the Marxist explanation of all that has happened can imbue the vanguard with self-confidence. It does not suffice for it to express its sympathies for its victims, it must become stronger in order to overthrow and strangle the butcher. German Fascism slavishly follows the Italian example. That, however, does not signify that power is assured to Hitler for a series of years, as was the case with Mussolini. Fascist Germany starts out on its history in conditions of a very advanced capitalist disintegration, of mass misery unprecedented in modern history and of a three tening tension in international relations. The demagogue can come very much sooner than the masters of the day think. It will, however, not come of itself. A revolutionary shock is needed.

NO MIRACLES; ONLY WORKERS CAN DEFEAT FASCISM

The social democratic press places great hopes in the existence of cracks in the German government bloc. Along this same path, fundamentally, marches the Pravda of Moscow, which only yesterday denied the existence of antagonism between Fascism and the social democracy but today commits on the antagonism between Hitler and Hugenberg. Contradictions in the ruling camp are undeniable. But they in themselves are powerless, insofar as it is a matter of arresting the victorious development of the Fascist dictatorship which is dependent upon the whole situation of German capitalism. We must not expect miracles. Only the proletariat can put an end to Fascism. So that the latter can proceed on to the broad historic path, a decisive turn is necessary in the field of revolutionary leadership. It is necessary to return to the policy of Marx and Lenin. We, Bolshevik-Leninists, do not come to this congress to entertain any illusions whatsoever, nor to save false reputations. Our aim is to clear the road for the future. Naturally, we do not doubt that tens and perhaps hundreds of thousands of workers are seriously prepared for struggle will be represented at this congress. No less are we inclined to believe that the delegates will be seriously disposed in their majority, to do everything possible so as to crush Fascism. Nevertheless, the congress itself, in the manner in which it has been conceived and called to order, cannot, we are profoundly convinced, bear serious revolutionary significance. Fascism is a formidable enemy. To struggle against it we need compact masses of workers well organized and well directed. We need a firm basis in the shops and in the unions. We need the confidence of the masses in a leadership that has been tested by the experience of struggle. The problem is not solved by solemn speeches nor by sensational promises. This congress, hastily improvised, represents isolated groups without any links between them, who after the congress will be just as isolated as before it from the millions of proletarians.

CONGRESS AGAIN COLORED BY INTELLIGENTSIA

The "isolated" individuals from the intellectual bourgeois circles will color the anti-Fascist Congress as they colored the Amsterdam Congress. It is not a very pleasant color. The advanced workers, who are the best representatives of science, literature and art have for them. But from that it does not at all follow that the radical scientists or artists are capable of replacing the mass organizations or of undertaking to lead the proletariat. And yet this congress pretends to leadership! Those representatives of the bourgeois intelligentsia who really desire to participate in the revolutionary struggle should begin by clearly defining their program and by attaching themselves to a workers organization. In other words, in order to have the right to vote at a congress of the fighting proletariat, the "isolated" must cease to be isolated.

Neither the work against nor the march against Fascism requires any special art which lies beyond any general struggle of the proletariat. The organization which is incapable of analyzing precisely the situation, of leading the daily defensive and offensive battles, of gathering about it the broadest masses, of achieving unity in defensive actions with the reformist workers, unbinding them at the same time of their reformist prejudices—such an organization will inevitably suffer shipwreck in the face of war as well as of Fascism.

AMSTERDAM CONGRESS MISERABLE FAILURE

The Amsterdam Congress has shown already its inconsistency in the course of the offensive of the Japanese bandits against China. Even in the domain of agitation, the alliance of the Stalinist bureaucracy with the isolated pacifists has not achieved anything substantial. It must be said openly: the anti-Fascist Congress, which in its international composition, is much rather an accidental meeting, is called to create an appearance of action, just where action itself has defied. If, conforming to the project of its organizers, the Congress contents itself with a barren appeal, in the history of the struggle against Fascism it risks becoming not only a zero but a negative quantity, for the most serious crime in present conditions is to lead the workers into error about their actual forces and the real methods of struggle.

Only on one condition, can the Congress of Struggle Against Fascism play a progressive although modest role; if it shakes off the hypothesis of the bureaucratic impostors who stand behind the scenes, and puts on the agenda a free discussion on the causes of the victory of German Fascism, on the responsibility of the leading proletarian organizations and on a true program of revolutionary struggle. It is by taking this path, and this one only that the congress will become a factor of revolutionary renaissance.

The platform of the International Left Opposition gives the only correct directives for the struggle against Fascism. As the most immediate and most pressing measures, we, Bolshevik-Leninists, propose the following:

PROPOSALS OF INTERNATIONAL LEFT OPPOSITION

1. TO immediately accept the proposals of the Second International for an agreement on an international scale, such an agreement does not exclude but demands the concretization of the slogans and the methods for each particular country;
2. TO principally condemn the formula of the united front "from below only," which means the rejection of the united front generally;
3. TO reject and to condemn the theory of social Fascism;
4. IN no case and under no condition to renounce the right to criticize the temporary ally;
5. TO re-establish freedom within the Communist parties and all organizations which are under their control, and those that make up the Anti-Fascist Congress;
6. TO renounce the policy of Independent Communist trade union organizations; to participate actively in the mass trade unions;

7. TO renounce the infamous competition with Fascism under the slogans of "national liberation" and "people's revolution";
8. TO renounce the theory of Socialism in one Country which nourishes petty-bourgeois nationalist tendencies and weakens the working class in the struggle against Fascism;
9. TO mobilize the European proletariat against Versailles and anti-Versailles chauvinism under the banner of the Soviet United States of Europe;
10. TO prepare through an open and honest discussion and to convene an extraordinary congress of each section of the C. I. within the period of one month, to examine the experience of the struggle with counter-revolution and to elaborate a program of action for the future;
11. TO convene a democratically prepared Congress of the C. I. within a period of two months;
12. Reinstatement of the Left Opposition into the ranks of the C. I., its sections and all the organizations that it controls.

AUSTRIAN WORKERS MUST TAKE OFFENSIVE

It is necessary to begin to undertake the discussions between the Second and Third International by putting the question of Austria in first place. Everything has not been lost yet in this country. By starting immediately on the road of active defense the Austrian proletariat, supported by the proletariat of all the countries of Europe, could, by the consistent and courageous development of the offensive, arrest the power from the hands of the enemy; the internal relation of forces in Austria assumes victory. A red Austria will immediately become a prop of strength for the German workers. The whole situation will change abruptly in favor of the revolution. The European proletariat will feel that it represents an invincible force. And only this consciousness is necessary to wipe out all its enemies.

It is the U. S. S. R. which occupies the central position in the struggle with world counter-revolution. In this domain, we, Bolshevik-Leninists, less than ever, subscribe to the policy of official optimism. In the bureaucracy all is well five minutes before the catastrophe. Such was the case in Germany. The same method is being applied also for the Soviet Union but the situation in the first workers' state has never been so tense as at present. The basically false policy of the uncontrolled bureaucracy has thrown the country into unbearable privation, has brought the peasantry into conflict with the proletariat, has sowed discontent in the working masses, has tied the hands and feet of the party, has weakened all the pillars and props of the dictatorship. The October Revolution has no need of "friends" who sing false hymns and repeat each word of the ruling bureaucracy in chorus. The October Revolution has need of militants who speak the truth, even if it is harsh, but who, on the contrary, maintain an unshakable loyalty in the hour of danger.

SOUND THE ALARM: SOVIET RUSSIA IN DANGER!

We sound the alarm before the world proletariat; the Soviet faithful is in danger! only the fundamental reform of the entire policy will save it. The program of such reform is the program of the Left Opposition in the U. S. S. R. Thousands of its best fighters, at their head, C. G. Rakovsky, at the present time fill the prisons and the places of deportation of the Soviet Union. From the tribune of this congress we send our fraternal greetings to our valiant comrades-in-arms. Their number is growing. No amount of persecution will shake their courage. In the difficult days to come the proletarian dictatorship will find in them not only wise counselors but also devoted soldiers.

The development of the international workers movement, and above all the European, has reached a decisive point. The German Communist party is smashed. To think of re-establishing it on the old basis and under the old leadership is a hopeless utopia. There are defeats that are irreparable. The German Communist party will now be built on a new basis. Only those elements of the old party, who have freed themselves from the heritage of Stalinism can take their place among the builders. Will organizational succession be followed in the development of the other sections of the C. I. in its entirety? History has apparently not rendered its final verdict on that. One thing is certain: very little time remains to correct the monstrous errors. If this time is lost, the Communist International will go down into history with the glorious Leninist beginning and the infamous Stalinist end.

We, Bolshevik-Leninists, propose to make the experience of the fall of German Communism a point of departure for the rebirth of all its remaining sections. We are ready to concentrate all our forces to that end. In the name of this task we extend our hand to our fiercest adversaries of yesterday. It is unnecessary to say that in the battle against Fascism, in the defensive as in the offensive, the Bolshevik-Leninists will occupy their places of struggle in the common ranks as they have occupied them everywhere and always.

the illusions of bourgeois pacifism and to help prepare the slaughter of the working class.

For workers there are no "aggressor" and "defender" nations. For workers there can only be imperialist wars and revolutionary wars. If the Soviet Union is to exist as the workers' fatherland, the preparations for imperialist war must be mercilessly exposed. If the workers are to be forewarned against the coming butchery, it is criminal to play around with non-sensical dabbings on "aggressor" nations and "partial disarmament."

Finally, if the murderous aim of the capitalists are to be defeated, the working class of the world must be rallied into a solid, compact fighting mass by the Leninist tactic of the united front, step by step in their everyday struggles, and up to the unified struggle against imperialist war. The role of the American workers in this task is, in view of the world position of American capitalism, doubly great.

Problems of the Soviet Regime

(The Degeneration of Theory and the Theory of Degeneration)

Socialism developed to completion (communism) means a society without a state. But the transition period from capitalism to socialism demands an extreme strengthening of the functions of the state (dictatorship of the proletariat). This historic dialectic of the state has been sufficiently illuminated by the theory of Marxism.

The economic basis for the withering away of the workers' state is the high development of economic power when productive labor no longer needs to be driven and the distribution of human goods no longer needs any juridical control.

The transition from revolutionary dictatorship to classless society cannot be accomplished by decree. A state cannot be dissolved by special order but gradually disappears from the scene, "withering away" to the extent to which the powerful and culturally higher socialist society conquers all the living functions with the aid of its manifold and flexible organs which no longer stand in need of coercion.

1. The Withering of the State

The process of the liquidation of the state takes place along two different roads. To the extent that the classes are being liquidated, that is, dissolved in a homogeneous society, coercion withers away in the direct sense of the word, dropping out forever from social circulation. The organizational functions of the state, on the contrary, become more complex, more detailed. They penetrate into ever new fields which until then remained as if beyond the threshold of society (the household, children's education, etc.) and for the first time subject them to the control of the collective mind.

The general manner of posing the question does not change whether it concerns a single country or the whole planet. If we should assume that a socialist society is realizable within national boundaries, then the withering away of the state could also occur within the framework of a single country. The necessity of defense against capitalist enemies threatening from without is in itself entirely compatible with the weakening of state coercion from within: the solidarity and conscious discipline of the socialist society should yield the greatest results on the field of battle as well as on the field of production.

The Stalinist faction declared as far back as two years ago that the classes in the U.S.S.R. are liquidated "in the main"; that the question who will prevail is decided "completely and irrevocably"; more than that: that "we entered into socialism." From this, according to the laws of Marxian logic, it should have followed that the necessity of class coercion is "in the main" liquidated and that the period of the withering away of the state had begun. But such a conclusion, insofar as it has been attempted by some interested doctrinaires, was immediately declared as "counter-revolutionary."

However, for us leave aside the perspective of socialism in one country. Let us proceed not from bureaucratic construction, already brought to an absurdity by the march of development, but from the actual state of affairs: the USSR is of course not a socialist state, but only a socialist state, that is, a weapon for the building of a socialist society; the classes are as yet far from abolished; the question who will prevail is not decided; the possibility of capitalist restoration is not excluded; the necessity of a proletarian dictatorship therefore remains its full force. But there still remains the question of the character of the Soviet state, which does not at all remain unchangeable throughout the whole transitional epoch. The more successful the economic construction, the healthier the relation between town and country, the broader therefore should be the development of Soviet democracy. This does not constitute as yet the withering away of the state since Soviet democracy is also a form of state coercion. The emptiness and flexibility of this form, however, best reflects the relation of the masses to the Soviet regime. The more the proletariat is satisfied with the results of its labor and the more beneficial its influence on the village, the more the Soviet government attempts to be—not on paper, not in a program, but in reality, in everyday existence—the weapon of the growing majority against the diminishing minority. The rise of Soviet democracy, while as yet not signifying the withering away of the state, is equivalent nevertheless to the preparation for such a process.

National Youth Day: Fight Against War!

YOUTH MUST BREAK THROUGH SABOTAGE OF SOCIALISTS AND SECTARIANISM OF STALINISTS IN UNITED STRUGGLE AGAINST WAR. ALL OUT ON MAY 30th!

On May 30th, the Juggos, munition makers, war mongers and all the "patriots" will gather in the festive places of the nation to shed crocodile tears for the proletarian whose body rests beneath a little cross on the other side of the ocean.

They will talk of his bravery and his heroism in laying down his life to "make the world safe for democracy." But their eulogies are all lies and deceptions. The truth is now breaking through the fog of war propaganda. It was for Morgan's millions that the American workers had their bodies riddled with bullets. And it is for essentially the same purpose that a new war is being prepared.

The "war to end all wars" was but a gigantic rehearsal for a new imperialist conflict, more bloody, more wanton and more destructive than anything ever seen in the history of mankind. The jockeying for position, secret alliances, the race for armaments, brings Europe and the whole world closer to the brink of a world slaughter.

The fake pacifism of Roosevelt, the ill-concealed hypocrisy of butcher Hitler points unambiguously to a "holy" crusade against the first Workers Republic. Having destroyed the greatest bulwark of the October Revolution, the revolutionary German working class organizations, with the aid of the treachery and capitulation of the socialist

Revolt Gathers Against Machado Regime in Cuba

Another revolt accompanied by a wave of terrorism has broken loose in Cuba. The guerrilla outbreaks in the central and eastern provinces of the island are only one, and perhaps not the greatest of the dangers threatening the dictatorship. In the cities and especially in Havana, virtual civil war exists between the "A.B.C." student terrorist organization and the famous "revolver" at the service of the murderous pseudo-bonapartist Machado regime.

"Butcher" Machado is now singing his swan song and the vultures are already darkening the sky in preparation for the feast. A change of government means new concessions, new contracts, new loans, and a shake-up in those quarters where political jobs are given out.

With the increasing intensification of the crisis in the sugar industry, due to high tariff walls in the U.S. and Europe, the competition with their roving beet sugar industry of the consumer countries, and the ever-increasing warehouse surpluses, the Cuban government's financial income has been reduced to a minimum. For many months, school teachers and other government employees have been unpaid, but until very recently, enough funds have been available to keep the army and police "loyal." At last however it appears, even these, the almost sole remaining supporters of the regime, are wavering. Recent dispatches from Oriente Province report serious defections

L. O. & Stalinists in Toronto

The Two Faced Policy of the Centrist Bureaucrats

Toronto, Can.—Stalinist forces in Toronto revealed in glaring fashion the confusion into which they have been thrown by recent events when on Friday, May 12th, at Spadina Hall, they attempted systematically to break up a mass meeting on the German situation called by the Toronto Branch of the Left Opposition. The happenings of the evening came as a climax to a period of successful anti-Fascist activity on the part of Opposition forces, and this demonstration of official Stalinist ideological bankruptcy has made a deep impression in Left wing circles.

The meeting was called by the L. O. as an extension of the activities of united front conferences against Fascism, which included both Opposition and Stalinist representatives. Events had already given the former ample opportunity to expose the utter incompetence of the Stalinist leadership. A prime example was the serious suggestion of one of the Stalinist leading lights that the Conference send a delegation to the City Board of Control asking them to protest against Hitlerite atrocities. Again, after the Stalinists had succeeded in keeping comrade Jack MacDonald and Stalinist bureaucrats, Hitler grooms himself for the role of the super-Wrangler of the world bourgeoisie. The hour draws close.

Young Workers, to the Fore!
Most concerned and vitally affected by the danger of war are the young workers who will be used as cannon fodder to coin the blood money for the imperialist handits. It is they who must raise the strongest and most determined protest against the coming slaughter.

It is they who must say to the war mongers that they are ready to put an end to the system that starves them in "peace" time and must have recourse to war to settle their conflict for profits and markets. The young workers must show the exploiters that the guns that are placed in their hands will never be used against their fellow workers of some other nationality or race. That they will direct their weapons instead against the self-same exploiters, their real enemies.

Down with imperialist war! Turn the imperialist war into a civil war! These slogans will ring out on the streets of New York and over the rest of the nation on National Youth Day, May 30th. On this day the young workers and students must gather their forces for mighty demonstrations in defense of the Soviet Union and against the war plans of the imperialists.

Wave of Militant Struggles Sweeps Needle Trades

The Needle Trades workers are leading them to revolt. The ranks of the workers of various crafts show very definitely that an underlying current of militancy is coming to the surface.

The gains that have been won by the sacrifices of the needle workers over an extended period of ups and downs have completely vanished. The crisis has given the bosses the right of way to slash wages and increase hours without any resistance on the part of the workers.

But the tide has been turned. The intolerable conditions have pointed out to the worker the one way—the way of struggle. They saw one alternative: either to perish starving or wage a battle for some improvement.

These moods of the needle workers have been expressed in two recent strikes of the dressmakers in Boston and Philadelphia. Both strikes had been called practically in spite of the "good judgment" of the Vice-Presidents of the ILGWU in charge of those centers. The strikes have also been foisted upon the leadership of the NTWU, because of the lack of a positive and correct policy toward a united front.

The deep roots of unity imbedded now in the ranks of the needle workers, makes it absolutely impossible for the Stalinist leadership in the NTWU to pursue a straight path of wrong policy, without interruptions and breaks.

In spite of the comparatively good response of the dressmakers to the call of the strike both in Philadelphia and Boston, the right wing reformist press has hardly given cognizance to the struggles. Prior to the strike there was no prepara-

Protest Admission of Hitler Agent on American Soil

HUNDREDS OF WORKERS JEER NAZI ENVOY IN SOLIDARITY WITH GERMAN WORKERS

On Thursday morning a thousand workers demonstrated against the Fascist envoy Hans Weidemann, at the foot of 58th Street, Brooklyn, the Army Base. A few minutes before 9 a. m., after the meeting had been going for some fifteen minutes, an attempt was made by the police to end the demonstration, but this failed.

When the representative of the Y.P.S.L. got through speaking and the Chairman was about to announce the next speaker, the police, this time reinforced by plenty of dicks, began to man the workers. The workers put up a good fight, using stones and sticks against the clubs of the cops; many workers were caught by the horsepots, dragged through the streets and beaten with blackjacks.

The Army Base, housing a regiment of the Reformation Army were the onlookers all through the welcome of American imperialism to this third assistant butcher, Hans Weidemann, who though without the Brownshirts to defend him, was ably defended by the Bluecoats.

Despite this, he managed to sneak off the boat in the Harbor or to leave the pier by another exit. 10 workers were arrested.

The demonstration, though militant, was too small to have any real effect. The fight against Fascism must be broadened; as one of the speakers stated, "to include the laboring masses is needed to

Mooney Acquitted; Evidence Muzzled

CALIFORNIA BOSS CLASS EXPOSES ITS OWN FRAME-UP BY ACTION AT TRIAL. FINAL MASS EFFORT NEEDED TO FREE TOM MOONEY. NEW YORK CONFERENCE ON JUNE 18th

On Wednesday afternoon, May 24, Tom Mooney was acquitted by a jury called to hear an indictment against him which concerned the premeditated day parade bombings for which he was originally framed up. While the acquittal does not clear him legally of the original charge, it proves the entire unreasonability of it.

No worker in the United States, or in the world, can now doubt Mooney's innocence. No worker can fail to see the crass swindle of the boss class in this frame-up. The fake trial only serves to open up the eyes of still larger masses.

The indignation of all strata of labor against California class justice is pitched to a high key. The work of the National Tom Mooney Committee of Action cannot fail to swing labor behind them in solid ranks, if they pursue the Leninist united front tactic outlined at Chicago, conscientiously; if they challenge the leaders of the S. P. and the A. F. of L. before their mass following, to join in the fight.

Now is the time to bring the mass movement in the defense of Mooney to a successful culmination. Closed ranks in a successful struggle to free Mooney will open up a new period of working class ascendancy in the United States and serve as the starting point of a smashing resistance to the capitalist offensive on all fields of class struggle—the economic, on the political front—and in the defense of all the other victims of boss class oppression.

Workers Must Unite in Fight on Roosevelt Program

ADMINISTRATION MEASURES MEAN TO FORESTALL MILITANT LABOR STRUGGLE

Roosevelt has thrown two more ingredients into the mixture of liberal medicines from which he is brewing the cure for what ails business. He appeals to capitalists to raise wages voluntarily, and he proposes to them that they form trade associations for the regulation of the industry; for good measure, he throws in a bill for public works expenditure in the amount of over three billions. These medicines go to join the minimum wage bill, the shorter hours bill, reforestation, centralization of banking control, lowering of tariff walls, policies of international cooperation, "good will" and disarmament, and the rest of the reformist hocus-pocus with which Roosevelt is trying to still for time, with a great appearance of activity while waiting for some improvement in the economic cycle.

The basic outlook from which these measures proceed is that capitalism is benevolent, since he expects it to raise wages without a struggle; that capitalism is intelligent and foresighted, since he expects it to regulate itself on the basis of voluntary trade associations; and that capitalism is capable of cooperation on the national and on the international scale. This is the basic approach of the most seditious and discredited liberalism, that is, of the most primitive form of capitalist self-justification as typified by Adam Smith, which may be summarized as, "Let every capitalist act for his own best interests with the minimum of state intervention, and the results will be the best for the nation as a whole." This is the formula of the big bourgeoisie in the early stages of capitalism. Even in the classic home of liberalism, in England, the party that formerly stood for this philosophy, is reduced to insignificance, nor has it any power in a single major country today. It is a symptom of the political backwardness of America today that this political system is fished up out of the ashcan of history and served up in this country as the "New Deal."

The distinctive feature of the Roosevelt program is the combination of this reactionary—utopian theory with a practice which contradicts it absolutely—the increasingly direct union of the State with monopolistic capitalism, which characterizes the decaying phase of world capitalism. Even in the United States, the system of capitalism is being propped up by all kinds of governmental supports—subsidies, tariffs, loans from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, government loans to the larger farm operators, more intensive government intervention, banking, security issues, industry, and railroads.

L. O. Addresses Party on Elections in Minneapolis

Minneapolis, May 19, 1933—The local branch of the Communist League (Left Opposition) has addressed the following Open Letter to the official (Communist) party:

Every election should be a lesson in politics for every honest worker. In the free-for-all primary election the working class of Minneapolis suffered a political setback. Of the mayoralty candidates nominated, Bainbridge represents old line, boss controlled politics while Anderson represents small and independent business interests. Anderson's break with the Farmer-Labor party shows that he can afford to drop even the pretensions of being a "Labor Party" man. His administration would as it does now, serve everybody, including Big Capital, just as a small shopkeeper serves "everybody" from behind a counter. Outside the beer issue, the Farmer-Labor party program is so much like Anderson's that they have virtually withdrawn from the field after Lathrop's defeat in the primaries. Thus the small business leadership of Farmer-Labor reformism leaves in the lurch the masses of organized labor that make up this party. This should show to the workers in the Farmer-Labor party that its leadership and program is not for their interests.

The Communist party, the only party of the working class, is responsible for the development and advancement of the workers' interests in the class struggle, the source of all politics (political economy as Karl Marx called it.)

Attack on Furriers' Union

Police, Bosses & A.F.L. in Onslaught on Left Wing

The drive of the fur manufacturers against the workers has culminated this week by an agreement of some 50 bosses of the Associated Fur Coat and Trimming Manufacturers with the A. F. of L.

The spearhead of the attack has been directed against the Left wing in the attempt to force the workers out of their union and into the discredited International Fur Workers Union.

The drive was inaugurated a few weeks ago by the murder of Morris Langer, the militant worker and organizer of the Industrial Union. Murderous attacks upon the N. T. W. I. followed in the attempt to terrorize the furriers into submitting to the demands of the bosses.

Early this week notices were posted in the shops ordering the workers to affiliate with the A. F. of L. union, setting May 25 as the deadline. The workers in most of the shops immediately went out on strike, militantly demonstrating against the united front of the bosses, the tight wing misleaders and the police. Supported by the police, who have honeycombed the market, the fakers are distributing leaflets calling upon the workers to break their ranks and submit to the bosses. Ostensibly this drive is directed "only against the Communists," but this is only a screen to split and demoralize the workers.

The solid ranks of the bosses, the police and the treacherous right wing bureaucrats can and must be smashed by preserving the unbroken front of the workers. This struggle is not a struggle of the furriers alone.

In the Wednesday and Thursday demonstrations, in the face of police terror, the workers showed their determination to fight resolutely in defense of their union. Workers of other branches of the needle trades have joined the furriers in their struggle. The fight must be extended and all workers called upon to support the furriers against the attack. The defeat of the furriers would mean the extension of the drive against all progressive unions that are resisting the wage cut and speed up drives by which the capitalists are striving to get out of the crisis.

Workers, unite! Your interests and living standards are threatened. Smash the terror of the boss class and their henchmen against the furriers union!

The solid ranks of the bosses, the police and the treacherous right wing bureaucrats can and must be smashed by preserving the unbroken front of the workers. This struggle is not a struggle of the furriers alone.

In the Wednesday and Thursday demonstrations, in the face of police terror, the workers showed their determination to fight resolutely in defense of their union. Workers of other branches of the needle trades have joined the furriers in their struggle. The fight must be extended and all workers called upon to support the furriers against the attack. The defeat of the furriers would mean the extension of the drive against all progressive unions that are resisting the wage cut and speed up drives by which the capitalists are striving to get out of the crisis.

Workers, unite! Your interests and living standards are threatened. Smash the terror of the boss class and their henchmen against the furriers union!

LEAGUE ACTIVITIES

Unemployed Struggle in Youngstown

Youngstown, O.—Responding to the appeal of Youngstown Unemployed League No. 1, delegates from four unemployed organizations met for the purpose of issuing a united front call. Besides the Unemployed Leagues from Youngstown and Austintown, two Youngstown Unemployed Councils sent delegates to this preliminary conference. Thus two national unemployed movements were represented.

This preliminary conference decided to issue an appeal for a broad united front conference of all labor organizations in the Mahoning Valley on or about June 25 for the purpose of agreeing on a minimum program for united action in this district.

It was generally agreed that the basis for this minimum program would be the general points of immediate relief, unemployment insurance and the shorter work week without reduction in weekly pay.

A committee of four, consisting of a delegate from each organization, was selected to draft the appeal, issue it and place it before the various organizations to which it is made. This committee includes a Left Oppositionist.

The attitude and actions of the local Left Oppositionists will be generally determined by the spirit of Engels' letter to Mrs. Wilschnewsky on January 27, 1877. He wrote: "I think all our practice has shown that it is possible to work along with the general movement of the working class AT EVERY ONE OF THE STAGES WITHOUT GIVING UP OR HIDING OUR OWN DISTINCT POSITION AND EVEN ORGANIZATION, and I am afraid that if the... Americans choose a different line they will commit a great mistake." Stalinists, take heed! — H. N.

On this day, above all, we must not forget the criminal treachery of the socialist misleaders who drove their followers to the last world slaughter for the defense of capitalist fatherlands. For years the social democrats and their youth adjuncts have been mouthing fine phrases against the danger of war. On the foremost occasion to demonstrate the sincerity of their agitation against war, on National Youth Day, the YPSL leaders have sabotaged the united front and are preventing their members from joining the New York parade. This is the real face of Ypsel misleaders. Their struggle against war is nothing but lip-service.

Through its senseless, criminal tactics, the remnant of the "united front from below" and "social fascism" on the one hand and now their willingness to renounce all criticism of the Ypsel leaders on the other, the YCL is unable to profit from the discontent of the young socialist rank and file on this and other issues. Away with the false, un-Leninist policies. They prevent a real struggle against war by sowing confusion and prevent the break of the socialist rank and file with their false leaders!

Clear the road for the masses united front of the youth in the fight against imperialism war.

gether with its extent and violence, showed that the plans to disrupt the meeting had been carefully laid. The racket culminated in the singling of the Internationale by the disturbers, and a large section of the audience began streaming for the exits. A fight commenced, and for a moment it looked as if a riot were inevitable, but the combatants were quickly separated.

Then one of the Stalinite functionaries appeared on a balcony at the back of the hall and began to address his henchmen.

But our comrades, taking a leaf from his own book, howled him down and forced him to stop. Soon comrade MacDonald's stentorian voice was booming from the platform, and the audience began to quiet down. Shortly after the meeting had resumed, a squad of police appeared, but as there was fortunately nothing for them to do, they soon took their departure. In time, his audience swelled to its former size, and there was no further attempt at organized disruption.

In his speech, comrade MacDonald drove home the significance of the disturbance as a confession of official panic and ideological deflection. Comrade Spector then spoke again and stirred his hearers by reminding them that bolshevism and gangster methods had always been an integral part of the tactics against the L.O.

The last speaker was comrade Morrow, a member of the Y.C.L., who dealt briefly and forcefully with the issue at hand. (At the close of the meeting Morrow was informed that he had just been expelled from the Y.C.L., but was left in ignorance of the official expulsion for this action.)

Finally questions were asked for the usual array of puerile monthings were hurled at Jack MacDonald—why aren't you in jail, why don't you talk about Canada instead of Germany, etc., etc. Not a single question bore upon the question under discussion—the situation in Germany.

When comrade MacDonald had disposed of questions in good-humored fashion, comrade Spector offered 10 minutes to any spokesman the Stalinists might choose. The result was a diatribe from one of the party stalwarts—but without a word about Germany.

Such a display, coming after the clear and forceful exposition given by our comrades, had the audience divided between pity and amusement. The meeting closed with a thunderous acclaim for Lenin and the German Revolution.

The consequences of the evening's events, which set the strength and clarity of the L.O. in such sharp contrast with the stupidity of official Stalinism, have already struck deep. The bureaucrats have done their cause in the factional struggle incalculable harm. Several of their supporters have signified their intention of resigning, while others are determined to at least secure from their leaders an accounting for this piece of disloyalty.

Our comrades of course will demand an explanation at the next meeting of the anti-Fascist conference of this indecent breach of the united front. Honest elements among the "Left Wing Organizations" who disclaim association with the Stalinists are up in arms over the forging of their approval of this cowardly slander of the L.O. Altogether, the Stalin functionaries are in a very uncomfortable mess.

Their behavior on this occasion constitutes another heavy blow, struck with their own hands, against the waning prestige of their organization.

Needle Trades Struggles

Why the Stalinists Have Been Caught Unawares

situation is entirely contradictory to the first. I quote verbatim from the Freiheit report on the Pleum, May 16, 1933: "The coming strike must be organized on the basis of a united front between the members of the Industrial Union and the International and the unorganized."

First—"between the members of the Industrial Union and the International" again sounds like the united front from below. How does this tally with the first decision—not to criticize the International leadership?

Secondly—"united front with the unorganized." What kind of a body is that to conclude a united front with?

If we were assured, in any way, of a following from the unorganized to the extent of relying upon them as an active support of the Left wing in the dress trade, there would be no need of appealing for unity to the International. The greatest majority of the dressmakers are still the unorganized mass of workers, having no class instinct. It is our task to organize them first and teach them the A.B.C. of trade unionism as well as the intricacies of the class struggle.

The boasted "clarity" falls to pieces when we confront the real facts. The two strikes, in Boston and Philadelphia, were called before the delegates to the New York Pleum had a chance to get out of the haze of the long ambiguous speeches. The strikes found the Left wing entirely unprepared.

The weakness and instability of the decisions is further evidenced by the later declaration of the New York trade board of the YFUI, just one week after the publication of the "clear" decisions, likewise in the Freiheit. In point of fact the trade board voids the decisions of a week ago by declaring its readiness to confer about unity on the basis of one union! Reading between the lines this means, consent to the demands of the International—as a condition for negotiations to give up the NTWU.

"The propaganda of the 'third period' about the united front from below, about 'social fascism,' about company unions, no pacts with 'scab' agencies (reformist unions) had to be countered with a proposal that would assure the workers of the Industrial Union in its plea for unity. Were the Left Opposition proposals of 'inclusion as a body into the International without any discrimination' heeded by the Stalinists in their time the fight would have had a much harder task in rejecting the unity proposals.

Our correctness was borne out by reality, not only because of the exact formulation. We were correct because we foresaw the trend of events, the great need for unity not as a maneuver, but as a necessity to strike together at the onslaught of the bosses, to be prepared for the inevitable wave of struggle. We proposed an extensive and far-reaching campaign for unity rather than sending a committee on the q. l. to the International—a step about which the members of the Industrial Union were not even consulted. (The committee, consisting of Hyman, Bornbovitch and Gold appeared there on April 6.)

The hand-to-mouth which the Party leadership is handing out to the trade unions worked havoc. The attempt of the leadership to save its face and establish its infallibility pushed hundreds of disappointed needle workers into the clutches of the Right wing clique.

Now the union will suffer more and more under the blows of reality. Capitalism to the right wing is not improbable. And here it is not the leadership that must be saved but the banner of the Left wing.

The party fraction in the Industrial Union must demand from the leadership a bold and clear statement as to its readiness for unity, as to our proposal of reentering "on line" into the International, without discrimination, for the sake of fighting in the interests of all the needle workers.

The militant workers in the ranks of the International, anxious to accomplish unity and devoted to the cause of the needle workers, will welcome and understand such a statement. On the basis of such a statement, they will rally to the banner of the Left wing once more and carry it ahead in the struggle against reformism and the system that oppresses them.

OIL THE MACHINERY!!

The response to our appeal for help for the Militant has made it possible to look forward to the financial future of the paper with more confidence. In this big push forward the entire movement acted promptly and well.

But the records of two branches is outstanding. The Kansas City Branch has sent in $10 to date. But all honors in this drive go to the New York Branch which has sent in $300. To date it is around over $300. And it is not through yet.

But let no one have the idea that from now on it is all smooth sailing. This is a revolutionary movement, a young one struggling upward against tremendous odds.

Let us take an example from our own press. When it is oiled it works fairly well. That is how it is with the movement. It needs lubricants constantly. Money lubricates. Oil the machinery! Help the Militant! Take all the financial sparks and groans out of its machinery!

Statement of Jobless Leaders

Statement of the National Committee of the National Federation of Unemployed Workers Leagues

The effects of unemployment upon the American working class are the most immediate tasks confronting us today. Within the last four years of the crisis unemployed organizations of different types and different political shades, have sprung up in all parts of the United States. These organizations all have the same aim of organizing the unemployed of our class to successfully resist the lowering of our standards of living, to prevent hunger and starvation, to obtain adequate cash relief, unemployment insurance, the shorter work week, etc.

By the end of 1932, a number of these unemployed organizations realized the inadequacy of local and sectional unemployed organizations in dealing with the major issue of the crisis and unemployment and met at the Midwest Conference of Unemployed Organizations on November 19th and 20th, and formed the Federation of Unemployed Workers Leagues of America, with temporary offices of 9 and temporary offices in Chicago.

The temporary committee under the direction of Karl Borders, the Chairman, carried on the work and laid the foundation for the first conference of the Federation which was held at Lincoln Center, in Chicago, May 13, 14, 15. This conference, built upon the work of the Midwest conference was a national conference, much broader in scope and therefore, went deeper into the problems of our class.

No unemployed organizations of the workers who sent delegates, regardless of their race, color, creed or political beliefs were excluded from participation in the conference.

Revolt in Cuba

in the garrisons of several small towns.

The armed outbreaks appear to be inspired by the sector of anti-Machado forces which is favorable to American intervention. The principal leaders of the Opposition Junta wherein are represented most of the different bourgeois and petty bourgeois cliques are opposed to intervention at this time as this would interfere with their own hopeful plans for the distribution of political posts and economic advantages among themselves.

Machado's main support rests today on the governmental bureaucracy and the armed forces of the state power. The several national bourgeois groups and the foreign companies (with exceptions) as well as the proletariat and peasantry, are all desirous of his elimination. The very survival of the dictatorship for such a long period has been due largely to the conflicts existing in the camp of its enemies. It would be naive to expect any decisive action of the proletariat at the present juncture, but it is certain that Machado's overthrow would be immediately followed by sharp struggles among the various sections of the national bourgeoisie and the conflicting imperialist interests.

The Roosevelt administration has not yet determined on a definite course. The conflicting interests of the rival sugar companies are engaged in back-stage arrangements, and in dickering with the State Department and with Cuban politicians both in and out of office. Senator Borah and Hamilton Fish have declared themselves in favor of American intervention under the terms of the Platt Amendment. The recent appointment of Sumner Welles, assistant secretary of state, as the new American ambassador to Cuba, indicates a change in policy on the part of Washington although it gives no clear indication of the course that policy may take in the next few months.

The experiences of Nicaragua and Haiti are too recent to be easily forgotten. They demonstrate the indivisibility—for the imperialists—of intervention, excepting as a very last resort, in Nicaragua, after combatting Sandino unsuccessfully for six years, the U.S. Marines gave way to the more effective policy of diplomacy and dollars. The scandal growing out of the Haiti intervention is no less an argument against the same tactics in Cuba.

Although full legal justification for such action can be found under the Platt Amendment, the responsibility according to the U.S. Government, therefore, would in all likelihood be so onerous as to offset any advantages obtained.

General Menocal and the other bourgeois opposition leaders are all anxious to serve Wall Street and themselves by replacing the methods of Machado's crude dictatorial methods (products of a decadent pseudo-bourgeoisie) with some form of constitutional bourgeois rule, in which the different bourgeois and native capitalist interests can collaborate "democratically." Life however is destined to demonstrate the impracticability of any such arrangement, and in anticipation of its failure, preparations are already being made, strategic positions already being bartered for, whereby the various participants expect to derive advantages for the conflict that will follow Machado's overthrow.

The new reciprocal tariff agreement between the U.S. and Cuba is an attempt to reconcile these contradictions. Any such stabilization however can only be of a passing nature. Cuba being essentially a one crop country, presents an extreme example of economic contradictions which can find no permanent solution under capitalism.

Muste and Brookwood

A Review of A Type of 'American' Centrist

The first conference of the Muste movement took place on May 25, 1933, in New York. It was a call to all progressives and radicals of all shades in the labor movement. This was stated in the Labor Age of Feb. 1933, in an editorial called "Challenge to Progressives." The aim of the conference was to bring together all militants into an organization to fight the reactionary policies of the A. F. of L. bureaucracy.

In point five of this editorial the Mustetes stated: "Fight for the recognition of the principle that a minority opposition in disagreement with what happens to be the official position of the movement, has the right to exist in the movement." It further stated that unless "those who are temporarily in the minority have a chance to function, the unions must inevitably stagnate and die. (Labor Age, Feb. 1933).

Nice phrases. But who were the leading "progressives" at the conference? James O'Neil (editor of the New Leader), Algernon Lee, J. B. S. Hardman (Salutzky), and others of the same stripe, people who have always fought and helped to destroy every Left wing organization. How could they fight the reactionary policies of the A. F. of L. when they themselves were discredited in their own organizations for their reactionary policies? Only a progressive like Muste knew! However there were a few progressives, who could be counted on the fingers of one hand, who were not organized and had no influence. Some of them left in disgust before the conference had ended.

It is worth mentioning to the readers of the Militant that a worker introduced a certain resolution at this conference. I think he was the only progressive worker at the conference. The resolution was that progressives should fight against expansions in their organizations and for the reinstatement of those militants who were expelled by the reactionary trade union officials.

When this resolution came up for discussion J. B. S. Hardman, Algernon Lee, James O'Neil, the leading spirits of the conference, attacked it. O'Neil quoted from the "Third International" and finished his speech by saying that this resolution would bring scabs back into the unions. With this Muste agreed.

In reality, this resolution centered around the statement made in the editorial in the Labor Age cited above. To suit the reactionaries, the resolution was amended and crippled. The fake progressives refused to carry out what they themselves had written.

The conference adjourned. The Mustetes named their organization "The Conference for Progressive Labor Action." They began to prove their name immediately. The first act of the chairman of the CPLA, was the ousting of Arthur Calhoun, one of the Left wing teachers, from Brookwood, because he refused to sign what amounted to a yellow dog contract, which committed teachers, in the classroom and outside, to CPLA policies, and thus in effect made Brookwood a part of the fake CPLA organization. It was not enough that Muste had thrown Calhoun out of Brookwood. He conducted a violent campaign against him in the capitalist N. Y. Times and blacklisted him as a Communist. (See N. Y. Times, June 4-10, 1932). Who can say this was not militant progressive action in a Muste?

In the first year or two the CPLA made no headway. It had no appreciable workers in its ranks and hasn't had any to this day. The organization consists of intellectuals, pacifists, S.P. members and leaders who themselves need leadership. Realizing that the CPLA was a skeleton organization, Muste began to criticize mildly the A.F. of L. and the S.P. bureaucracy, in order to attract the more militant workers. Muste began to cover himself with revolutionary phrases.

The result was that his friends yesterday opened fire upon him and his colleagues. James O'Neil, a member of Muste's National Executive Committee, bitterly attacked the CPLA because of an article written by Sappes, who posed as a "Left" at that time, in the Labor Age on racketeering in the A. F. of L. Unions where the S. P. fakers constitute part of the racket machine. Have the Mustetes disciplined O'Neil? Oh no! They are not Communists. They believe in democracy.

Here is an example which shows how democratic is the CPLA. In 1931, Bert Miller, once the watch dog of the Stalinist bureaucracy who led the blackjacking of the Trotskyites in 1928, left the Lovestone group with a few others and joined Muste's outfit. Lovestone was too revolutionary for them. The Mustetes refused to admit them until they had signed a statement that they had no connection with the Lovestone or any other political group. These cowardly signed the statement despite the fact that one of the Mustetes took up the fight for them and advised them against it. "The statement was demanded by the revolutionist Muste and the theoretician of the CPLA, J. B. S. Hardman. The ex-Lovestones were so eager to join the Muste "mass" organization that they did not even demand the publication of this statement in the Labor Age. Just another illustration of democracy in the Muste organization. . . .

After a few months sojourn in the CPLA Bert Miller, together with Hardman and Lore, persuaded Muste to form a reformist "revolutionary" third political party. In July 1931, the National Committee of the Mustetes decided to transform the CPLA into a political party "suitable to the American scene." To secure a majority at the political discussion on the formation of the new party, Muste brought down a squad from Brookwood to vote for him. Lore said at this meeting that "the German workers would flock by the thousands" into the Muste party. The S. P. members resigned from the CPLA and most of the Lovestone group under the leadership of Benjamin went back to the Lovestone camp. The Muste third revolutionary party died a-borning. Since then Miller and his pal Leitch have also left the Mustetes. The reason given is that the CPLA was too revolutionary for them. Who has remained with Muste? Only those . . . Americanizing "revolutionists" like Hardman, Lore, Budenz and a few scattered assistants.

workers of all political tendencies—who are against Fascism!" The member of the YFSL, who spoke, said, "that sentiment for the United Front was gathering, if not on all issues, at least against Fascism."

The next demonstration—when Goebbels arrives—must include the masses! Communist party members, YCL members and a handful of socialists, mean nothing if they do not draw in the Trade Unions, etc., in the fight against Fascism. Only such a broad demonstration can bring home to the German workers the solidarity of America's toilers with them.

MAIN RESOLUTION OUTLINES BROAD PROGRAM OF ACTION IN FIGHT TO FREE TOM MOONEY

The Free Tom Mooney Congress calls upon all organizations of workers to join in setting up the National Tom Mooney Council of Action, composed of representatives of all workers' organizations which now or after the Congress may be drawn into a united struggle for the freedom of Tom Mooney and, as inseparable activities, for a united front for workers' rights and the rights of the Negro people.

Conditions of Affiliations

The conditions for affiliation to this Council of Action shall be:

1. The acceptance of the proposals here outlined;
2. The readiness of each organization to enter actively into mass struggle as a necessary supplement to legal defense and parliamentary activity for workers' rights;
3. The mobilization of local organizations for active participation in local councils of action to be set up throughout the country.

This Congress calls for a nationwide campaign to mobilize the working class in the fight for workers' rights and against all forms of discrimination against Negroes. Particularly this Congress determines to concentrate efforts on winning the support of the American Federation of Labor and of the International Unions affiliated with it, and of the Socialist Party. It instructs the Council of Action to address itself to and to confer with the leading committees of these organizations in a continuous effort to break down their opposition.

All negotiations with the A.F. of L., the International Unions and Socialist Party should be openly and frankly carried on with the knowledge of the masses. These organizations should be held strictly accountable to the masses for a continued failure to enter into energetic mass struggle for the release of Tom Mooney and for workers' and Negroes' rights.

In view of the urgency of the situation, the Congress calls upon all local unions, all organizations of the unemployed and local branches of the Socialist Party and of other workers' organizations, to affiliate themselves at once with the local Tom Mooney Councils of Action. The need for united action cannot be postponed. The independent action of local unions, Socialist Party branches, etc., can become a powerful force driving toward our goal of united action.

Mooney Petition

The National Council of Action is also authorized to proceed in co-operation with all organizations which can be brought to co-operate, whether endorsing this Congress or not, with a nation-wide petition for the purpose of obtaining millions of signatures to the demand for the immediate and unconditional pardon of Tom Mooney. Such a petition campaign, accompanying an active mass protest movement, can become a powerful instrument for arousing larger masses of workers in the struggle for Mooney's release and the struggle for workers' and Negro rights.

Local Councils of Action

This Congress calls upon all organizations here represented and upon the individual delegates to take the lead at once and upon their return home in preparing and carrying on local united front conferences with the broadest possible representation, particularly striving to draw in those organizations like the A.F. of L. and Socialist Party heretofore insufficiently represented.

Mass meetings should be held where reports are made on accomplishments of the Free Tom Mooney Congress as a preparation for forming the local conferences. These conferences should have as their task the setting up of local Tom Mooney Councils of Action and the inauguration of the local united front activity.

The National Tom Mooney Council of Action in co-operation with the various organizations should take the lead in the development of the nation-wide campaign for the workers' and Negroes' rights—concentrating now on the drive for the release of Tom Mooney and Warren Billings.

Mooney Day and Another Congress

The National Council of Action upon the basis of the development of a broad mass movement, through reports of returning delegates, local conferences, mass meetings, demonstrations and the petition campaign, will be able at an appropriate time to set a national and international Mooney Day of struggle for the release of Tom Mooney and Warren Billings. This will also become a rallying point in the whole struggle for Mooney's release. It should resist energetically any tendency to diminish the growing mass movement by merely formally setting a "Mooney Day."

Letters from Germany Reveal Truth on Conditions in Labor Ranks

The letters published below and hailing directly from different parts of terror-stricken, Fascist Germany, paint, in many instances, a black picture of the conditions of the working class and its revolutionary vanguard. This is a bitter pill for revolutionists to swallow, particularly those who have been fed on Stalinist polyanthra. But it is our policy to speak out what is, to tell the truth to the working class and especially the Communists. It is precisely these illusions, and these false painted pictures, at which the Stalinist apparatus has been so adept, that led the German proletariat to catastrophe.

We quote a short report from No. 10 of the Impreccor, ("Hundschau") to indicate how even after the catastrophe the bureaucrats continue their work of deception and falsehood.

"Many small section groups in practically all of agrarian Pomerania have been arrested down to the last man; despite that, the work will be carried on."

Who will carry on the work? The Storm Troopers?

"... The entire local group was arrested in Trebin... but the Communist local group will continue the work." (?)

No, our letters don't read that way. Much that is in them sounds harsh, but only upon the truth will we build our future strength.

—Ed.

Letters from the Rhine and Ruhr Letter from comrade W. in S.

The party is smashed here. Most of the units—at least 95 percent—do not meet any more. Many of the units no longer pay dues. There is no connection with "above." Since January 30, the Central and Western parts of the city have issued one leaflet (on the elections) and one handbill. Almost the entire district and section leadership has been arrested. (The entire leadership of the Central part of the city has been arrested.) On the 29th of March a transport of 60 to 65 and on March 30, one of 15-20 men. In the last two days, new arrests of some 40 men, mostly members of sport organizations, took place.

The desertion to the Nazi camp is very great here. I personally know more than twelve men today in the Nazi party who were former functionaries in the Party, the ("Red Front Fighters") Organization, etc. Among those is the former sub-district leader of the Young Red Fighters League. Resignations from the party are on the order of the day. Not only simple members but functionaries also are turning their backs to the party.

The arrested men are often used to scrape off the (illegal) placards. Those who refuse are tortured and deported. According to the information of a prisoner, their number has grown to 15 Communists and 6 social democrats. The police have also ordered certain known Communists and social democrats, still at large, to present themselves from time to time to scrape off the placards. Failure to do so this means arrest. The number of those who have refused is very small.

We are trying to make contacts with party comrades, so as to meet and discuss with them. The party comrades are quite amenable to our criticism. If we had the literature we could reach very many of them, particularly because the party neither informs nor maintains any connections with its members any longer. Now is the best time to encounter the party with our "ideological offensive" (a la Stalin and Co., only not in the Stalinist manner).

So much for today.

With the best greetings.

—W.

Letter from R. About Our Work

All the party comrades are very sympathetic to our cause. They come to us for advice as the party offers them absolutely nothing. We are issuing an information bulletin for party members, in which we analyze the present situation, give the reasons for the defections in the working class, show the mistakes of the party and trace the correct line for further work. Up till now we have not met with any resistance. All the functionaries are in jail.

At the present time the workers will not follow putschist slogans. They are all beginning to have an international outlook. They comment on the failure of the Comintern.

Here is a description of the situation after the burning of the Reichstag: While no one thought of resistance in Berlin, the workers here formed self-defense corps were arrested in the last few days, night and awaited the slogan: Insurrection! Everything or nothing! (The party education had led to that.) On the Sunday of the elections a long street battle took place between the Communists and the Storm Troops plus the police—with machine guns, armored cars, etc. (No paper reported this, many fled.)

With best greetings,

P. K.

Letter of Comrade Herta from S.

The worst are the deserters. They betray everyone. A crowd of us were arrested in the last few days through the denunciations of former Communists. There are 400 auxiliary police, who are schooled

Hail Red Flag!

The first number of the monthly organ of the British Left Opposition—Red Flag—has just appeared. We extend to our brother organ across the seas our warmest fraternal greetings and hope that it will succeed in becoming a powerful factor in clearing the road, uprooting Labour Party treachery, I.L.P. vacillations and Stalinist sectarianism toward the revolutionary victory of the proletariat in the homeland of the oldest of the imperialist powers.

In the use of machine guns, etc., in our city (400,000 inhabitants). The prisoners are now taken not only to concentration and "forced labor" camps but also to convict prison. Preventive arrests in the convict prison! We even know of a disabled war veteran who was dragged into a convict prison.

The S. D. P. has a miserable attitude. They allow themselves to be beaten and lick the butchers' hand. In many cities the S. D. municipal councillors vote to have Hitler and Goebbels named honorary citizens. That, however, does not hinder the Storm Troops from throwing these self-same municipal councillors into "protective" arrest.

In a near-by town the fraction leader of the N. S. D. A. P. (Nazis) declared that the municipal councillors were only a yo-yo Society with limited assets who had merely to raise their hand for all the decisions of the N. S. D. A. P.

There was a provocateur in the R. F. B. (Red Front League). I am giving you his name and you must warn against him in your bulletins. He is a certain D. who has already served 5 years in prison for theft and forgery. Up till now more than 50 comrades have been arrested and frightfully tortured because of his denunciations.

The agit-prop functionary from the central part of the city has been exposed as a spy and will now openly go over to the Nazis.

Now, on the state of mind of the petty bourgeoisie. The small shopkeepers complain about the cancelled orders following the anti-Jewish policy. The people say that they should not have acted thus against the Jews, they should not have closed their establishments. "The Jews are really not so terrible; the Jewish enterprises do not deceive the small shopkeepers as much as some Gentiles." This is the language of a section of small merchants who name a batch of German firms that have deceived them, up till now, they were never deceived by a Jew. They also say that healthy criticism of the deeds of the government should be allowed under all circumstances because the absence of healthy criticism is a sign of weakness! Besides this they all wish the pensions to be increased, the hunger decrees abolished and work given to the unemployed. If the working class constituted a strong subjective factor, everything would not yet be lost.

Peiping, China.

Since our last letter, although there was not any broad mass movement in China, yet important things have been going on within the party and the Left Opposition. There has been a continuous capitulation of party members—especially responsible officers—to the enemy, the Kuomintang, of late.

Many central committee members of the C. P. and Y. C. L., i.e., renegades—publicly issue their "manifestos" telling "countrymen" to wake up before the ruinous Communist Party of China.

Really, the party has no political program for the present and no action expressed for the present! The fantasy of establishing revolutionary power first within one or several provinces thru the peasants has been crushed openly, by and by, supply due to the continuous failures of the "plan of encircling and taking control by peasants" strength of Wuhan, Nanchang, etc.

But some excellent elements of the party have joined us or are in the major part agreeing with our view. Some have struggled with the party on questions of the establishment of "Anti-Imperialist League" running parallel with the party or Y.C.L. on the one hand, and the Anti-Japanese Mass Conventions on the other, the putchism of establishing "Soviets" in Kiao-Yan and Y-Choa (districts in northern China), etc. Some have already recognized the correctness of the third Chinese Revolution.

Some of the elements still remain in the party apparatus for our purposes, and take responsible work. We think that if they, as is generally the case, openly declare themselves to be Left Oppositionists, they are sure to be expelled and to lose their functions within the party. This is the reason why we do it in that way at present (for some comrades only).

As to the Left Opposition, both in the South and in the North, the situation is just contrary to what the Chinese "Fascist Group" (Blue Shirts) called "complete collapse of the C. P. Opposition at China." We are growing, though slowly. The arrest of comrade Chen-Du-Shin, (though a great loss, on the other hand, objectively gives us chances to make propaganda in the country and among the masses!

Comrade Chen and several active members of the L. O. had made a "fast protest" (hunger strike) against the mistreatment in the prison and the postponement of the "public court judgement." Now, the judgment time will come soon. Comrade Chen has written a "legal thesis" defending himself from the K. M. T. accusation that he "endangers the republic of China."

The Shanghai comrades are working under a "temporary committee." This committee, together with some comrades from North China, is preparing for a National Congress of the L. O. of China.

In our branch, the Shantung Convention of the representatives coming from the various districts of Shantung, was convened in January 1933. The L. O. Convention of North China met on March 6 to 9. Important decisions were made, members felt more armed with new inspiration. Nearly everybody among us is turning his activities toward the workers.

We are concentrating our work in three important movements: The German Revolution, the Anti-Japanese Imperialism movement, and the national assembly question which was "hotly" brought out by the bourgeoisie recently. A special number devoted to the German Revolution and anti-Fascist movement was published by the "The Vanguard" (organ of the Chinese Opposition).

The "Hitler-Trotskyist" United Front and the C. I. March 5th Proclamation

But Heckert is attacking a platform invented by himself and only attributed to Trotsky underneath, when he says that not even (!) a Weiss proposed such a treacherous platform to the C. P. G. I. No, but the Socialist and Labor International proposed to the C. I. on February 14 a "non-aggression pact" and the same B. C. C. I. which unanimously endorsed Heckert's report, in its reply of March 5 considered it "possible to recommend to the Communist parties, to refrain during the time of the common struggle against capitalism, from attacks against the social democratic organizations." The C. I. is therefore prepared to renounce criticism of the policy of the S. P. which in its own words, has led to Fascism. This readiness goes even far beyond the platform invented by Heckert and ascribed to Trotsky and then again attacked by Heckert as "Hitler-Trotskyist," "the spineless bureaucracy winces under the blows of a period which it does not understand. At that, it has an ineradicable opponent in revolutionary Marxism which makes it foam at the mouth."

Fascism has triumphed, the policy of the C. P. G. was correct. Trotsky has criticized this correct policy (which led to the victory of Fascism) and showed how the victory of Fascism could have been prevented, the workers' organizations maintained, how this struggle could have been led directly up to the proletarian dictatorship. This is what the "socialist-Hitlerite" Trotsky did with his "Hitler-Trotskyist" platform, in execution of a "social assignment from Hitler" as the latter's "auxiliary."

The Marxist revolutionary Heckert, on the other hand, maintains that the defense of the mass trade unions on the basis of a united front with the social democrats would have been a deviation from Marx and Lenin and would have meant going over to Hindenburg. Marx and Engels recommended—according to Heckert—that the trade unions be delivered to Fascism, while Hindenburg demanded the united front of the Communists with the social democracy for their defense! The Stalinists are proud that they have stuck to "Marx and Lenin..."

One sentence in Heckert's article forces us to beat the alarm. Heckert says:

"The present Fascistization of the German social democracy is no accidental interlude, but the road which all social democratic parties will go under similar conditions to those in Germany."

This is frightful! The Stalinists already today consider Austria, France, England as lost to Fascism! They have learned nothing from the German events! They have no desire, despite their manifesto of March 5, to take the path of the consistent Leninist united front tactic! They do not want to put the social democratic leaders under the pressure of the proletariat with this tactic and so to force them at least to enter into the struggle against Fascism! They do not want to prove to the backward masses in daily practice that it is necessary to break with the reformists if a determined struggle is to be con-deducted against Fascism. No, they consider the "Fascistization of the social democracy" as inevitable. That means that they consider Fascism as inevitable. That means standing by passively while Europe falls into social decay!

The Stalinist Hypocrites Answer the Roll Call

In order to prove that the policy of the C. P. G. was correct, that it did not, in contradiction to 1923, rob the proletariat more and more of all ability to act, Heckert is forced to resort to an arsenal of conscience-lies and to the incense of self-deception. The political system of the Stalinists, built upon lies, has collapsed in Germany. From this they draw the conclusion that it is necessary to lie still more profusely and shamelessly in order to conceal their bankruptcy.

Today the situation is such in Germany, that the workers do not dare to speak aloud in the streets. They do not dare to gather in groups of more than three in their homes. Heckert, however, lies to the international working class, saying that the workers at the A.R.G. (General Electric) have driven the Nazis from the factory and that the same thing is happening in ever so many other cities.

It is furthermore an indisputable fact that up to the last moment the party was blind to the danger of Fascism. So, for instance, a comrade Schwarz wrote in the Communist International (German edition) of January 10, 1933 (p. 19):

"The 11th plenum of the ECCI put an end to the artificially constructed principal contradiction between the bourgeois democracy and Fascist dictatorship, and by that means gave the Communist parties important assistance in the struggle against Fascism. The 12th plenum showed that so-called 'classical' Fascism did not and could not exist and that all the theories deduced from the history of Italian Fascism concerning the working class were bloodless abstractions."

Was the Party Prepared?

And Heckert lies when he says that the German Communist Party forewarned against the coming Fascist danger! According to Heckert, the C.P.G. was not surprised by Hitler's seizure of power. The party, whose innumerable functionaries were stuck into jail in short order, whose apparatus was annihilated in the course of several days, was not surprised!

No, according to Heckert, it had just begun, freely, "with its own forces," to organize some 300 strikes. Fortunately, he becomes somewhat more concrete in this instance and permits us to probe into these 300 strikes, of which 297 belong to the realm of imagination.

Heckert cites the strikes in Stassfurt, Harburg and Lubeck. What happened in Stassfurt? A one-hour protest strike against the shooting of the social democratic mayor, Kasten. The workers were aroused and decided to resist, but the reformists succeeded in stifling the militant sentiment in a pale demonstrative strike. According to Heckert, it was the C.P.G.'s "own forces" that organized the strike. In reality it was the impotence of the C.P.G. which prevented the transformation of this strike into a manifestation of power. In Luebeck, the social democratic Reichstag deputy Dr. Leber was arrested. It resulted in a general strike lasting several hours. Here too, the Communists, thanks to the conscienceless, bureaucratic policy of the Stalinists in the last 10 years, were unable to exert any influence.

What happened on occasions when Communists were attacked? What happened at the massacre in Elsen? There, where the real forces of the Stalinists were showed up in full size? Not a spark of organized resistance! What happened at the provocative parade of the Brown Shirts before the Karl Liebknecht House, and at the street battle in Altona? Where did the party succeed in organizing a sizable strike of political significance? Lies, nothing but lies...

According to Heckert, the party did not restrict itself to organizing the united front "from below." We will restrict ourselves to once more quote from the literature of Stalinists.

"It is clear that no united front can be made with these people (social Fascists). It is clear that our dispute with social Fascism... will not be settled at one negotiation table, but on the battlefields of the final struggle and before the revolutionary tribunals of the German Soviet republic. And that holds, of course, for the little social Fascist factory councillor... just as well as for his bigger brothers Zoergel, Severing, etc." (Communist provincial press, quoted in Hermann Remmele's article "Mark Time" (Schrifttafel), Communist International (German edition), March 1-15, 1930.)

"Herr Trotsky and similar 'counsellors' of the proletariat want to propose to the working class such a policy as would separate the struggle of the revolutionary party against Fascism from that against social Fascism and oppose them to each other. According to this recipe, the C.P.G. should give up the struggle against social democracy today and make a bloc with the party of Hindenburg-socialism, with 'Noske and Grezesinsky,' (Thelmann, Communist International (German edition), June 1932, page 253).

"Whoever demands today a bloc of the C.P. with the social democratic party helps the social Fascist leaders in the preparation and execution of their betrayal. Their role, like that of the social Fascist leaders, is an immediate Fascist role." (Muenzenberg, Roter Aufbau, Feb. 16, 1932).

A Few Things to Explain

Heckert appears to be unacquainted with his own literature. He only knows that the party several times flew into a frenzy and then quickly, on such a "theoretical basis," proceeded to make united front proposals. After that, when the party looked itself over and noticed that not all of its bones had been broken it once again fell into the old rut. It carried on like this until its bones were actually crushed.

If the party clearly pointed out the danger of Fascism and pursued a consistent united front policy then quickly, on such a "theoretical basis," proceeded to make united front proposals. After that, when the party looked itself over and noticed that not all of its bones had been broken it once again fell into the old rut. It carried on like this until its bones were actually crushed.

With the "Left" Socialists -- from the Top?

The Communist International recently initiated and participated in an international united front against Fascism that even the Stalinist press is silent about. According to the New Leader, (April 28, '33), official organ of the Independent Labour Party of Great Britain an unofficial (!) conference of Left Socialists and Communists was held in Paris on April 25. It was initiated by none other than Henri Barbusse. Socialists from France, Britain and Belgium and Italy were present as well as Communists from these countries (except Italy), as well as from Germany, Czechoslovakia and the United States.

The Left Socialists at the Conference proposed that efforts should be made for a meeting of the Executive Committees of the Labour and Socialist International and the Comintern to consider ways and means of combating Fascism. This the Stalinists rejected. The latter agreed to collaboration between the Left Socialists and the Communists and urged the support of the European Anti-Fascist Conference and the Youth Conference against War and Fascism to be held in Paris on August 5th. (No notice has appeared in the American or international press of the Comintern on the latter Conference!) The Left Socialists agreed to support these conferences on the condition that they were officially invited and permitted to participate in their organization. This was agreed upon.

The Comintern which had rejected a united front against Fascism with the Labour and Socialist International, even refused to openly initiate a conference with the International Committee of the Left Socialist Parties. It again resorted to the back-handed policy of having Henri Barbusse "personally" arrange for such a meeting. Another sign of the much acclaimed independence of the Communist International!

Only a few days after this Conference which, we repeat, was conducted behind the backs and without the knowledge of the Communist and revolutionary workers, the Comintern issued its May Day Manifesto. Therein we read:

"Now we need the united front from below, not negotiations with the top leaders, with Wells and Renauld. For the leaders of the Second International, negotiations of the officials on top are merely a method of delaying, hindering and disrupting the united front of the working class."

United front with the Vander-velde, Adlers and Renaulds before the eyes of the socialist and communist workers—no! United front with the Brockways, Patons and Maxtons behind the backs of the workers, independent of the masses who follow them—certainly! This is the queer logic of Stalinism brought down to its latest phase.

—JOSEPH CARTER

Some of the elements still remain in the party apparatus for our purposes, and take responsible work. We think that if they, as is generally the case, openly declare themselves to be Left Oppositionists, they are sure to be expelled and to lose their functions within the party. This is the reason why we do it in that way at present (for some comrades only).

The factory councils are now compelled to beat a hasty retreat, in many places already passing into oblivion set aside by the Fascists; nothing else could be expected when the reformists are left in practically undisputed control. Here again they admonished the workers to remain neutral politically and not to fight. "Do not let yourselves be irritated, your rights and your duties and guarded by the constitution and by the factory council law," so said the Hamburg trade union leaders. And this at the very moment when the councils are brutally dissolved or reorganized, by the method of the worker elected representatives being jailed and tortured and replaced by Fascists. No, those who sat safely so far behind were not irritated, only frightened and paralysed. But even the reorganizations are only temporary measures. Not even Nazi councils, so close to the rank and file workers, where class ideology may again penetrate, can be tolerated. That the Fascist dictatorship is in deadly earnest about their attempt to destroy all working class organizations one need not doubt for a moment.

The Fascists and the Trade Unions lacks who are much more alarmed about the rank and file action than by the Nazi attacks and prefer to sell-out to the latter.

Their answer is leaders, in which they plead with the workers to stay at home and not to resist. "Congregating at the headquarters," said the Berlin leadership, "will be taken advantage by the Communists. What do they seek at our headquarters?" And the sad truth is that to the bulk of the membership the Communists have appeared as the disorganizers of the movement.

Thus the road is cleared for the Nazis. They pursue their destruction so far unhampered. Perhaps the clearest indication of how they proceed by stages to destroy the present union basis and to transfer the unions into pure organs of the Fascist state is given by the Bavarian government appointed by police commissioner von Epp. Its first act was the trade union decree in which the unions are ordered to "resume their functions," but on the following conditions:

They are to make no direct or indirect attempts toward contact with the prohibited political organizations, their late leaders or their members.

Their headquarters will remain occupied by the police whenever the authorities and such necessary.

All political activities are prohibited, the unions are not to hold any public meetings and regular membership meetings to be held only upon notification given to the police.

At any time the actions or decisions of the unions, including their finances, are subject to inspection by the Nazi established shop nuclei.

The Fatal Policy of the R.G.O.

In this work of destruction, the Nazis are proceeding quite unhampered as far as the militant minority is concerned. It is practically entirely outside of the trade unions, not merely by persecution or default but by deliberate and particularly now proven—false policy.

That is the Stalinist policy of independent "revolutionary" unions. As in the United States the T.U.U.L. so in Germany the R.G.O. only in the latter case it proved much more fatally and much more criminally wrong, due to the more advanced political conditions and due to the larger scale of the splits and of the isolation of the party from the masses. Otherwise the characteristics are common to both of these products of the "third period" era.

Trade unions to be effective must embrace all workers of the industries or at least a sufficiently decisive section. That will include workers of varying political opinions. The R.G.O., a rival union, based upon withdrawal of the revolutionary minority and based upon acceptance in advance of party policies and leadership, remained a paper organization playing no serious role at all in the class struggle. Its membership was composed only of Communists and only a very small section of the Communists at that. The R.G.O. could, therefore, not at all serve to connect the party with the masses, but on the contrary detached it and created a wall of separation.

The basic aim of the revolutionary party is to gain influence upon the working masses and particularly those organized in the trade unions. The R.G.O. became, precisely the most formidable obstacle to this basic aim. Numerically feeble, it could of course not at all substitute for the mass unions. It was unable to even influence them because it was distinctly a rival organization.

The R.G.O. could naturally not remain immune from the typical Stalinist bureaucratic methods either. One party member relates how in the early part of this year the whole Berlin R.G.O. leadership was removed and a new one appointed in its place without the slightest explanation made to the membership.

A fatal injury to the movement is the record of this R.G.O. policy. Its consequence contributed heavily to the party's impotence in face of the Nazi advance, to its being wiped out without a struggle and to the defeat of the working class as a whole. Long ago the Left Opposition demanded a change in this course and as, the only correct one, for the R.G.O. to immediately return to the trade unions in order to take up the Left wing activities within them.

That is still, despite all the positions lost, an imperative necessity. It does not diminish with the transformation of the trade unions into organs of the Fascist state. On the contrary, it increases in importance. So long as they represent a form of organization gathering workers within their ranks, they constitute a field for revolutionists to work in and to learn how to be able to do the work, skillfully, carefully—well planned and courageously executed. To fight every inch for the existence and functioning of the trade unions, to fight for existence and functioning of the factory councils, helping to give expression within them to the working class needs and connecting up therewith the democratic demands which inevitably must arise—that is the job at present. Now that Fascism is in power, it is an especial necessity to utilize every means available for flank attacks until the proletariat can again gather its forces. That the workers will respond heroically, has already been shown even in these difficult days by local strikes and demonstrations against arrests and against attacks upon the factory councils.

But the Stalinist party and Comintern leaders have not changed their course in regard to the R.G.O. It was commissioned to initiate the anti-Fascist congress scheduled to be held in Prague but prohibited by the Czechoslovakian government. Naturally, it is to be assumed that efforts will be made to hold the congress in some other country. But no matter where it will be, when initiated by the R.G.O. it cannot even mark a serious response to this gathering, not to speak of initiating subsequent actions. As far as a genuinely united working class action against Fascism is concerned, this congress called by the R.G.O. is condemned in advance to sterility and impotence.

The problem will become more concrete when we take into consideration the basic changes in the class structure for the period of the revolution. The dictatorship of the proletariat as an organization for the suppression of exploiters was necessary against landlords, capitalists, generals and kulaks insofar as they gave support to the higher possessing strata. Exploiters cannot be drawn to the side of socialism. Their resistance had to be broken, no matter at what cost. The years of civil war marked the greatest exercise of the power of the dictatorship by the proletariat.

With regard to the peasantry as a whole the task was and is an entirely different one. The peasantry must be drawn to the side of the socialist regime. We must prove to the peasant in practice that the government industry is capable of supplying him with goods on much more advantageous conditions than under capitalism and that collective farming is more advantageous than individual farming. Until this economic and cultural task is solved and we are very far from it, especially as it is solvable only on an international scale—class frictions are inevitable and consequently—also state coercion. But if in the struggle against landlords and capitalists revolutionary violence served as the basic method, in relation to the kulaks the problem was a different one; while crushing unmercifully the outright counter-revolutionary resistance of the kulaks, the state was ready to compromise with them on the economic field. It did not "dekulakize" the kulak but merely limited his exploiting tendencies. With regard to the peasantry as a whole revolutionary violence should have played only an auxiliary and what is more an ever diminishing role. The practical success of industrialization and collectivization should have expressed themselves in the moderation of the forms and methods of state coercion, in the growing democratization of the Soviet regime.

2. Political Regime of the Dictatorship and its Social Foundations

On January 30, 1933, Pravda wrote: "the second five-year plan will liquidate the last remnants of capitalist elements in our economic life." It is clearly evident that from the standpoint of this official perspective the state should have withered away completely during the second five-year plan, since where the "last remnants" (!) of class inequality are liquidated, there is no room for the state.

In reality however we witness processes of a diametrically opposite character. The Stalinists do not dare to assert that the dictatorship of the proletariat has assumed more democratic forms in recent years, but on the contrary, try tirelessly to prove the inevitability of a further sharpening of state coercion. Reality itself, however, is more important than all the perspectives and prognoses.

If we should estimate Soviet reality through the lens of the political regime—such an estimate, although insufficient, is absolutely justifiable and extremely important—we should get not only a gloomy picture but an outright ominous one. The Soviets have lost the last remnants of independent significance and ceased being Soviets. The party does not exist. Under the cover of the struggle with the right deviation, the trade-unions are completely crushed. The problem of the degeneration and stifling of the party and the Soviets has been discussed many times. Here we find it necessary to take up in a few lines the fate of the trade-union organizations during the period of the Soviet dictatorship.

The relative independence of the trade-unions is a necessary and important corrective in the system of the Soviet state which finds itself under the pressure of the peasantry and bureaucracy. Until the classes are liquidated, the workers must defend themselves, even in a workers' state, through their trade-union organizations. In other words: the trade-unions remain trade-unions while the state remains a state, that is, an instrument of coercion. The "stifling" of the trade-unions can only go parallel with the "destatization" of the state itself. This means: to the extent that the liquidation of classes deprives the state of its functions of coercion, dissolving it in society, the trade-unions lose their special class tasks and dissolve themselves in the "withering away" state.

This dialectic of the dictatorship, imprinted in the program of the Bolshevik party, is recognized in words also by the Stalinists. But the actual relations between the trade-unions and the state develop in a diametrically opposite direction. The state not only does not wither away (despite the heralded liquidation of classes), not only does not moderate its methods (despite the economic successes), but on the contrary becomes ever more openly the instrument of bureaucratic coercion. At the same time, the trade-unions transformed into offices of functionaries, have completely lost the possibility of fulfilling the role of buffers between the state apparatus and the proletarian masses. Worse than that: the apparatus of the trade-unions themselves has become the weapon of an ever-growing pressure on the workers.

The preliminary conclusion from the above is that the evolution of the Soviets, the party and trade-unions does not follow an ascending but a descending curve, if we were to accept on faith the official estimate of industrialization and collectivization, we would have to admit that the political superstructure of the proletarian regime is developing in a diametrically opposite direction to the development of its economic basis. Does it mean that the laws of Marxism are false? No, but the official estimate of the social foundations of the dictatorship is false and false to the core.

The problem can be formulated more concretely in this fashion: why was it possible during the years of 1917-1921, when the old possessing classes still fought with weapons in hand, when they were actively supported by the interventionists of the whole world, when the armed kulaks sabotaged the army and the provisioning of the country—why was it possible then to discuss openly in the party the sharp questions of the First-Trotsky peace, the methods of the organization of the Red Army, the composition of the Central Committee, the trade-unions, the transition to the N.R.P., national policy and the policy of the Comintern? Why is it impossible now, after the ceasing of intervention, after the successes of industrialization, after the collectivization of the peasantry—to allow discussion of the triumphs of industrialization and collectivization, of the co-relation between heavy and light industry, or of the policy of a united front in Germany? Why would any member of the party who demanded the calling of the next congress of the party in accordance with its constitution, be immediately expelled and subjected to persecutions? Why would any Communist who openly expressed doubt as to the infallibility of Stalin be immediately arrested? Where does such a terrible, monstrous, unbearable exercise of the political regime come from?

which went on record favoring this principle for the Federation. Three national organizations, two others in the process of forming national organizations, state organizations, sectional organizations and city organizations were present, representing 45 organizations, with 826 branches from 16 states and 28 cities from all parts of the United States.

After three long days of discussion on the problems of the unemployed, the conference adopted the following outstanding proposals:

1. The establishment of a National Federation of Unemployed Workers Leagues with city, county, sectional and state federations to coordinate them into one national organization. These organizations to retain their organizational independence, but to coordinate their organizations, through the Federation, in struggle against unemployment upon the basis of the immediate demands confronting our class.

2. The conference went on record favoring the establishment of the closest relationship with the R.M.P.L.O. through their trade unions, industrial unions, and all other working class organizations.

3. The conference went on record favoring the perspective of the establishment of one national unemployed organization, in which there would be no discrimination against race, color, creed or political beliefs.

4. The conference adopted its position on united action of the unemployed workers and defined it as: the united action of organizations, around immediate demands, in struggle where each organization retains its organizational independence, refrains from slander and personal attacks against each other, with the right of minority expression and political criticism; where no organization of the unemployed will be excluded and where continued effort will be made to draw in any organization that does not unite in action for our immediate demands.

The conference ended by electing a national committee of 15, with headquarters in Chicago, that is instructed to carry out the program, policy, resolutions and constitution adopted by an overwhelming majority of the delegates. After the amendments were adopted or defeated the reports of the different committees were adopted with the exception of the report of the constitution committee which was adopted by a vote of 75 to 15.

The following are the officers elected, with the vacancies for additional representatives from organizations:

Chairman, Tom Dixon—Workers Leagues.
Vice-Chairman, Cass—Unemployed Councils.
Treasurer, Statman—Industrial Workers Unemployed Unions.
Secretary, Leach—Workers Comm.
D. Harrington—United Producers of Washington.
V. Dwyer—Peoples Council of Bellingham.
Lamson—Unemployed Councils.
Zimmerman—Workers Leagues.
Hugo Oehler—Unemployed Union of Gillespie.
Truax—East Ohio Unemployed Unions.
Lowe—S.F. Mo. Unemployed Leagues.
Welsh—Association of Unemployed, N.Y.
Matlock—Workers Leagues.
Conners—Allen County Indiana Unemployed Association.

The national committee is compiling and is sending out the convention proceedings and decisions to all organizations that had delegates at the Chicago conference and to all other unemployed organizations in the United States. The return delegates will make their reports and will proceed to unite the unemployed organizations into city, county, sectional and state federations, especially endeavoring to bring into this united action those organizations that were not able to send delegates to the conference. The conference received letters of support from unemployed organizations from all parts of the United States that were unable to send delegates but gave the conference their full support and wished it success. We hope these organizations will be among the first to help in the formation, and support its program in action, which in no way infringes upon the identity or autonomy of the subscribing organizations.

Reference to outside danger from capitalist governments does not in itself explain everything. We do not wish of course to underestimate the significance of capitalist encirclement for the inner regime of the Soviet Republic; the very necessity of keeping up a powerful army is a great source of bureaucraticism. However, hostile encirclement is not a new factor, it accompanies the Soviet Republic from the first days of its existence. Under healthy conditions within the country, the pressure of imperialism would have only strengthened the solidarity of the masses, especially the working class, and the penetration of foreign agents, such as saboteurs, engineers, etc., in no case justifies or explains the general intensification of the methods of coercion. A social committee of common interests should be able to eject the hostile elements with greater ease, as a healthy body ejects poisons.

An attempt might be made to show that the external pressure has grown and the co-relation of forces on the world scale has changed to the advantage of imperialism. Leaving aside the question of policy of the Comintern as one of the causes for the weakening of the world proletariat, the incontrovertible fact remains that the intensification of pressure from outside can lead to the bureaucratization of the Soviet system only to the extent that it is coupled with the growth of inner contradictions. Under conditions in which the workers must be squeezed between the vise of the passport system and the peasantry between the vise of political departments, the pressure from without must inevitably weaken the inner ties ever more. And vice-versa, the growth of contradictions between town and country must inevitably sharpen the danger from the outside capitalist governments. The combination of these two factors pushes the bureaucracy along the road of ever greater concessions to the external pressure and ever greater repressions against the working masses of their own country.

SUB DRIVE

Since our last report 41 more subs have come in. As we approach the deadline of June 1 when the drive closes the volume of subs and the tempo are increasing. It is a hot race. Last week comrade Capelis was in a tie with comrade Caplan of Kansas City for the three volumes of "The History of the Russian Revolution," by Comrade Trotsky, which goes to the winner. This week comrade Caplan is so far ahead as to make it almost a sure thing for him. And comrade Dunne has shot up to second place. Not so far behind is comrade Kotz from our Newark branch.

This is how they did it. Comrade Caplan rung up a mere 16 to add to his former score; comrade Dunne added 18 and comrade Kotz 5. It shows what can be done—this drive does. It's the best one we've ever had. And don't overlook the single subs. We don't list them here this week for lack of space, but there are no less than twenty of them.

Here is the list:
A. Caplan, Kansas City. 22
V. Dunne, Minneapolis. 12
G. Kotz, Newark. 7
H. Capelis, N. Y. City. 7
J. Ruby, Chicago. 5
H. Oehler, Chicago. 5
W. Konikow, Boston. 3
K. Chapko, Bethlehem. 3
D. Marcus, N. Y. City. 2
A. Friend, Lynn, Mass. 2
M. Morris, N. Y. City. 2
G. Fathin, Chicago. 2
A. G., Chicago. 2

Fight Roosevelt Program

Communists must expose these maneuvers, place in the foreground the independent demands of the working class, and build the organizational machinery for enforcing these demands which is possible only on the basis of the Leninist united front of all working-class organizations.

The demand for higher wages and higher unemployment relief to meet the rising prices and the threat of inflation must be backed up by concrete proposals for a national movement in which representatives of the workers will determine on the basis of national and local considerations the minimum wage and relief increases which are acceptable.

Even such slight signs of economic recovery as are now visible (steel production up to 38 percent of capacity, the highest in two years; employment in New York State in April up 1.6 percent in March, and payrolls because of longer hours, up 4.5 percent) amply warrant a nation-wide effort for genuine unemployment insurance to be administered by the workers, as an immediate demand. The increased profits which would follow any kind of improvement, even if limited and temporary, must be immediately claimed by the workers on whose backs the burdens of the crisis have been piled.

The recognition of the Soviet Union and long-term credits to the Soviet Union must not be left to be decided on the basis of their opportunity for profits but must be posed as an immediate working-class demand which ties up immediate interests of the American workers with economic collaboration in socialist construction in the Soviet Union.

Discussion on Tasks in Germany

A broad discussion is in process on the tasks posed by the seizure of power by Fascism in Germany and the new situation created thereby. The central point of the discussion revolves around the question: Are conditions ripe for the establishment of a new German Communist party? Comrade Trotsky posed this question forcefully in his article: "The Tragedy of the German Proletariat" and in his polemic "The Collapse of the C.P.G. and the Tasks of the Left Opposition" both of which have already appeared in the Militant. In the present issue we are publishing a draft resolution adopted by the Reichsleitung (National Committee) of the German section on this question. Other documents and discussion articles which have already appeared in Unser Wort and other organs of the International Left Opposition are soon to follow.

Resolution
I.
Our old perspective on the reform

Resolution of the N.C. of the German Opposition of the C.P.G. has lost its validity in view of the failure and the debacle of the C.P.G. Reform is rendered impossible politically due to the depth and consequences of the mistakes committed and due to the defeat—organizationally, because of illegality. These elements which will cut loose decisively from reformism (social democracy) at present will not go to the old C.P.G. The organizational possibility which permitted the C.P.G. to survive for years its organizational decline cannot have its repercussion in an illegal party. Only a new political content could have forestalled its disintegration.

Two circumstances are at present working against rapid disintegration of the C.P.G. First, the material and ideological support furnished by the existence of the U.S.S.R. Secondly, the fact that while the results of the policy of the C.P., contrary to the social democracy of 1914, has gone into bankruptcy (objective treachery) but has not landed on the other side of the barricades; whereas the S.P.G. openly betrayed after 1914 and went over to the enemy. This is a fact which has its repercussions in the minds of the masses. In this sense, the designation of a new "August 4" is incorrect.

Although developments point to the line towards a new party, this slogan would be premature and false, as the National Conference has already affirmed. The principle obstacle today lies in the mentality of the masses which is as yet insufficiently awakened. Before the slogan of a new party is put forward it is necessary that the mentality of the masses must go through a longer process. Between the bankruptcy of the 11. International and the proclamation of the 11. International there was also an extended period, although in that case the question was not complicated by factors such as those enumerated in point 11. When it is a matter of putting forward a slogan, we should take into consideration what we have often said in the ultra-left leadership of the party in the last few years. It is not a matter of putting forward slogans which are generally correct, for the history books so to speak. This is what the C.P.G. did with the general strike in a classic fashion during the last few years, depriving this slogan, which is correct in itself, of all effectiveness. This can be done only when the corresponding subjective and objective conditions are given and when, on the basis of these slogans, men can be rallied around our objectives.

The psychological and organizational provisions for a new party are so lacking in Germany today that the presentation of the slogan for a Second Party will not only accelerate the regrouping but rather impede it. The altogether un-concrete call to the vanguard to constitute a new party will fall on deaf ears entirely.

The principal task of the Left Opposition consists today in promoting itself for the collection of material that will make possible the construction of a new party on the ruins of the two old parties; for the formation of cadres on the basis of a Marxist analysis of the past. The principal source for these cadres remains the C.P., as comrade Gourov has himself affirmed. The second: the social democratic party.

To issue the slogan for a Second Party today, when these cadres have not as yet become crystallized, neither in the C.P.G. nor in the S.P.G., means (perhaps by some "new Zimmerwald") to serve not the essential elements, but all the obstacles to development (the Bureaucratic, the Leninbund, the leadership of the S.A.P. (Socialist Labor Party), and all those who have already demonstrated their inability to lead the German Proletariat). The criticism of the cadres will and should develop in the direction of our analysis. The cadres should, moreover, learn to link up the illegal work with the legal work from the beginning and work in the existing mass organizations which as yet remain outside of the Fascist party.

The slogan for a new party will mean that we will have to pose the demand for the destruction of the old party. This demand would be rejected with indignation even by the more critical elements. They must be convinced in the course of struggle with the bureaucracy and the clarification around the formation of cadres. They must see the necessity for this step. The question is posed in the same manner in the S.P. and the S.A.P., although for the former of the two the demand for destruction is already posed today. The struggle for cadres brings us closer to the critical elements within the party. The demand for a Second Party separates us from them.

Only among the old ultra-leftists and in the letters of Gourov* can we observe elements of indignation to the point of parting with us, if we do not issue the slogan for a new party.

While the slogan for a Second Party does not advance our cause by an iota among the semi-critical elements in the party, it will not even embrace the completely critical and disillusioned elements. For them the idea of the party is so compromised that they think of nothing less than of a new party at present. Whereas the idea of forming cadres will appear self-evident to them. Only experience will again reconcile them with the idea of the party.

By correct action and leadership the Communist party gains the confidence of ever more workers, educates them in struggle against capitalism, unites their scattered forces and leads them in daily struggles, always keeping before the workers the perspective of a social revolution. How did the Communist party fare in this election? While receiving more votes than in the last election (1931), the vote for Mayor was about 50 percent less than the vote in the city elections of 1929. The figures were all low. During the same period Farmer-Labor reformism was growing by leaps and bounds among the workers.

The Communist party is the only political party that is interested and that can clear up the prevailing confusion among the workers about politics. But instead of doing this, it adds to the confusion by wrong tactics. When the Communist party entered the elections under the false name, United Front Workers Ticket it used the same cheap political practices as the corrupt bosses' parties. It prevented the C.P. from teaching the workers to identify candidates with a Party, a Program and Principles. True, this maneuver of a United Front Workers Ticket was to allow the well-known, politically unreliable Walter Frank to enter the elections on a common program with the Communist candidates. But this is rank opportunism. The party was forced to break with Frank or else be partners in a political crime against the working class along with Frank. Rather than call a spade a spade and openly admit the error, the Communist party leaders tried to cover up the traces. In doing so, they did untold damage to Communism. Aside from other things their actions pushed scores of the best workers coming toward the Party back into the political confusion that Frank represents.

Therefore the Communist League (Left Opposition), a faction of Communism, takes this form, an Open Letter, to address the Official Party upon certain vital questions of policy in the coming city elections, June 12.

1. The party must come out in this campaign under its own name, put up a Sticker Candidate for Mayor, print stickers and get into the city-wide campaign in full force, advocating the need of a working class political party, the Communist party. Against the prevailing confusion about elections, point out to all the workers that not "big men" and "political promises" are going to give them what they need, but only their own political organization that will build a controlled leadership and a Workers' Government.

2. There should be an open admission of the fallacy of the United Front Workers Ticket and the maneuver with W. Frank, and a stop put to all campaign speeches that give the immediate impression that immediate demands of the election platform can be won merely by voting for "Workers Candidates." They are good demands, but explain the fight correctly!

3. In the 6th Ward alderman contest, make a broad, intelligent, principled battle against Farmer-Labor reformism. Act like Communists in elections.

The undersigned pledges its full support to the party in this campaign. Yours for Communism.
Communist League of America

IMPORTANT CORRECTION

In the last issue of the Militant, in the article "Heckert Explains" the debacle, a mistake was made in the text. In translating from comrade Trotsky's "Against National Communism" the text was made to read "we, the Communists, consider the present government (Bruening) as an enemy of the proletariat, but this government supports itself upon your confidence and your votes; we want to fell this government in all alliance with the Fascists (Referendum) against you."

The text should have read: "We Communists consider the present government the enemy of the proletariat but this government supports itself upon your confidence and your votes; we wish to overthrow this government by means of an alliance with you and not by means of an alliance with the Fascists against you."

Problems of the United Front THE JOBLESS MOVEMENT AND POLITICAL PARTIES

The condition of the millions of unemployed in the United States is more miserable and critical than ever before. Such resources as they may have had themselves or through friends, relatives, etc., are wholly exhausted. Dependence upon organs of charity and governmental assistance is greater than at any time hitherto. Yet at this moment, governmental relief of the cities and other agencies is being either sharply or entirely cut in numerous communities, such as New York. The "New Deal" of the Roosevelt administration has failed thus far to touch to any noticeable degree the misery involving the unemployed millions. All these factors tend to give a strong impetus to the growth of a militant and broad movement on behalf of the unemployed.

Of a positive and beneficial character is the growth of tendencies which aim for a merging of the various unemployed movements into a single, national organization on a united front basis. But as a consequence, in part, of this forward direction, resulting essentially from the objective conditions and demands of the unemployed, other questions have again come sharply to the front. These questions must be decisively resolved soon; they involve the growth or crack-up of the unemployment movement, and particularly its development in a class conscious direction.

The numerous conferences of the unemployed, especially the Conference held recently in Chicago which brought together various political tendencies, reveal that certain basic requirements still confront the movement on behalf of the unemployed. Some of the more important ones are:

Basic Requirements

1. Working out ways and means for cooperation and joint action of the employed and unemployed.
2. Drawing the trade and labor unions, particularly of the American Federation of Labor, into the movement of the unemployed, for reciprocal results and benefits.
3. Developing a political consciousness among the mass of workers, in this instance, the movement of the unemployed.

Various movements of the unemployed arose in the past years in the hope that through mass pressure and organization, the miserable lot of the unemployed millions can be partially alleviated. These are necessary and immediate objectives that must be sincerely and militantly fought for by all forces taking part in the unemployed movement. For Communists, this is elemental, or ought to be. As in other fields of daily class struggle, so in the unemployed movement, we put forward immediate demands in themselves of greater or lesser importance. These have been more or less accurately worked out and need no repetition here. We present immediate demands because as living and not sterile revolutionaries, we fight for the interests of the workers today. At the same time we set forth our ultimate program for the abolition of capitalism and its replacement by the rule of the working class.

But, if we forget for one instant our basic class approach, namely, our need and task to revolutionize the workers; if we allow ourselves to get lost in a maze of immediate demands and become absorbed, however militantly, solely in the struggle for these demands, little or nothing will be gained for the working class. What we reap will be illusory among the workers, the growth of opportunism and the chance for opportunists and takers to deceive the workers. In short, it will be to this elemental movement in an a case of "sowing dragons' teeth and reaping flies." Today, very clearly and sharply, opportunistic and even reactionary views are being put forth in the movement of the unemployed, not the movement of the known labor fakers of the A. F. of L. and the charlatans of the socialist party—from them that is to be expected—but also among so-called Communist elements. We cannot here deal with them all; we take only those concepts brought out by the representatives of the Lovestones, Right wing Communist, group.

Movements of the unemployed have been organized in a large measure through the instrumentality of various political parties and tendencies in the labor movement; among these are the official Communist party (Stalinists), the Socialist Party, the CPLA (Mustelites), Lovestone (Right Communist Opposition) and others.

These movements of the unemployed take, or should take on, the organizational expression of the united front of all organizations ready to take part in the movement of the unemployed. A correct objective must be the merging of the now existing various unemployed movements into a single and broad United Front on a national scale. For the immediate demands themselves of the unemployed movement can be fought for successfully only on a planned, national scale. Such a united front must work out a common, minimum program of action (immediate demands) which binds all those adhering to the movement, to work for its achievement, irrespective of other political, economic, racial, etc., differences that exist in the movement. This should be accepted as elemental. The False Views of the Lovestonites

But what does the Lovestoneite make up the constituent parts of Right Wing Move to Expel Militants from P.M.A.

Gillespie, Ill.—The class collaboration policies of the Right wing of the Progressive Miners of America has been weakening the union in its struggle against the operators aiming to divide and weaken the union forces, has been picked up by the Right wing element and is now being followed up in an attempt in the Springfield district, to expel about three dozen militant Left wingers. The first three slated to go are Joe Angelo, Freeman Thompson and Volz.

In the period of formation of the P.M.A., special provisions were made to admit into the progressive union all militants expelled by the Lewis-Fishwick-Walker group. Workers who were the first to lead the struggle against Lewis and company and who laid the ground-work upon which the P.M.A. was built. Now, President Percy does not remember or is trying to forget these provisions. The Right wingers tell these militants to first get a job and then they will obtain a card. However, all are members of the union and have been functioning for months. Further, one cannot get a job in the mines unless he has a union card. Perhaps Percy wants them to get a job in the scab mines?

The Left wing is organizing to smash this attempt to exclude and expel the most militant element in the P.M.A.

The need of an organized Left wing in every local of the P.M.A. to fight for a program of class struggle and against the steady shift to the right and the policy of class collaboration, as pointed out for months in the Militant, is now a living reality in the coal fields. The Realities are trying to catch up with events in Illinois.

LEON TROTSKY Lessons of May Day in Austria

(REFLECTIONS FROM AFAIR)

On the First of May the workers of Vienna showed that in spite of all deception, treachery and disappointment, they do want to fight. Once again it became apparent how easily all the bureaucrats and semi-bureaucrats, the official ones as well as those of the half-hearted opposition, disguise their own lack of decision as a "depressed sentiment" among the masses. The workers want to fight. This is the most important conclusion from which we must proceed.

The First of May policy of the social democratic party consisted in creating for itself an alibi: before the government, in case the masses entered into struggle and suffered defeat, before the masses, in case the masses entered into struggle and achieved a victory. It is hard to conceive of a more disloyal and outrageous policy. It is disloyal because it leaves the masses with the illusion that they have a party and a leadership. It is outrageous because, in their most difficult hour, it leaves the masses which are accustomed to a centralized leadership, to seek a way out on their own hook.

The policy of the social democratic party excludes the possibility of a victory of the proletariat. At the same time, it excludes the possibility of any kind of stabilized regime. The proletariat will remain in a condition of excitement and of hope for a revolutionary solution. The bourgeoisie lives in constant dread of civil war. The military-police measures reveal their unreliability more and more every day. The petty bourgeois masses are becoming more and more nervous. The big bourgeoisie is becoming more and more convinced that without the dictatorship of Fascism it will not be able to maintain its order. In this way, the social democracy paralyzes the proletariat with its doubly disloyal, treacherous and cowardly policy and pours grist to the mill of Fascism.

The semi-opportunists of the type of Max Adler (can Otto Bauer still be counted among them?) cover up and protect this policy of disloyalty "from the Left." Among the working masses there still glows the hope that everything will be made good again from above, that the opposition will soon decide to point out the way of struggle. In this manner, irretrievable weeks and months are lost.

The Left wing of the social democratic opposition made the first attempt to act when it called upon the masses to demonstrate in the center of the city. The call had no effect. It could not have any effect, because leadership cannot come from an anonymous organization. The workers want to know with whom they are dealing.

It is not, naturally, a question of persons, but of the banner, the program, the slogan, the organization. Several Left social democrats who want to fight, are perplexed because they have no "names." The name is created in the course of the struggle. As long as the Left social democrats do not come out with a platform of struggle, their calls will get no echo.

The Communist party is paralyzed by the criminal policy of the Stalinist bureaucracy in Germany, by the theory and practice of social Fascism, the hopeless muddle in the question of the united front, the regime of simulation and falsehoods.

The Bolshevik-Leninists must look for connections with the genuine revolutionary elements in the Communist party and the social democratic opposition. It is not true that everything is lost in Austria. Great shake-ups, transformations in the masses are still possible. A small organization which knows what it wants can play an historical role under such circumstances.

«Young Spartacus» Out

The June issue of Young Spartacus is off the press and ready for sale. Featuring National Youth Day, it contains the International Left Opposition's statement to the Youth Anti-Fascist Congress at Copenhagen. This is a powerful document which should be seriously studied by both youth and adult comrades. It should aid in clarifying the question of the relation between the general class movement and the youth. Among the other articles are those on Germany, unemployment, reforestation, and working class youth struggles in the Trenton and New York Doll industry.

'New Deal' Fakers Push Inquiry into Bankers' Deals

The puppets of Wall Street on Capitol Hill are "investigating" the House of Morgan. A sop to the petty bourgeoisie and a sham in its aims, the Senate Banking Committee has disclosed banking evidence on the tentacles of control of J. P. Morgan and Co., which reach out into every pore of the financial, industrial and political life of American capitalism.

The revelations of the investigation are vindication of the contention of the Marxists propounded decades ago. Finance capital wields its control over the banking institutions of the nation through a meshwork of interlocking directorates which cunningly evade all laws aimed at them by the trust-busting middle class. The trustified industries, with few exceptions, are either indebted to or outright owned, thus stock control by the Morgan trust. The Morgan institution dominates through its financial influence a huge section of the American industrial life.

But J. P. Morgan does not trust to his outright or partial control to assure his dominating influence. Nor does he depend upon abstract government, both major political parties, subservient to his interests and needs. Practically half of the national committee of the Republican party, including Edward T. Ricker, financial adviser to Herbert Hoover for more than ten years, and the chairman of its committee, John R. Nutt, are personal beneficiaries of Morgan's benevolence. The same goes equally for the Democratic party, whose ex-national chairman, Ruskob, and the present Roosevelt administration, through the medium of the secretary of the treasury, Woodin, have received "gifts" from the House of Morgan which discriminate against one in the major party set-ups.

Letters from the above-named individuals, disclosed at the investigation, are in the investigation.

Nazis, Poles Plot Attack on USSR

Danger of Imperialist Intervention Imminent. Western Powers Haggle Over Vantage Points in Coming Anti Soviet War. Japan Cinches Position with the Help of the Kuomintang and War Lords

From Paris comes the alarming news of a Hitler-Pilsudski plot against the Soviet Union. J. Sauerwein, Foreign editor of the Paris Matin, reveals the whole machinery in a wire to the New York Times of June 1.

French authorities made the news public in an effort to hold Poland and the Little Entente in line, a task which has become increasingly difficult for Qui D'Orsay diplomacy due to the rigors of the world-wide economic crisis. The Polish move to support of the conspiracy, originally concocted by Nazi statesmen, is interpreted as an attempt to counteract the Four Power Pact plans of France, which have met with resistance from Warsaw due to provisions for rearmament made for former Central Power nations, which the Pilsudski regime fears.

"The idea of the Nazi scheme, as the French understand it, is that Poland would make a big territorial concession to Germany in the Polish corridor and receive as compensation territory in Soviet Ukraine in the direction of the Black Sea. It is a German idea. Marshal Pilsudski has had his eye on the Ukraine ever since he fought the Russians there in 1920."

From the report, which Monseigneur Sauerwein says, the French consider reliable and which they obtained from "secret sources," one thing stands out most clearly. Namely, that on every side of the European diplomatic tangle the way out is seen—in an attack against Soviet Russia and in its subsequent colonization.

Furthermore, in this attack, Hitler is undoubtedly to be the spearhead. The French merely want to contract him for the job under the conditions of the Four Power Pact, with Poland as a subsidiary. Poland itself wrangles for a more prominent place.

That the French are losing their grip somewhat is apparent. With Mussolini to the South and Hitler to the East of them, loss of control over Poland and the Little Entente would seriously weaken them. That is why they hold on so desperately.

Hitler, on the other hand, would like nothing better than to gird himself for the French by an alliance with the other notorious adventurer of Eastern Europe, Pilsudski. In this he no doubt hopes for Washington's blessing. The Roosevelt "peace message," which the Nazi chancellor was only too ready to welcome in his last Reichstag address, leaves ample room for such an aspiration.

The first step in its fulfillment is clear — the Nazi-Polish alliance against the USSR. What else has Hitler to offer Pilsudski? On what other grounds can Pilsudski meet Hitler?

Yet, no matter which way the Franco-German tangle is solved, with France directing or with Hitler in the lead under American auspices ultimately, the line-up must be against the fatherland of the workers. It will be concluded. That much is obvious. Only the purblind cannot see this. Trust in non-aggression pacts, as the Litvinoffs and Stalins and Karakhan do, means under these conditions, to prepare the ground objectively for a smashing defeat of Soviet Russia.

To put confidence in the imperialist contradictions alone, as the present regime in the Soviet Union does, means to go to the slaughter blindfolded.

The Western powers are heading for an intervention agreement. Japan, in the Far East, is making ready for collusion in the attack by the seizure of the Chinese East-rail, by the setting-up of a new North China vassal state, by the conclusion of a binding treaty with the lackeys of the Kuomintang. From all sides, imperialist ambassadors lurk ahead for the fortress of the world revolution.

Stalinism has paralyzed the Communist International, the arm of world revolution.

Stalinism has betrayed the Chinese proletariat and helped into power the Kuomintang bandits, who have sold out to the Japanese aggressor.

Stalinism has betrayed the German working class by a senseless, unprincipled policy which has played into the hands of Fascism.

To what end? So that socialism might be built in one country—in Russia? Where has this wise, "practical policy," which has "compromised" with Chiang Kai Shek and alienated the bulk of the reformist working class of the world, led to?

It must be plainly said: it has led to the isolation of the revolutionary fatherland. It has laid it open to attack from without by opportunist compromises directed against the world revolution. It

Stalinist Diplomacy Leaves Trail of Treachery for International Proletariat

The opportunist theory of socialism in one country is showing its fruits. A correct revolutionary, Marxist Russian Foreign Policy, based upon the theory of the permanent revolution, would have seen its chief tasks in the problems of the Chinese, the German, the world revolution. Of greatest importance was the Comintern as the instrument of world revolution. To its interests, diplomacy, which only has a technical significance, should have been subordinated.

Thus, with a correct policy, the central problem of the Soviet Union in the last few years should have been the struggle against German Fascism, which should not have been permitted under any circumstances to seize power. Furthermore, China should have been supported against the brigand invasion of the Japanese.

But the representatives of this correct, international tactic which conforms to the objective requirements do not decide the policy of the USSR and the Comintern. They stand in opposition to it and fill the jails and places of deportation in the state for which they have fought. Bureaucrats who have arisen on the basis of the reactionary theory of socialism in one country, which stands in contradiction to objective reality, decide the policies.

Nationalist Foreign Policy—A Logical Consequence

Soviet diplomacy has rid itself of all control by the Comintern and made an opportunist practice out of a juridical fiction in the Soviet constitution. If Russia alone could build up socialism, it had to conduct a nationalist foreign policy; the Comintern had to become a negligible factor whose interests had to be subordinated to diplomacy. Then non-aggression pacts, participation in the Kellogg Peace Pact, struggle for international disarmament "as the only means of the USSR and the Comintern. They stand in opposition to it and fill the jails and places of deportation in the state for which they have fought. Bureaucrats who have arisen on the basis of the reactionary theory of socialism in one country, which stands in contradiction to objective reality, decide the policies.

The present basis of American agriculture is unstable and cannot be maintained for very many years longer, as is shown by the permanent crisis which has corroded American agriculture ever since 1920, and even during the years of a stabilization and "prosperity." Overextension, excessive productive capacity, low prices in relation to manufactured goods, a low rate of profit, severe competition with new countries like Canada, Argentina.

Organize Australian Opposition

We reprint below a letter received from the secretary of the newly organized opposition in the Communist Party of Australia. It is still further evidence and confirmation of the wreckage perpetrated by the Stalinist leadership of the Communist International. But more than that, it is a glowing tribute to the great historical role of the International Left Opposition and the effectiveness of The Militant, whose guiding voice reaches the serious and sincere Communist workers in far-off Australia.

To our new fellow-fighters and comrades in Australia—greetings! As to ourselves, this tribute from the South Seas should spur every comrade on to greater activity. With redoubled energy and enthusiasm, forward! — Ed.

Sydney, April 14, 1933

In an endeavor to get a clear conception of the international situation, and to get a correct estimate of the present line of the C. I. from your point of view, I, in agreement with others of the movement in Australia have decided to open up communication with your organization.

For the past two years something has been definitely wrong with the C. I. in Australia. The support that was gained when the economic crisis began to be felt, was never crystallized gradually fell away. Today we find that despite the continued reiteration of the statement "The ever increasing radicalization of the workers," the facts are that an increasing number keep away from any demonstration or movement launched by the C. I. P.

For criticizing the leadership in an honest endeavor to correct obvious Right opportunist errors, many good members have been expelled. It is significant that the majority of these expelled members have good records of struggle in their leadership of the workers. While pretending to follow in the footsteps of Lenin, the party leadership gives lip-service to the revolutionary movement instead of engaging in the concrete work among the masses so necessary if they wish to win concrete support for their line.

When the Comintern instructor was here, he introduced the theory of "social-Fascism." This was immediately taken up by the leadership with enthusiasm, and they proceeded to thoroughly thrash the Labour Party with it at every opportunity. Not realizing that they only represented an insignificant minority of the workers, they indiscriminately labelled every social democratic worker as a counter revolutionary and an enemy of the working class. This of course led to open antagonism and hostility and gave the opportunist leaders of the Labour Party a wonderful weapon with which to discredit the Communist party. Recently, this method of approach (?) has been altered, and the party carefully points out that when they refer to the social-fascists they only mean the leaders of the social democrats.

"From Below" in the Office

Unfortunately however, they have forgotten that the workers have a habit of remembering, so that when, in a frenzied endeavor to set up "a united front from below" they approach these self-same workers with this brand new form of organization (or is it a tactic?) the workers greet them with stony silence, and the comrades retire to lick their wounds in isolation. They then proceed to indulge in self-criticism sufficiently for them to launch another campaign. Then they go out and repeat the same old mistakes time and again. Result: Their isolation is becoming chronic.

During these honest, but futile attempts of the party membership to overcome their weakness, the party leadership contents itself with the issuing of mechanical directives from above. They reiterate to a point of monotony thru the party press that they are the "vanguard of the working class" and that "No revolution can be successful unless we lead it!" Then they apparently sit back in comfort and await the rallying of the toiling masses around their office doors. The lead that they give is purely

New York Branch to Hold Picnic for Benefit of Press & Illinois Campaign

On Sunday, June 11, 1933, the New York Branch of the Communist League of America (Opposition) will hold its first picnic of the season at Tibbets Brook Park (Picnic ground to be announced later in the Militant). The picnic, apart from the good time assured for all who attend, has the necessary and excellent objective of raising money to maintain the weekly Militant and to assist in the work of the Left Opposition among the Illinois coal miners.

To this picnic have also been invited the members and sympathizers of nearby Branches of the Communist League. Special invitations have been extended to the Newark and Philadelphia branches. The picnic committee is already on the job with preparations for fun and good food.

To get to Tibbets Brook Park from New York City: Take the L. R. T. Woodlawn-Jerome Ave. train to the Woodlawn station—the last stop. From there take a Comrades and sympathizers: Reserve SUNDAY, JUNE 11, 1933 for an all day frolic at Tibbets Brook Park!

LEAGUE ACTIVITIES

Chicago Branch in 'Militant' Drive

Chicago, Ill.—The Chicago branch of the Left Opposition has wholeheartedly entered into the campaign of expansion inaugurated by the American Left Opposition. The last week has witnessed a series of successful activities here which will bear rich fruit in the near future.

Last Sunday, May 21st, we held a very successful mass meeting with comrade Cannon who is now on tour for the Left Opposition. Comrade Cannon's lecture on the perspective of the American revolution was very enthusiastically received by the workers present. The attendance was excellent in spite of the fact that it was the first warm Sunday following several weeks of cold and rainy weather. A good number of Stalinists were present, and although the subject was not of a polemical nature, they remained throughout the meeting and gave the speaker their undivided attention. A considerable number of workers took advantage of the chairman's invitation to leave their addresses in order that we may notify them of future meetings and altogether, the Left Opposition will reap many benefits from this meeting.

The climax of the week's activities was reached at a meeting of the members of the Left Opposition and its sympathetic organizations on Thursday. After an address by comrade Cannon on the work of the Left Opposition in the most important class battles waged by the workers recently, the possibilities of further participation in the class struggle and the resultant growth of the Left Opposition, the Bolshevik-Leninists present gave concrete evidence of their devotion to their class and their enthusiasm in the accomplishments of the Left Opposition.

Without hesitation they agreed to raise Chicago's quota of $400 in the expansion campaign of the Left Opposition. Pledges were called for. One comrade pledged $100.00. Another pledged $50.00. Pledges of money and lives came rolling in.

Unemployed comrades, having no money of their own, volunteered to canvass their acquaintances, and raise all the money they possibly could. A worker who had just found a job after eight months of unemployment, pledged $5.00. It was very evident that every comrade present was making every sacrifice and effort to do his or her share to further the work of the Left Opposition. Approximately $900.00 in cash was raised at this meeting. A joint committee of the Left Opposition and all its sympathetic organizations present was formed to carry on the work of gathering in the pledges of the various comrades as they are able to meet them and to canvass the absent members for pledges.

Comrade Cannon will be back in Chicago on June 9th, at which time he will speak at a mass meeting in Humboldt Hall, 2231 W. Division Street, on "The Negro Worker of the German Proletariat." We invite all Stalinists to attend this meeting to learn what a correct united front tactic is and how to apply it, and to answer for their misleadership of the German proletariat, if they can. We will carry the campaign from this point on to a successful culmination with a picnic to be held the latter part of June.

This campaign marks a definite step forward in the work of the Left Opposition in Chicago as well as nationally. Definite plans were made to secure a permanent headquarters and to draw new members into the branch from the many sympathizers we have won in the course of our work during the last few years. The Left Opposition is preparing to play its role in the important struggles that lie ahead.

Greek Stalinists Exclude Protomagia

New York—Last January the Greek organ of the party announced that a provisional committee was established for the purpose of preparing plans for a conference (which was held last February) of all Greek workers' organizations, to outline a common program of action for unemployment relief from the Greek charity organizations and the church of the city.

At the conference there was also represented the Greek workers' educational club Protomagia, with three delegates. A resolution was adopted that the conference go on record to elect a permanent committee composed of one delegate each from the participating organizations. Another resolution was proposed by the notorious Stalinist editor of the Greek party organ, Empros, to the effect that all participants shall accept the program of the party-controlled unemployed councils and that the Empros shall be the official organ of the committee. We of the Protomagia, protesting against this resolution which proposed to use the committee as an organization superceding all other organizations and not a genuine united front body. But we remained and participated in the committee and accept the resolution that we do not accept the resolution.

That aroused the hostility of the Stalinist bureaucrats against our club and immediately they started a campaign of slander against us, preparing the ground for our exclusion from the committee, which was packed with party members representing non-existing organizations. They used all forms of slander in order to force our delegates to withdraw.

The Stalinists were determined to do away with us at any cost. When their original pressure failed, they proceeded to use open hostile methods.

The Greek bureau of the party organized a group of party members to be used as a "strong arm squad" against us. On April 17th, when the committee was supposed to meet, our delegates went over to participate in the meeting. But when our delegate entered the hall of the Spartakos Club, where the committee was in session, the hooligans confronted him and ordered him to leave. Upon our delegate's demand for an explanation as to the authority for their action, they said that they were acting on instructions from the conference committee which had decided not to admit anybody else. They already had enough delegates.

Upon our delegate's insistence to participate, a party member, Karamanlis by name, assisted by others, used physical force to eject our comrade from the hall.

Our club has sent a letter to the committee demanding an explanation. This letter has not been answered to this day. First the Stalinists tried to use this committee as a super-organization by means of which to liquidate all the participating organizations. Secondly, they entered into an alliance with the Greek church, with the Greek bishop using them for the advantage of the church. And finally, in order to cover up their adventurism and irresponsibility, they reorganized the committee in the headquarters of the Needle Trades Workers Industrial Union, so that it is composed of party members and members of party affiliates only. A week ago they announced in the Empros that this conference was held on May 18.

This exposes the hypocrisy of the whole policy of the Stalinist bureaucrats. They talk united front and use splitting tactics. They use revolutionary phrases but act no different from the reactionaries.

STREET MEETINGS

The New York Branch is holding open air street meetings on current working class problems Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings in Manhattan, the Bronx and Brooklyn. Our sympathizers and friends are urged to attend.

N.Y. Youth March Against War

New York—Approximately five thousand young workers paraded the streets of Harlem, N. Y., on the third anniversary of National Youth Day—the counter demonstration to the hypocritical Decoration Day mousings and jingo speeches of the military sides of the bankers and the munition manufacturers.

Ostensibly an anti-imperialist war demonstration the tone of the slogans, due to the ravens of the parade, swerved radically from its original purpose to a Scottsboro protest march. The spirit of the marchers was highly enthusiastic but the little expression came from the YCL and sympathizing bodies of an anti-imperialist nature. It remained for the Spartacus Youth Club, affiliated to the Left Opposition, which was present in a gaudy contingent, to give the internationalist spirit to the gathering.

Until the day of the parade, the organization of National Youth Day bore the label of the united front. The Lovestonites, the Spartacus Youth Club, branches of the Young Civic League had a place on the provisional committee. A concession was even offered by the Stalinists to the YPSL to refrain from all criticisms of the war record of the reformists in the case that the latter would participate in the National Youth Day! The day of the march changed all this unusual gesture.

The Stalinists, finding themselves in a united front with their paper organizations, the Left and Right Opposition alone, became insolently arrogant casting all their smooth spoken phrases on the united front to the four winds. Leaflets were dropped from the hands of the Lovestonites, copies of Young Spartacus were torn to shreds by rowdy elements of the YCL, with no word of criticism or attempt made by their leaders to stamp their provocative actions.

When the parade marched into the circle, where the speaking was to take place, both the Left Opposition and the Lovestonites as well as the chairman of the American Youth Federation (who had made some objections, unpleasant to the bureaucrats) were confronted with a refusal to allow them speakers in spite of the previous agreement to the contrary. The excuse was that there were already too many speakers (from organizations controlled by the YCL). Vigorous objection was voiced and the Stalinists were forced to call an impromptu meeting of the steering committee which they packed with a couple of non-members, thus succeeding in giving their violation of the united front a "legitimate" character.

Then commenced the real provocation of the meeting. The rabid young Stalinists approached our delegation, taunted them with insulting remarks and tore literature from their hands and threatened physical violence. The Spartacus Youth Club held its ground when suddenly it found itself surrounded by a cordon of uniformed self styled "red front fighters" who fenced off the Spartacus Youth Club delegation from the rest of the demonstration. They claimed the demonstration this unholy of action was to protect (1) us from violence, but their motives were obviously sinister. The YCL leaders, when approached and asked for the reason for this hostile maneuver, shunned an answer or shifted the responsibility though they had undoubtedly inspired it. The demonstration, luckily for the Stalinists, ended without any alterations.

This reversion of the Stalinists to the gangster tactics of the "third period" will only bring disgrace upon themselves and discredit their motives in the united front. We warn again that this road will lead to disaster and isolation from the broad masses of the toiling youth.

Statement of Chicago Branch to National Jobless Meet

TO ALL DELEGATES TO THE NATIONAL UNEMPLOYED CONFERENCE

GREETINGS!

The Communist League of America (Left Opposition) wishes to address the following statement to its views to the delegates assembled in this conference:

You are gathered here as the representatives of the victims of the most advanced productive system in the history of mankind, where in the midst of abundance, millions go hungry and in the need of the bare necessities of life. The workers standard of living has been reduced to a starvation level. This is not due to an inability to produce sufficient commodities to meet the needs of society, but because capitalist production is production for profit and not for use. Because the means of production are privately owned capitalist appropriation upon the foundation of socialized production is an inherent contradiction which cannot be solved within the frameworks of the capitalist mode of production. This is especially true now when the accumulation of capital proceeds in the period of capitalist decay.

The present crisis with its 16 million unemployed is a normal development of capitalism. A stage of war or revolution represents an intensification and higher stage of the economic crisis. The efforts of the ruling class to solve these contradictions will shift the burden of the crisis even more heavily upon the backs of the working class, both employed and unemployed. It becomes clearer day by day that a genuine solution to the problems of

Book Review

Pioneer Publishers have just obtained a batch of copies of an excellent documentary book on the foreign policy of the Soviet Union from November 7, 1917, to the signing of the treaty of Brest Litovsk and its immediate effects in September 1918. "Russia and Germany at Brest Litovsk" is an exposition in detail chronological form of the struggle between the Soviet Union and the imperialist powers, particularly Germany in the early days of the Revolution.

The history of that period, and particularly the role of comrade Trotsky, has been grossly distorted by the Stalinists. With the exception of the book under consideration there is little material in English on this subject. Here are contained peace declarations of the Workers' Republic, speeches and statements of Trotsky before, during and after the signing of the Treaty of Brest Litovsk, famous speech of Lenin at the Fourth All-Russian Congress of Soviets in March 1918, and the actual terms of the treaty. Trotsky's summary of the peace negotiations (pages 134 to 145) is a brilliantly concise exposition of the meaning of the treaty, its conditions and the dispute in the Central Committee of the Russian Bolshevik Party.

The policy of the Bolsheviks was to utilize the peace negotiations to arouse the international working class and particularly the proletariat of Austria and Germany. On February 4, 1918, Zinoviev, in the name of Petrograd Soviets, addressed the Berlin and Vienna "democrats": "Brothers and comrades! Announce by your strikes and demonstrations and the creation of your Soviet of Workers' and Soldiers' Deputies you have shown that the Austro-German working class will not allow the hangmen and spoilers to impose a peace of violation and annexation on the Socialist Republic of Soviets. The destined outcome of the peace negotiations is being decided not at Brest Litovsk but in the streets of Berlin and Vienna and German and Austrian cities."

Comrades, members of the Soviets of the Workers' Deputies of Berlin and Vienna, your victory will signify the full and indisputable victory of Socialism, for two victorious revolutions in Russia and Germany will be inevitable. Long live the Soviets of Workers' and Soldiers' Deputies of Berlin and Vienna! Long live Communism!"

But the Soviets formed in Berlin and Vienna in early 1918 were crushed. The policy of "No peace, no war" that is, the termination of the war without an actual treaty, failed to arouse the natural class allies of the Soviets. The German army advanced even though Soviet Russia had declared the end of the war and withdrawn its troops from the front. No alternative was open: Lenin proposed the signing of a peace treaty with Germany—"Tilsit Peace."

"Russia and Germany at Brest Litovsk" was published by the Rand School of Social Research. After the present batch is disposed of by Pioneer Publishers there will be no more copies available. It originally sold at one dollar a copy. We are selling it for 25c (twenty five cents) each, 15c (fifteen cents) in groups of ten or more. Order now before it is too late!

* The reference is to the "Tilsit Peace" imposed by Napoleon on Prussia in 1807. Inevitably, it was accepted by the Prussians, and as well as a breathing spell in which to prepare their own "war of independence" 1812-1814, which brought about Napoleon's downfall.

Such a policy by the Stalinists played into the hands of the more reactionary element, split the forces of the Left wing, and thereby helped intrude the Right wing in the middle at the very start.

The turn of the C. I. toward the united front after the German defeat forced a turn in America and in the coal fields. The Stalinists changed their policy in the coal fields and in the last few months have had a proper program that was far superior to their previous wrong program in the coal fields. The Stalinists have realized the necessity of a Left wing in the PMA, for more than one reason. But their method of building a Left wing shows no improvement upon the past. They have already forgotten their new turn and returned to their old formula.

On May 21, they decided to organize a Left wing and start at once to call a state conference one week later on the 28th. They consulted no one who is not a Stalinist or close sympathizer of the party and proceeded to call the state conference. They said they tried to reach everybody but did not have time, and with such a flimsy excuse proceeded to exclude everybody except themselves and those who stumbled upon their plan and broke in on them.

In the caucus, they proceeded, over the advice and motions of the Left Opposition miners' faction and others to organize a provisional committee and adopt a draft program. They gave the committee power to call another conference later and to get in touch with all other Left wing groups, some that were formed before the caucus.

Instead of a provisional committee on the narrow foundation of Stalinism and the adoption of a draft program, asking other groups and tendencies TO COME TO US, the Left Opposition miners' faction proposed that we elect a negotiations committee and that this caucus GO TO THE OTHER LEFT WINGERS, and that together, forces, upon a broad foundation, through the united front, call a meeting where a provisional committee is established. In the meantime, as a first step the L. O. miners proposed that we organize Left wing groups in as many locals as possible.

MUSTE & BROOKWOOD

II. All the previous splits in the CPILA were as nothing when compared with the recent wholesale walk-out of Musteites on Muste. With the resignation of D. Saposs, J. C. Kennedy and Katherine Pollack the CPILA was left like a forsaken child in the cold. All these "militants" are faculty members of Brookwood and only members of the CPILA. The right wing of the CPILA. The right wing was simmering underground for the past few months while Muste was trying to persuade them that Brookwood should be a training school for budding Musteites.

According to inside information, it was found that Brookwood and the CPILA were so entangled that Muste was using Brookwood's resources, time and money to bolster up the declining CPILA. After the Saposs group divorced itself from the CPILA, the fight was forced out into the open with the result that Muste was ousted. The Times reported that the majority of the students went out on strike in sympathy with Muste. The catch is that Muste promised them jobs in the CPILA. This would give him bread and butter and give him workers that are conspicuously absent in the CPILA.

During the fight Muste charged the Saposs group was going to the right while he (Muste) was being ousted for being too militant and revolutionary. Let us see whether Muste is really going to the left. Did Muste, while he was the head of Brookwood, ever propose a radical change of policy, teaching, or in representation of the student body, or the fellowship? No! Muste did not want such a radical change in Brookwood in the past, and he did not advocate such a change recently when he was forced out from Brookwood. Why is he calling him a "Left" and a revolutionary? Let Muste's record as the dean of Brookwood, and since the formation of the CPILA speak for itself.

2. Muste adopted a new policy excluding students who accepted the line-up of the Communist party.
3. Muste did not allow graduates who are Communists to vote at the annual meeting, although their vote could not decide either way whether he should remain or be ousted from Brookwood.

All this was in accordance with the "revolutionary" policy of the CPILA. This is Muste's record as a revolutionary and a Left wing. The Saposs group now in control at Brookwood is an out and out Right wing S.P.A.F. of L. clique. Since Muste was ousted from Brookwood, the faculty is silent. They do not want to commit themselves as to whether they are for a change in Brookwood's curriculum or policy. At the recent negotiations committee and that this caucus GO TO THE OTHER LEFT WINGERS, and that together, forces, upon a broad foundation, through the united front, call a meeting where a provisional committee is established. In the meantime, as a first step the L. O. miners proposed that we organize Left wing groups in as many locals as possible.

Moreover, at graduation day, when the annual meeting of the fellowship took place at Brookwood, an interesting incident occurred. The Right wing which always hollered for the last few years that the Communists are about to capture Brookwood, lined up the graduating class and elected a hundred percent Right wing clique as officers of the National Fellowship. This is the same clique which functioned for the last few years as a CPILA fellowship. The Right wing gang refused to give any representation to the Left wing group. They did it because the Left wing group, under the leadership of Sam Fisher, demanded and fought for a change in Brookwood's policy, curriculum, and representation. Here are but a few points that the Left wing advocated.

1. We stress the need for Brookwood to have a non-sectarian character in order that it should be able to serve most effectively as a clearing house for various tendencies in the American Labor Movement.

2. Brookwood should be primarily a working-class college whose teaching should be based on Marxism and the class struggle.

3. It is vital that the curriculum should include a symposium or seminar led by leaders of the various political groups in the American Labor Movement in order that the student should have a clearer perspective of the whole political field in which they intend to serve.

4. Equal representation for the student body and the fellowship to the Brookwood board of directors, and the cooperative committee, etc. Is it a wonder the Right wing who follow the footsteps of Muste were scared to death by these proposals?

Muste and Saposs did not want a radical change for Brookwood. The difference between the two is this: Muste had Brookwood for the last few years under CPILA influence. The Saposs group is keeping Brookwood under the S.P. and the A.F. of L. influence. At present Brookwood is "saved" from Communism, and the fellowship from Left wing influence.

The Brookwood faculty and their CPILA fellowship clique were victorious. One more victory like this and Brookwood will go down as a right wing institution and no one will shed any tears. Brookwood as a right wing institution has outgrown its usefulness just as Musteites has no place in the American Labor Movement.

It is a grand glorious boast of the CPILA that they alone are fighting against labor racketeering. It is true that the Labor Age does voice much space to John L. Lewis and Brindley. But the Musteites have no access to these unions and the attacks on Lewis only serve to cover up the racketeers inside the CPILA. Hardman is one of the outstanding figures of the CPILA. He also detests one of the most criminal exhibitions of despotism and racketeering in the Amalgamated. The Musteites have material from workers in their office that was never brought to light. Why? It deals with unvarnished episodes that would be very embarrassing to J. B. S. Hardman, who is first lieutenant of Muste in the CPILA. Naturally the Musteites will reply that they did publish an article on racketeering in the Amalgamated by Carlo Trusca. But—this article was prefaced with profuse apologies from the editor.

Furthermore, about a year and a half ago in Montreal, three thousand tailors drove out the Amalgamated racketeers and formed a new organization just as the Progressive Miners of America did against John J. Lewis. The Amalgamated replied with terrorism, strike-breaking, treachery and collusion with the bosses against this new organization just as Lewis did in Illinois. Why has the CPILA kept silent here and blazed forth so violently against Lewis?

This confusion of the Musteites was made possible by the bureaucratic blunders of the Stalinists, both nationally and internationally. Had the Communist party had the correct policy, Muste would never have had the opportunity to establish this caricature of radicalism in the American Labor Movement. Nevertheless Muste and his CPILA are doomed because:

1. It is a reformist organization.
2. It has no economic basis.
3. It has no political organization.
4. It has no working class following.

5. It is an eclectic gathering of radicals and liberals.
It is plain, therefore, that the collapse of Musteism is inevitable. With the revolutionary upsurge of the American working class these like "militants" of the CPILA will find opponents as harnessed and evangelists of reformism.

— S. M. DAVIS

Musteite Quits

Youngstown, O.—George Perkins, local CPILA organizer, boycotted the election of the Amalgamated Unemployed League in which he had consented to be a candidate by leaving the meeting after stating he was opposed to the way in which the league was functioning and therefore he would not function on the executive committee if elected. Perkins, who is also a vice president of the Ohio Unemployed League, was one of the organizers along with Karl Lore of the Austonian organization.

Along with Mrs. Grace Mettee, one of two who "walked out" with him, Perkins recently took the initiative and leadership in a very poorly prepared and miserably conducted protest "strike" for more relief that sapped the energy of the organization and scattered its forces. We supported the "strike" insofar as the rank and file workers were in favor of it; yet at the same time we pointed out its unpopularity, its weaknesses and therefore the likelihood that it would not succeed in accomplishing its aim. In opposition to this adventure we proposed a campaign to increase the local active membership and also to help build up Unemployed Leagues in Youngstown.

The small group, including ourselves, that stuck to the organization in the critical period following the "strike" considered it necessary to adopt a new constitution that would replace the old individual "leadership" with a reorganized collective leadership. This was done. And since the old "leaders," Perkins and Mettee, were not specially consulted in this effort of the rank and file to curb the disastrous leadership of one or two, the latter apparently intend to try to smash the League by one means or another.

Neither their slander, their boycott nor the cowardly, ignorant and reactionary red-baiting campaign of Mrs. Mettee (which the Musteite Perkins supports by his silence) will break the League. The new executive committee must win the active support of the unemployed with a practical, constructive program; the rank and file must back up the executive committee in its effort to rebuild the League on a firm foundation.

DRAFT PROGRAM WANTED

We are in receipt of requests for copies of the Draft Program by comrade Trotsky. As our comrades know this basic document is out of print and unavailable. They are wanted now, not for sale, but for our classes.

We are going to reprint it. But that will take some time yet. In the meantime copies are urgently needed for classes. Comrades who have copies they don't need are asked to send them in at once.

3. Official Explanation of Bureaucratic Terror

"Some comrades," Stalin said at the January Plenum of the C. C., "understood the thesis on liquidation of classes, creation of a classless society and withering away of the state as justification for laxity(?) and placidity(?), justification for the counter-revolutionary theory of the slow extinguishing of the class struggle and weakening of state power." Vagueness of expression serves Stalin in this case, as in so many others, to cover up the logical gaps. A programmatic "thesis" on the liquidation of classes in the future need not mean as yet, it is understood, the extinguishing of the class struggle in the present. But it is not a question of a theoretical thesis but of an officially proclaimed fact of the liquidation of classes. Stalin's sophism consists in the fact that he times the idea of the inevitable strengthening of state power in the transitional epoch between capitalism and socialism, an idea which, following Marx, Lenin advanced for the explanation of the necessity of the proletarian dictatorship in general, to a definite period of the dictatorship, after an allegedly already accomplished liquidation of all capitalist classes.

To explain the necessity for the further strengthening of the bureaucratic machine, Stalin said at the same plenum: "The Kulaks are routed as a class but not finished off." If we should accept this formula, it would seem that to finish the routed Kulaks off, a more concentrated dictatorship is necessary in the literal expression of Stalin—"to finish off the remnants of the dying classes." The finished expression is, in its way, given to this paradox of bureaucraticism by Molotov, who has, in general, a fatal inclination to develop the idea of Stalin to completion. "In spite of the fact," said he at the January Plenum, "that the forces of the remnants of the bourgeois classes of our country melt, their resistance, anger and fury grow, knowing no bounds." The forces melt, but the fury grows! Molotov does not suspect, it seems, that the dictatorship is needed against force and not against fury; fury which is not armed by force ceases to be dangerous.

Class Enemy Powerless—Why the Repression?

"It cannot be said," Stalin admits on his part, "that these former people could change anything in the present situation of the USSR by their damaging and thieving machinations. They are too weak and impotent to resist the measures of the Soviet power." It seems clear that if all that is left from these former classes are "former people"; if they are too weak "to do anything" to change the situation in the USSR—that from this should have followed both the extinguishing of the class struggle and the easing of the regime. No, Stalin argues: "the former people can play us some tricks." But revolutionary dictatorship is needed not against impotent tricks but against the danger of capitalist restoration. If, for the struggle with powerful class enemies, it was necessary to put into use the steel-clad fists, against "tricks" of former people the little finger will do.

But here Stalin introduces still another element. The dying remnants of the routed classes "appeal to the backward strata of the population and mobilize them against the Soviet power." . . . But have the backward strata grown in the period of the first five year plan? It would seem, not. Does it mean that their attitude toward the state changed for the worse? That would mean that the "maximum strengthening of state power" (more correctly repressions) is necessary for the struggle against the growing discontent of the masses. Stalin adds: "through the mobilization of the backward strata of the population, fragments of counter-revolutionary opposition elements from the Trotskyites and Right wingers may again stir and come to life." Such is the final argument: since the fragments (only fragments!) may stir (so far they only may) . . . the greatest concentration of the dictatorship is necessary.

Entangled hopelessly in the "fragments" of his own ideas, Stalin unexpectedly adds: "Of course, we have no fear of that." Then why be frightened and frighten others, if "we have no fear of that." And why introduce a regime of terror against the party and the proletariat if it is only a matter of impotent fragments incapable of "changing anything in the USSR?"

All this piling up of confusion, leading to pure nonsense is a consequence of the inability to tell the truth. In reality, Stalin-Molotov should have said: due to the growing discontent of the masses and an ever stronger gravitation of the workers to the Left Opposition, the intensification of repressions is necessary for the defense of the privileged positions of the bureaucracy. Then everything would easily fall into place.

4. The Withering Away of Money and the Withering Away of the State

The knot of contradictions in which the theory and practice of bureaucratic centrism got itself hopelessly entangled will become clear to us from a new side when we draw an analogy between the role of money and the role of the state in the transitional epoch. Money, just as the state, represents a direct heritage of capitalism: it must disappear but it cannot be abolished by decree, it withers away. Different functions of money, as those of the state, expire by different deaths. As a means of private accumulation, usury, exploitation—money expires parallel with the liquidation of classes. As a means of exchange, standard of measurement of labor value, regulator of the social division of labor, money is gradually dissolved in the planned organization of social economy; it finally becomes an accounting slip, a check for a certain portion of social goods for the gratification of productive and personal wants.

The parallelism of both processes of withering away, that of money and that of the state, is not accidental; they have the same social roots. The state remains a state so long as it has to regulate the relations between various classes and strata, each of which draws up its accounts, endeavoring to show a profit. The final replacement of money as a standard of value by the statist registration of live productive forces, equipment, raw materials and needs will become possible only at the stage when social wealth will free all the members of society from the necessity of competing with each other for the size of the dinner-pail.

This stage is far off yet. The role of money in Soviet economy is not only not completed but in a certain sense, is only about to be developed to completion. The transition period, in its entirety, means not the curtailment of the turnover of goods, but on the contrary, an extreme expansion thereof. All branches of economy are transformed, are growing and must determine their relation to each other qualitatively and quantitatively. Many products, which under capitalism are accessible only to the few, must be produced in immeasurably greater quantities. The liquidation of the peasant economy, with its internal consumption, the closed family economy means the transition to the field of social (money) turnover of all that productive energy which is now being used up within the limits of the village and the walls of a private dwelling.

Money Socialized Under Planned Economy

Taking complete stock of all the productive forces of society, the social state must know how to apportion and use them in a manner most advantageous for society. Money as the means of economic accounting evolved by capitalism is not thrown aside but socialized. Socialist construction is unthinkable without the inclusion, in the planned system, of the personal interest of the producer and consumer. And this interest can actively manifest itself only when it has at its disposal a trustful and flexible monetary system: a stable monetary system.

Increase in the productivity of labor and improvement in the quality of goods, in particular, are absolutely unattainable without an exact measuring instrument which penetrates freely into all the pores of economy, that is, without a stable monetary unit.

If capitalist economy which reached its unstable proportions with the aid of wasteful fluctuations of the conjuncture, needs a stable monetary system, the more so is such a system necessary for the preparation, make-up and regulation of planned economy. It is insufficient to build new enterprises; an economic system must familiarize itself with them. This means testing in practice, adapting and selecting. The mass, nation-wide check-up of productivity can mean nothing else but a test by means of the ruble. To erect a plan of economy on a slipping valuta is the same as to make a blue print of a machine with a loose compass and a bent ruler. This is exactly what is taking place. The inflation of the Chervonets is one of the most pernicious consequences and also instruments of the bureaucratic disorganization of Soviet economy.

The Official Theory of Inflation

The Meaning of the Farm Revolts

first of all by the tremendous quantity of goods in the hands of the state, which are put into circulation at fixed prices." If this phrase has any meaning at all it can be only that Soviet money has ceased being money; it no longer serves to measure values and by that the fixation of prices; "stable prices" are fixed by government power; the Chervonets is only an accounting tag of planned economy. This idea is entirely parallel and equivalent to the idea of the "liquidation of classes" and "entry into the realm of socialism." Consistent in his half-heartedness, Stalin does not dare, however, to reject the theory of a gold reserve completely. No, a gold reserve "also" does not harm but its importance is only a secondary one. At any rate, it is needed for external trade, where payment must be made in specie. But for the well-being of the internal economy, stable prices fixed by the secretariat of the Central Committee or by its assignees are sufficient.

That the rate of decline of the purchasing power of bills of exchange depends not only on the number of revolutions of the printing press but also on "the quantity of good," is known to any student of economics. This law is applicable to capitalist as well as to planned economy. The difference is that in planned economy it is possible to hide inflation, or at any rate its results, for a much longer period. The more terrible therefore will be the day of reckoning! In any case, money regulated by administrative prices fixed for goods loses the ability to regulate such prices and consequently the ability to regulate plans. In this field as in others, "socialism" for the bureaucracy consists of freeing its will from any control: party, Soviet, trade union, or money . . .

A purely bureaucratic economy. Present Soviet economy is neither a monetary nor a planned one. It is an almost purely bureaucratic economy. Exaggerated and disproportionate industrialization undermined the foundations of agricultural economy. The peasantry tried to find salvation in collectivization. Very early experience showed that in collectivization of despair is not yet a socialist collectivization. The further decline of agricultural economy struck a hard blow to industry. To support unreliable and disproportionate tempos, a further intensification of pressure on the proletariat became imperative. Industry, freed from the material control of the producer, took on a super-social, that is, bureaucratic character. In consequence of which it lost the ability of satisfying human wants even to the degree to which it had been accomplished by the less developed capitalist industry. Agricultural economy re-luctantly on the important cities with a war of exhaustion. Under the constant burden of disproportions between their productive efforts and the worsening conditions of existence, workers, kholozh members and individual peasants lose interest in their work and are filled with irritation against the state. From this, and from this alone, and not from the malicious will of the "fragments" flows the necessity for the introduction of coercion into all cells of economic life (strengthening of the power of shop managers, laws against absentees, death penalty for spoliation of kholozh property by its members, war measures in sowing campaigns and harvest collections, forcing of individual peasants to tend their horses to kholozhs, the passport system, political departments in the kholozh villages, etc., etc.)

Parallelism between the fate of money and the fate of the state looms up before us in a new and brilliant light. Disproportions of economy lead the bureaucracy to the road of ever growing paper-money inflation. Discontentment of the masses with the material results of economic disproportions, pushes the bureaucracy on the road of open coercion. Economic planning frees itself from value control as bureaucratic fancy frees itself from political control. The rejection of "objective causes," that is, of material limits for the acceleration of the tempos as well as the rejection of the gold basis of Soviet money, represent "theoretical" ravings of bureaucratic subjectivism.

has laid it open to decay from within by the adventurist reeling of bureaucratic centrism.

The fortress of the world revolution is in danger. By the perfidy of non-aggression pacts, by the trust it gives to the conflicts of world imperialism, Stalinism is only throwing dust into the eyes of the workers. It is only undermining the workers' fatherland and the cause of world revolution.

If workers' Russia is to live, Stalinism must go. If the land of the Soviets is to light the way for world revolution, the reactionary theory of socialism in one country must be thrown overboard.

Back to the line of Marx and Lenin—back to the Marxist perspective of the permanent revolution! Return the exiled Bolshevik-Leninists, Trotsky, Rakovsky and their comrades, to the post of struggle which they held in the victorious October! That is the command of the hour.

Every Communist worker who sees the danger; to whom the Four Power Peace Pacts and the Hitler-Pilsudski plots reveal it; who is not fooled by the capitalist non-aggression pacts and the peace talk, must do his duty.

Demand the reinstatement of the International Left Opposition into the Communist International! Demand the return of Trotsky and Rakovsky! That is the way to bring new vigor, a new source of strength to the proletarian army, which is sorely in need of it. Act while there is still time to be abolished by decree, it withers gation, show that they were quite ready to "reciprocate." And they have! A mere glance at the banking holiday proclaimed by Woodin and the "diplomacy" of Norman H. Davis, ambassador at large for the U. S. is proof sufficient that J. P. does not scatter his money idly. Every dollar given to a government official brings results!

The inquiry in Washington, despite the facts brought to light, is a circus of such dimensions as would make the great showman, Barnum, look like a miserable piker. The avowed purpose of the investigation is to reform the banking laws so that the "little fellow" will have a chance. In this connection it is interesting to note that the banking bill which is to do that has been proposed and drafted by the most ardent proponent of Morgan in the investigation, Senator Carter Glass, Virginia millionaire newspaper publisher.

Like the Pujol investigation under the "New Freedom" of Wilson the Pecora inquiry of the "New Deal" is a grand stage to divert the attention of the discontented away from struggle, give them confidence in the "anti-big business" attitude of the administration, only in reality to fasten the strangle hold of finance capital upon the millions of masses.

Unemployment & Political Parties

the united front unemployed movement. Other issues exist, but unless this question is given a clear answer, the movement of the unemployed can easily disintegrate and founder. Under the best of conditions, an unemployed movement is the most difficult of all movements to hold together because of the natural looseness of organization, state of employment, etc., that conditions its existence.

The first question that must be answered is the political question: the matter of organic participation of the political parties and groups of the working class in the united front movement of the unemployed.

At the national conference of unemployed movement groups in Chicago and at local conferences in New York, representatives of the Lovestone group came out for non-participation organizationally of the political parties or groups in the unemployed movement. In essence, their position was that the interests of the unemployed can best be served if the united front is made up organizationally only of the various organizations of the unemployed: Unemployed Councils, Association of the Unemployed, Workers Leagues, etc. The political parties and groups must be kept out and also, even labor unions should be represented only fraternally in the united front.

But the mere posing of the issue by the Lovestone Right Wing is sufficient reason for taking up the matter of relations of political forces to the unemployed, or for that matter of any other movement of labor. It has to be said plainly that Lovestone proposal, however intended, is an outright reactionary one, completely in line with the proposals and objectives of the A. F. of L. and other fakers in the labor movement.

This is a politically functioning, as never before. Every group, one could almost say each individual, whether stupidly or intelligently, solves its problem in terms of class and government—that is, class interest and class power. The political question enters, and rightly so, into every step and action of the workers. It has been and is the aim of all capitalist politicians, and their lieutenants in the ranks of labor—the Greens, Wobbs, Lewises, etc.—to keep the working class out of politics, that is, working class politics and action.

These frauds and deceivers have said to the workers: look only to your bread and butter, the economic side; and the not very far-seeing IWW and syndicalist echo the admonitions of the bourgeois liberal and working class opportunists to evade or keep away from the decisive, the political question.

The Communist Position

Every movement of the working class is bound to have impressed upon it a political ideology. That outlook is determined essentially by the general conditions and outlook prevailing within society; within the labor movement itself, it is largely determined by the political force that most intelligently and consciously makes its class outlook and program felt upon the workers.

Communists take it for granted that every movement of the workers must be penetrated and fractionally organized therein: trade unions, cooperatives, fraternal organizations, etc. Why exempt the organizations of the unemployed?

What justification or reason can there be for the formal exclusion of the forces that really determine, for good or bad, the functioning and outcome, within limits of the objective situation, of the united front of the unemployed movement? Who is being fooled, what is being gained by the exclusion of the intelligence, the political force, the class expression of any movement? Nobody; least of all, the unemployed. Not maneuverers, but plain, direct, speech and direction to the unemployed, on the immediate and intimate class solution of unemployment is the way to advance the cause of the workers. Direct participation of the Communist party, the Communist League of America (Opposition), the socialist party, etc., is a test for all the tendencies within the labor movement.

I.L.D. District Workers Meet

New York—On Sunday, May 21, a district meeting of the functionaries of the I.L.D. took place at Irving Plaza. The meeting had been called to discuss the new turn in I.L.D. policy. A turn in the policy of an organization is a very serious and important step and should arouse the interest and response of at least the leading members of the organization. However out of the 300 functionaries (branch executives, members, section representatives, etc.) of the district, there were only about 75 to 100 present at this meeting and even this small number dwindled to about 40 after the recess.

This lack of response is merely a reflection of the condition of the I.L.D., which can best be described as stagnation. This fact is so glaringly obvious that it has not escaped the attention of even the top leadership, which is so basely engaged in fiction fights for leadership, constantly changing its form of organization so as to either eliminate certain individuals, or severe damage points for others.

And what better method could there be to explain away this lethargy among the membership than by an orgy of self-criticism?

The self criticism was carried on in the best Stalinist, that is, confusionist, manner. John Ballam, District Organizer, in his first report criticized the membership for its low political level, criticized the leadership because it does not function collectively. He admitted that the I.L.D. had put legal defense first and mass pressure second—an outright admission of the failure of the I.L.D. to accomplish that for which it was created. "All these shortcomings," he said, "must be remedied and the I.L.D. must become a mass organization and not a Legal Aid Society and a collection agency."

Why is the political level of the membership been so low? Isn't it because it has been miseducated along Stalinist lines? Why is there no collective leadership in the I.L.D.? Isn't it because the bureaucratic regime in the I.L.D. nurtures clique leadership in which appointments and dismissals "from above" play a large part?

Comrade Ballam should put the blame squarely where it belongs—on the line of the third period sectarianism—which the membership has been carrying out only too faithfully.

The comrade from the Left Opposition speaking in the discussion, pointed out that Ballam had failed completely to mention work within the Right wing unions; that it was due to the absence of a Left wing within the reformist unions, which could exert pressure, that the leaders of these unions have been able to sabotage the Mooney, Scottsboro and other struggles which the Left wing is carrying on. We must break down the wall between ourselves and the Right wing workers and show them that the I.L.D. is ready to defend any worker regardless of his political and trade union affiliation. Every worker in the I.L.D. issues and work from within both for individual membership and for collective affiliation of his union to the I.L.D. It is only in this manner that the I.L.D. can win back the confidence and prestige which it once enjoyed and become a really functioning organization.

In the discussion which followed the report, not a single person touched upon this important question. They either did not understand it, or did not consider it important enough, or maybe it was a lack of faith. The ball was tossed back and forth from the section to the district and back. The section organizers blamed the district for lack of guidance and the district representatives in turn "proved" this false and "showed" that it was the incompetence and negligence of the section itself. The rank and file was too bewildered to even take the floor. In such manner was this vital question confronting the I.L.D. discussed.

In his summation, Ballam admitted that he had not dealt with the question of the Right wing unions, but that was not because he did not think it important—he did not state just why he had omitted it—he was all for activity within the Right wing unions.

But that is not enough. It is necessary that a thorough discussion in all branches take place and that the membership fully understand and realize the serious mistakes of the past, who is responsible for them and what must be done now. It is only on this basis—and not on orders of turns from above—that the I.L.D. can actually make a new start along a correct path.

— F.

Moreover, this can and must be done while maintaining the discipline of action of the united front. A united front movement is organized to achieve certain immediate objectives. In the case of Mooney and Billings to achieve the freedom of Mooney and Billings; in the case of the Scottsboro defendants, to free the Scottsboro boys; and likewise, with the objects of each united front movement that is unit.

Shall the political parties, for instance, be excluded from direct participation in the Mooney United Front movement? The revolutionary would say, no. The capitalist politicians say, yes, for many reasons. And then these latter, at a proper moment, find ways and means for a Jimmy Walker to step in and represent himself as Mooney's and labor's savior.

Stalinist Errors

And certainly in the case of the unemployed, of far greater significance than the Mooney issue, the possibilities for educating and winning the workers to a class viewpoint are at hand. Nothing is to be gained in such instances by "hiding the face" of the movement. The official Communist party (Stalinists) has gone in for that also a great deal lately, and in each instance the Stalinists have been wrong. Their outstanding error and crime is their formal effacement from the leadership of the struggle against imperialist war and for the defense of the Soviet Union. What needs to be remembered is: the political party joins the unemployed United Front. The Unemployed Council or group does not join the party.

The unemployed movements will assert themselves politically. Witness Seattle and other places. The point is, shall the opportunists and fakers take over the political and class direction of the unemployed? This must not be.

The next logical step of those who would exclude the political parties from direct organizational part in the unemployed united front is to exclude the trade and labor unions. And the Lovestone group proposes exactly this!

Yet the failure of the labor unions to rally behind a united front of the unemployed is a basic cause of the movement's weakness today. The unions and the unemployed must be linked organizationally for the objectives of the united front. Moreover, such a correct relation within the united front should be an excellent means for organizing the unorganized unemployed, which means the overwhelming bulk, into the unions. An unemployed worker is no less a worker because he is unemployed, and there is not less, but more need to organize him into a labor union in his interest as well as in the interest of the employed worker to preserve and better working conditions.

Lastly, from a fundamental view, why do the Communists bring all possible support on behalf of the unemployed? Because we must develop, in whatever way is permitted, their political, their class consciousness.

(Otherwise, the actions and aims of the unemployed will prove valueless in a lasting sense. The class question must be raised, even as in the trade unions, or the really worth-while and positive side of the unemployed movement will be dissipated and disappear, and hard work will have gone to naught.)

We have to develop class-conscious and revolutionary workers in the unemployed movement, while at the same time working militantly to achieve the immediate demands of the united front. All elements can try their hand at the task. But the Communist is the historical instrument for that task, functioning through his party or group. This is the standpoint of the Left Opposition.

Apropos the Foreign Policy of the Stalinists

In the Orient the Soviet government is prepared to sell its rights in the Chinese Eastern Railroad in the Occident it is renewing the old German-Soviet treaty over Hitler's signature. In the two opposite directions of its foreign policy, the Stalin-Bukharin government is bowing before imperialism and Fascism.

The abandonment of the Chinese Eastern Railroad does not signify simply the loss for the workers' state of an important economic and strategic position, but the direct transfer into the hands of Japanese imperialism of an important instrument which will on the very morrow be directed against China and also against the Soviet Union.

Stalin's agreement with Hitler strengthens the position of Hitler and cannot help reacting painfully upon the state of spirit of the German workers.

"If the powerful workers' state is obliged to seek friendship with Fascist Germany, that means, the position of the Nazis is solid." This is what every thinking German proletarian inevitably says to himself. At the moment at which the bureaucracy of the Communist International presents the Hitler victory as a passing incident and puts on the order of the day, the question of the general strike and the insurrection (on paper), the Soviet bureaucracy finds it indispensable to establish "normal" relations with the Fascist dictatorship in Germany. The actions of Litvinoff-Chinechuk characterize much more exactly the point of view of the Stalinists than the cheap literature of Manulsky-Kinsmen.

A revolt has taken place in European revolutionary circles apropos the latest steps of the Stalinist bureaucracy in foreign policy, not only in the opposition groups by the way, but also in the official parties. The word "treason" is found more often, if not in the articles, then at least in letters and conversations.

Such protestations are not difficult to understand psychologically; but we cannot associate ourselves with them politically. The question of the relations between the Soviet state and imperialism is in its essence, a question of the relation of forces. After the Chinese revolution in the Orient and the powerful vanguard of the European proletariat in the Occident were crushed, the relation of forces became brusquely modified to the detriment of the Soviet state. To this must be added the disastrous internal policy, the complete annihilation of the bonds between the proletariat and the peasantry, between the apparatus and the personal dictator, between the party and the proletariat, and the party. Everyone of these political causes force the Communist bureaucrats to batter down the opposition and to beat a retreat before the Mikado and before Hitler.

The Stalinist bureaucracy is responsible for the whole of its opportunistic and adventurist policy. But the consequences of this policy are no longer dependent upon their own will. It is impossible to withdraw at will from an unfavorable relationship of forces. What policy could be expected of the Soviet government with regard to Fascist Germany? The breaking off of relations? The boycott? These measures could not have had any sense except as preludes for military operations. Two years ago we put forward this sort of a perspective, not isolated from but in direct connection with a radical change of policy in the USSR and in Germany.

WHAT'S HAPPENED TO RAKOVSKY?

The question of the fate of Rakovsky is enveloped in a tragic mystery. It may be stated with certainty that Rakovsky is no longer at Barnaul, the locality of his former deportation. Basing oneself upon information from two different sources, one Oppositional and the other "official", that is, connected with the Stalinists, it may be stated with certainty that Rakovsky, ill, was brought from Barnaul to Moscow. The Oppositional source also communicated that Rakovsky had died in the Kremlin hospital. According to the "official" source, Rakovsky is said to have undergone an operation and to have been cured. Through "Humanity", Stalin denied in an obscure manner the report of Rakovsky's death. Nevertheless, the leading circles say nothing about his subsequent fate.

A well-known telegram of the Reuter Agency, sent from Moscow, said that "Rakovsky is practicing medicine in the Yakutsk district." Reuter could not have invented that; it undoubtedly got the tip in Moscow. How should these facts be tied together? The transportation of Rakovsky from Barnaul to the Kremlin hospital would indicate, it seems, an extraordinary attention paid him. In that case, then, why was Rakovsky, after the operation, not only not sent to the Southern region as the doctors have been demanding for some time now, nor returned to Barnaul, but was instead deported to the Polar Circle, that is, under conditions which are fatal for him? We have no information to explain this contradiction. We are obliged to expound a hypothesis which requires verification.

In any case, it seems to us today to flow from the whole situation. Rakovsky's illness coincided in point of time with a new wave of anti-Trotskyist fury on the one hand, and with the negotiations behind the scenes which led to the latest capitulation of Zinoviev and Kamenov, on the other. From the content of the declarations of Zinoviev and Kamenov it is clear how badly Stalin stands in need of the opposition. It is hard to state that the Stalinists utilized Rakovsky's illness to extort from him some declaration or other. It is probably towards this end that Rakovsky was brought to the privileged Kremlin hospital, that is, was accorded conditions which are beyond the dreams of a deportee.

The operation, as is reported, was successfully accomplished. Then—and this is quite in harmony with the character of Stalin—the latter must have presented Rakovsky with a political bill to settle. Rakovsky's illness spurned the reckoning presented him. That is why the old warrior did not return to Barnaul, but was thrown under the Polar Circle.

We can find no other explanation. The Stalinists have every possibility of denying our hypothesis. We will await the denial with impatience, or perhaps our hypothesis is too... optimistic, and the Stalinists will find it more to their advantage to remain silent.

Hitler Plan to Kill Reds

Communist Leaders Face Death on Arson Frame-Up

The barbaric fury of the Fascist bandits in Germany continues unabated. 4 Communist leaders were condemned to death in Altona for the crime of defending their headquarters and institutions against a punitive expedition of armed Nazis which ended in a bloody battle, on July 17, 1932. 6 other Communists were sentenced to long prison terms on the same count.

Meanwhile Torgler, former Communist party Reichstag leader, Luitpold, Popoff and Taneff, Bulgarian Communists, are standing trial on the monstrous framed-up charges of the burning of the Reichstag early this year.

It is well known that this configuration was a maneuver of the Hitlerites to suppress and drive the Communists underground. This has been exposed even by reactionary bourgeois journalists. The date of the trial is kept secret and any German attorney accepting to defend them is threatened with death.

But an attorney and no legal defense, important as this is, can rescue Torgler and his comrades from the hands of the Fascist butcher. The masses must be rallied—international support and gigantic protest meetings and demonstrations will save the Communists from a bloody death. Now is the time to act!

An immediate united front movement of all working class organizations along the style of the Italian anti-Fascist movement must be called into being to organize a powerful defense. The Fascist terror in Germany is of direct concern to the American workers irrespective of political creed. The persecution of Torgler is a direct Endorsed by the IWW, Communist Party of America, Conference of Progressive Labor Action, Trade Union Unity League, Communist Anarchist Group Vanguard, Amalgamated Food Workers, Communist League of America (Opposition), Local 12 A. C. W. of A., Joint Board I.L.G.W. Jewish Workers and People's Committee Against Fascism, a call for an international mass demonstration in front of the Italian Fascist Consulate has just been issued by the Italian Front of Anti-Fascist Action.

As explained in the call, the purpose of the demonstration is to protest against the intensified persecution of political prisoners; to demand the immediate and unconditional release of Antonio Gramsci, Communist leader and Sandro Pertini, socialist—dying in the Fascist dungeons of Turin and Pianosa; of Vella Matteoli and her two children held as virtual hostages in Rome; of Gino Lucetti, anarchist; of Voldica, republican; of all political prisoners; to fight against Mussolini's war intrigues. June 10th coincides with the barbarous assassination of Giacomo Matteoli. It must be made the starting point of a country-wide agitation against the bloody persecution of Anti-Fascist workers. The Italian United Front of Anti-Fascist Action is at work with the active cooperation of the above mentioned political parties and economic organizations to assure the success of the June 10th demonstration which must echo in the Fascist consulate—bureau of Fascist espionage in New York—with the militant protest of thousands of workers of all nationalities.

According to the call issued, the concentration point will be at 79th Street, between York and Fifth Avenues. All workers are called on to be there at 11 a. m. sharp, with banners and placards. From the point of assembly, the workers will march in mass formation to 70th Street and Lexington Avenue, passing before the Italian Fascist consulate and returning to 79th St., where a huge mass meeting will be held with speakers in English and Italian.

All workers organizations are urged to participate in the preparations for this mass demonstration. (Press Release)

IN ILLINOIS

P. M. A. Asks National Drive; Policies Differ

The Progressive Miners of America are now facing a life and death struggle against the operators, the state, the gun thugs and the Lewis machine. For the past several weeks, the policies of the Right wing leadership have weakened the union and now the rank and file are beginning to assert themselves in order to save the P.M.A. As yet, it is by no means a losing fight. Proper steps and correct tactics now can make up for the lost ground and will result in a victory and in the development of the struggle to a higher level.

In class struggle—against the Peabody, Horner, Lewis forces—the P.M.A. surged forward, and like a flash out of the dark night heralded a new stage in the American labor movement. After four years of crisis, after the American workers had been driven back year in and year out, when the whole class was still in disorderly retreat from the capitalists' onslaught on wages and the standard of living, the Illinois miners called a halt and stood their ground. This acted as a temporary rallying ground for the class as a whole. New life began to surge, new hopes began to rise.

But as soon as the union stabilized itself, the Right wing policies in the union took shape and began to dominate. Now it is time to call a halt, to smash the class collaboration policies and to swing out again into the channels of class struggle.

The Illinois miners' revolt and the birth of the Progressive Miners of America came at a period when the American working class was breaking with its past and entering a new period of labor history based upon the entirely new foundation.

This change in class relations in America, and the contradictions it reflects in the Progressive Miners of America are not understood by the majority of the leadership of the new union. They do not understand this condition and are feeling their way forward the best they can. Quite often they take a few steps backwards. No one can place too much blame upon this leadership. Rather, one must look to the vanguard of the working class and find out how they have understood the situation.

Only one current of Communism, the Left Opposition, understood this situation, laid the theoretical foundation for the rise of the new union, just as the Illinois mines laid it in a material way through the blood of their ranks. All other Communist currents failed miserably. The Lovestonite, Right wing Communist, to this day do not understand what the struggle is about and instead have lost themselves in the fetishism of fear of dual unionism. They say the miners

Jobless Struggles Sharpen; Unity Need of the Hour

N. Y. Anti-Eviction Conference

New York, N. Y.—More than four hundred delegates attended the Anti-Eviction and Relief Conference called by the Provisional Committee Against Evictions at Irving Plaza on June 3rd. These delegates came from organizations close to or under the direct influence of the Communist party and its unemployed counsils. With the exception of the Left Opposition and the Minstrelites, it was a purely party gathering.

The failure to secure the participation of the socialist or the Lovestonite unemployed councils must be laid directly at the door of fear, sabotage and disruption on the part of the reformists and their close allies in this perditionous job. The Lovestonite Right wing. What no doubt helped the reformist misleaders in refusing to participate in a common conference and a common demonstration are the past errors of the Stalinists for which they have not yet paid in full.

All the efforts on the part of the Provisional United Front Committee to organize the struggle against evictions jointly with the socialist and Lovestonite unemployed movements were in vain. Their sabotage was consistent and to all intents and purposes, deliberate. They, together with all city-wide organizations were invited to a provisional conference last May where a program, a series of demands and a plan of action were to be elaborated. The socialists and their unemployed leagues were conspicuous by their absence. The Lovestonites came but withdrew after the provisional conference rejected their unacceptable demands to exclude all political or trade union bodies.

But this was hardly the worst of the actions of the reformists, whose whole policy has helped to divide the unemployed to the great satisfaction of Tammany Hall. The misleaders called a conference of the party of the reformists and their participation in the provisional united front, but they sat side by side with the socialist party in the conference of their own calling. What the reformists really had objection to was the militant Left wing organizations.

Not content with this miserable record of sabotage the Right wing, in mortal dread of the program of the Left wing militants and their effectiveness in action, excluded the complete delegation of the Provisional United Front body from the conference. The revolt simmered among the rank and file of the socialist gathering against this splitting tactic. They moved the resolutions were invited to a provisional

Borders Loses in Split

Majority of Group Refuses to Quit Jobless Federation

Springfield, Ill.—The Workers' Committee, led by Karl Borders, was the main organizing force of the Chicago unemployed conference on June 13th, which ended in a broad united front of the existing unemployed organizations and the establishment of a National Unemployed Federation.

The call for the conference stated that no Communist would be seated. The press reports further emphasized this fact and the credentials committee appointed by the Borders' Committee ignored the credentials of the Unemployed Councils and fraternal delegates from the workers' political organizations until a heated, three hour discussion on the credentials committee report obtained a majority vote against them and for the seating of all delegates present.

This first victory against the Right wing was an open revolt of that very select conference called by the Borders' Committee itself. It was a revolt of delegates from all parts of the country who reacted that Communists cannot be excluded from the Unemployed Federation.

After the report of the credentials committee, the conference divided into two sections, the Right and the Left, with plenty of struggles within these two main floor tendencies in the caucuses and committees.

The determining factors of the Left wing bloc fought for the seating of the Unemployed Council delegates, for an Unemployed Federation, for the Leninist United Front tactic as proposed by the Left Opposition, and for an executive committee to include representatives of all political tendencies from the Left to the extreme Right.

The struggle to have unity on the floor by the Left wing bloc enabled the Left to carry every major struggle and thereby, to take another step forward and to save the conference from any reactionary decisions.

After the committee reports were amended, they were then adopted unanimously, except that of the constitution committee, with Dennis Butt as chairman, which received a vote of 87 to 17.

This means that the Right wing rudered the decisions of the conference which it had called.

Now we are informed by Borders and his committees that they are splitting away and that they advise others to do the same.

The Borders Committee desired mechanical control of the Executive Committee. When it could not obtain this and when the enemies of working class unity, who fear unity, put pressure on Borders, he attempted to split our ranks.

Borders learned a second lesson this time. First he learned that Demonstrations in New York End in Alarming Disunity

New York, N. Y.

Four thousand New York unemployed demonstrated on Tuesday, June 7th, for immediate jobless relief from the city government. Three delegations appeared before the Board of Estimate with proposals for relief. A joint committee headed by Norman Thomas, and representing the Workers Committee (Socialists), the Workers Unemployed League (Socialists), and the Association of the Unemployed (Lovestonite controlled); a committee from the Left wing unemployed conference for immediate relief; and a delegation of clergymen and social workers appeared before the Board of Estimate to present their proposals for relief.

Efforts had been made previously to unite the three workers unemployed groups in a common action for relief. The Socialists and the Lovestonites had demanded that a precondition for the united front be the absence of any political banners at the demonstration. This the Left wing conference refused. The latter decided to join the demonstration of the other groups but march under their own banners and have their own delegation at the Board of Estimate.

As the delegations went into City Hall, the Right wing workers marched past the square to Battery Park while the Left wing workers, who were standing in line on the east side of City Hall waiting for their delegates to return, greeted the other procession with fraternal slogans of: "Join the united front," "Long live the unity of the working class," etc.

When the Left wing delegation came out of City Hall the demonstrators marched to Battery Park to join the meeting that was taking place there. As the two demonstrations met at Battery Park, Carl Winter, of the Unemployed Council, jumped on the speakers' truck of the Left wing meeting. A howl went up from the Left wing workers for Winter to be given permission to speak. This was refused. When Jack Rubenstein, of the Association of the Unemployed—a Lovestonite—was introduced as a speaker, he was heckled and then the wire of the loud-speaker was cut!

Winter was raised on the shoulders of several workers and carried away a couple of yards where he began a counter meeting! In various sections of the demonstration small scuffles and near fist fights took place. The Socialists and Left wing workers were hurling invectives and epithets at one another. Party members who wanted to maintain order, formed a ring around the demonstration so as to keep the enraged socialists from joining!

The Left Opposition participated in the demonstration. A leaflet on the united front for immediate jobless relief was distributed. Many of these leaflets were torn by party members and physical provocation was attempted. Despite this, a goodly number of Left wing workers joined the Left Opposition section of the demonstration and followed our lead in making the Jobless Force Relief in L. A.

Los Angeles, Cal.—An event has taken place in the city of Los Angeles (White Spot) on May 29th, which is making history for this region.

Up till about four weeks ago, the organized unemployed were receiving 40 to 50,000 gallons of skimmed milk, which was given to them for distribution by the Food Administration. Out of the clear blue sky this distribution of the milk was stopped with no tangible reason given.

A committee of men were elected at a meeting of the County Council of the U.C.R.A. (United Cooperative Relief Association) to investigate why this supply of milk had been stopped. After being shunted about from office to office, a promise was finally elicited from one of the heads of the Food Administration that within 24 hours new appropriations would be made to provide this supply of milk. To make a long story short, this promise along with many others relating to the question of the state and to the unemployed was juggled about until all supposed, formal, legal methods were well nigh exhausted.

At a meeting of the council of City Units (the progressive body of the U.C.R.A.) a committee of women was selected with comrade Jane Rose as chairman. Two mass meetings of women and children were held at which a decision was made that on Monday the 29th, all women and children of the organization be assembled at one of the units and ride down the main thoroughfare in open trucks, with placards and signs reading: "We demand milk!", "Thousands of gallons of milk are being poured down the sewers—Why?", etc.

The police, directing traffic along Broadway (the main thoroughfare) were completely bewildered and stood at their posts gaping. The procession moved down the crowded streets, thousands of people looking on with wonder on the sidewalks. When the truck reached the meeting place of the Board of Supervisors they were greeted by "Red" Hynes and a number of uniformed and plain clothes officers.

Committee Arrested

Upon alighting from the trucks, the committee headed by Jane Rose, Mrs. Robinson from the U.C.R.A. Mrs. Robinson and Mrs. Khea were

LEAGUE ACTIVITIES

A Calendar of Effective Action

Minneapolis, Minn.—Early in April, the German Campaign of the Minneapolis Branch of the Communist League was the "talk of the town" among the party members and the class-conscious workers in the labor movement here. The Mooney conference was under way. The Left Opposition was seated in this conference before the party officially showed its face in it. Our delegates, C. Skoglund, O. Coover, and C. Duane, played an important part in building this movement from the very day they entered it, though Specter, of the Party, had initiated it on his way East from the West Coast. The City Election Campaign was on with the League correctly criticizing the opportunism of the party in the Workers United Front Election Ticket Conference. The call for the May Day United Front had been issued by the party. Here is a calendar week by week:

March 30th: Issued first statement upon the Workers United Front. The political pamphlet, Walter Frank, entered the Mooney conference, our comrades were placed on transportation, tag day, and City Auditorium meeting committees. Recruited three members for branch field tag day collection for Militant on Sunday.

April 7th: L. O. instrumental in adding a trade union and W. C. Branch to Mooney conference. Its members on Committee which got permits for City-Wide Tag Day and use of City Auditorium. Was seated in May Day Conference of party and its members were active visiting organizations for further delegates. Comrade Skoglund made motion in Mooney conference that endorsed the May Day movement and affiliated this body with it. Branch donated $50.00 to May Day Conference. Two comrades joined U. C. and were active in same, one being manager of the Hunger Fighters, its local organ, for his section.

April 13th: League member elected to U. C. to Mooney conference, and made member of its District Council. Three members active in only 11th branch, wrote resolutions on Scottsboro and spoke at two Negro churches on same question. One comrade elected to May Day Conference from 11th branch.

April 20th: League participated on mass in Mooney City-Wide Tag Day, had 27 collectors out of about 60 participating. Brought in about one-third of all the money collected. Meanwhile its delegates in conference on a committee with two trade unionists and one party member collected some $70.00 from solicitation of prominent individuals and received pledges for considerably more money. One comrade elected from 11th branch to Chicago Mooney Congress, another elected from party-controlled John Reed Club to Chicago, another from a Coal Drivers' organization, a supporter of L. O., was proposed and elected in one of the largest Workers Circle Branches by our comrades in there. The City Mooney conference elected one of our comrades, C. Skoglund. The party sabotaged his election but was powerless because of his leadership and activity in conference. Proposed that Mooney Conference support May Day Demonstration with $50.00 donation, accepted. The total amount of money collected by May Day Conference for expenses was $3.00. L. O. was instrumental in collecting about one-third of this fund also.

April 27th: Week of May Day. Mooney conference included about 17 local trade unions. Two L.O. comrades were on its executive of five. In last conference before Chicago our comrade, O. Coover, ran against the party organizer, J. Karson, for chairman of send-off meeting, lost after splitting votes with the party candidate, 15 to 13. Our delegate in May Day Conference was on committee that gave reply to the S. P.'s refusal to have a joint May Day demonstration. All League members marched in May Day parade. We had several banners with our slogan and name. Following evening we held our indoor May Day celebration meeting in the Court House, where between 40-50 workers heard our position upon the United Front, Germany, and C. I.

May 5th: The comrades from Chicago Mooney Congress gave reports in their respective organizations upon the Congress from the Left Oppositionist point of view. They were: in the City conference, the John Reed Club, and the local 11th branch. The Branch issued a second lengthy statement upon the party election policy and pledged its support for the Communist candidates, while criticizing the opportunism of the party policy and tactics in the elections. Our Jewish comrades were active in a broad united front against German Fascism, which included every Jewish workers' organization. Here we found the opportunism of the party running rampant, side by side with adversarism.

May 9th: Our activity in the various united fronts with the party resulted in raising much talk and excitement in party ranks. Branch decided to use contacts to build fraction of League in party. There had been expulsions and much threatening of members by the local bureaucrats. The City primary elections had taken place and the party had made a bad showing compared with elections prior to 1931, despite the false covering the party put around itself in this election, running its candidates under the name, United Front Workers Ticket, and the opportunist propaganda around its "immediate demands." It decided to issue statement on Results of Election and indicate line for party in the General election, June 12th. In Mooney conference three comrades were elected on committee to arrange meeting for congress reports. Our comrades in 11th initiated a welcome meeting for the L.O. D. O. Davis, who was released from jail that week. Meeting was successful. Three comrades spoke in a meeting of 125 Railroad workers, arranged to discuss the Wage Question. Our comrades in the Unemployed Councils were active, one being elected on the City Council, another elected to a district council. On Sunday, fifteen comrades turned out for a Tag Day collection for the German Opposition press and collected $24.32.

And so we progress. We have from day to day seen direct results from our activities. This has encouraged us to more activity. Our ideas and our example to the party members is falling the edge of the weapon of slander the Stalinist bureaucrats use against us. Our press and leaflets are being read daily in every corner of the party halls and headquarters. Germany, the United Front tactic, and "inner-party democracy" is worrying the party leadership here as much as it interests the rank and file members.

Immediately arrested by the Red Squad. After this one of the finest spectacles of working class militancy occurred. About 150 women and as many kids piled off the trucks, surrounded the police car and demanded to be arrested along with the committee. Here ensued a unusual occurrence. Hysterics were absolutely flabbergasted. They didn't know what to do in the face of the tremendous crowd assembled. Any attempt at the usual violence would have precipitated a fight such as Los Angeles has never seen. In fact, the subsequent attempt to disperse these women and kids only resulted in their militant resistance. Empty milk bottles were used freely by the women and the kids, who couldn't reach high enough kicked the shins of the police and the Red Squad thugs.

The committee was then released and ushered into the chambers where the Board of Supervisors were in session. The entry of the committee was greeted by a confused exchange of whispers on the part of the supervisors. The committee demanded to be heard and the Board of Supervisors immediately suspended all other business. This body treated to a barrage of speeches carrying a clear and open challenge, which was topped by a concise analysis of the class nature of the unemployed movement and the need of organized working class pressure. After a lengthy speech by Jane Rose, a motion was made to adjourn for lunch.

Demand Continuation of Hearing
This was done with the object in view that the calling of a recess would result in the demoralization of the demonstrators. When the session was renewed after two hours adjournment, the committee of women reached in, in a body, and proceeded to demand a continuation of the hearing which was granted. After several others of the women had taken the floor for a number of hours, comrade Jane Rose summarized with the warning that any indefinite promises would result in a demonstration at the next session of thousands of women and children instead of hundreds.

A motion was immediately made by the chairman of the body of supervisors, Shaw, to the effect: "That the Board of Supervisors instruct the Board of Administration office to furnish whatever amounts of milk may be required by all the units of the unemployed organization of Los Angeles County."

This demonstration was the first effective one of its kind carried out by the unemployed as a result of the initiative of a few members of the Communist League of America (Opposition). Los Angeles branch. It implies a sharp line of departure from the previous class collaboration policies which dominated the life of this unemployed organization.

Without the calling of a formal united front, the committee elected by the women represented practically every phase of the Los Angeles labor movement. They worked cohesively and accomplished marvelous organizational results. Out of this movement grew the organization of a Women's Council of the C.I.R.A., which bids fair to become a vital force in forwarding the class struggle concepts of the unemployed.

DEMOCRACY IN ILLINOIS

Determined that the miners shall hold no gathering to discuss their own affairs, Sheriff Robinson, tool of the coal operators, refused the request of local union, 1782 U.M.W.A. Royaltown, Ill., to hold a meeting to vote funds for payment of taxes on their hall. Bitter must have obtained some of his ideas from "democratic" Illinois.

T.U.U.C. Attacks Left Wing in the Furniture Union

The policy of craft unionism into which the Stalinists are slowly pushing the Furniture Workers Industrial Union—as exemplified by the Newport strike (see Militant of April 15th, 1933)—has received the official approval of the Trade Union Unity Council in its decision finally renounced in bureaucratic fashion three weeks after the strike was over—almost two months after the Left wing appeal was raised in the union.

In presenting their conservative viewpoint in the form of a decision against the appeal of Sol Linkin, secretary of the union, it was necessary for them to resort to childish distortions and falsifications on the Left wing proposals in order to vindicate themselves.

When the Newport framemakers struck in April we immediately proposed "that no man in the shops which we control be allowed to join a union which comes from the Newport Furniture Company and is made by scabs." We don't know exactly whether it was simply because we proposed it, or whether they are inherently against a Left wing policy, but at any rate, they quickly defeated our motion and carried a proposal for a mere "propaganda campaign" against Newport frames, leaving it up to the individual worker whether or not to work on these frames. Now every rebel worker knows that solidarity between the crafts of an industry is the ABC of industrial unionism. Unless this solidarity is manifested in action, the industrial union forfeits its right to the name and starts back on the road that leads to the swamp of craft unionism.

Call Proposal "General Strike"
It is because they felt the correctness of our viewpoint and the effect that our appeal for solidarity had upon the workers that the T.U.U.C. was obliged to distort our proposal into a utopian call for a "general strike of the industry," and then proceeded with the fierceness of a Jeremiah to flay this alleged position of the Left wing.

"A general strike in an industry where our union has not yet control over the workers," runs the post-mortem strike decision of the T.U.U.C. "can only be an empty phrase and secondly, cannot be carried out in a bureaucratic fashion due to wishes." We are happy to see the apparatus men acknowledge that a general strike cannot be carried out by bureaucratic wishes. It marks a step forward. This does not prevent them, however, by bureaucratic wish, from striking out of the union records the proposals of the Left wing. The practice of striking out all defeated motions (minority proposals) from the records of the union is unprecedented even in the A. F. of L. and has no place in our ranks. Only by fighting against such non-democratic methods in the Left wing unions will the class conscious workers be drawn into the movement.

Militant Attacked
With naive indignation against the publicity appearing in the Militant on the question of the strike, the Trade Union Unity Council "further condemns the articles signed by Linkin in the Militant in which he accuses the union of craft union practices and which actually in its contents condemns the union leadership for refusing solidarity action and also for publishing this slanderous attack before even appealing to the T.U.U.C."

These charges are manufactured out of the whole cloth and once more indicate the need to cover up a false policy. It was not until after the appeal made in April was ignored and left unanswered during a strike in which every hour counted, that Linkin finally stated the Left wing point of view in the columns of the Militant (April 15th). This article sounded the clarion call of unity and solidarity of all furniture workers during a strike of one craft. The T.U.U.C. on the other hand, did not see fit to act on the strike policy until three weeks after the strike was over.

The right to publish views on the strike and the movement generally in the working class press and especially in the revolutionary press, cannot be abrogated simply because the facts in the articles do not complement the leadership. The logical outcome of that position would be to insist on the mechanical acceptance of Stalinism as a prerequisite for membership in the industrial union. Discrimination or persecution of workers who do not hold the same views as the leadership will not build the union. It is a direct violation of the industrial union program, and would cut off all possibilities for the movement to broaden out. More than that, it would reduce it to even a thinner shadow of the official Communist party and its sympathizers.

It is the aim of the Left wing group to prevent this and to help build a militant movement in the furniture industry.

IN THE NEXT ISSUE

The next issue of the Militant will contain a new article by comrade Trotsky on the Brandler group and a piece of Alfa on some new Stalinist falsifications. There will be a first-hand account of life in the Reformation "paradise."

A Postscript on Amter

Unfortunately, we are forced to set aside a little space to some idle and premature gloating by that old, infatigable gossipmaster, the venerable Israel Amter. In the Daily Worker of Monday, June 5, under the title "Congress: Clashes at the Unemployment Conference," our own Ischabod Crane takes the Left Opposition "rides." He says that a "Trotskyite" proposed a resolution on long term credits to the Soviet Union and that this resolution was amended by the Stalinists to read: "where they are building socialism and have already abolished unemployment." Then, shedding a few crocodile tears for the poor plight of ourselves, the followers of Leon Trotsky, having to "swallow" this, he tells us that the "Trotskyite" on the Committee opposed this amendment on the ground that it is impossible to build socialism in one country, saying that he would vote against it. But, after "consultation with his caucus," he returned saying he would vote for it, etc. Quite a jam for the Left Opposition! It takes an Amter to draw the noose so tight.

Only one comrade Amter laughed too soon. If he weren't the Ischabod Crane that he is, he might have asked himself a few questions first. For instance, why is it that only now, after the Five Year Plan has been completed, after four years of crisis and unemployment, after years of agitation by the Left Opposition, this slogan of long term credits has humbly been accepted by the party? Further, why it was left to a Left Oppositionist to propose it? Still further, how the Stalinist bureaucracy in Moscow, which ditched this slogan of militant revolutionary action for backward maneuvers with the capitalist government, would react to Amter's own labeled boldness? The joke is on Israel himself, if the truth must be told.

But, a word on the action of the Left Opposition caucuses at the adventurist bungling of the bureaucratic criticism in Russia itself. Instead of telling the American workers, that because of this and because of the rise of Fascism in Germany—for which Stalinism likewise bears its share of responsibility—the world imperialists, Wall Street in the lead, are more ready for bloody, open intervention against the workers' fatherland than for the extensions of credit to it; instead of telling the American workers, that due to these dangers, the kind of the Soviets is more in need of their active help than ever, in their day to day struggles, in the struggle against unemployment—that instead of all this: the epigones of Stalinism in America merely cover up the dangers and resort to a meaningless phrase which only serves to cover up their own "infallibility," or rather, their own bankruptcy.

The Left Opposition made the concession and voted for the resolution as amended because the concession of the Stalinists to the point of view of the Left Opposition was the greater. Once again the Stalinists in America voted for a slogan proposed by the Left Opposition which they had previously denounced as "counter-revolutionary." In voting for this slogan of the Left Opposition, they at the same time dealt a terrific blow to the theory of socialism in one country and to the knee-bending reactionary diplomacy of Stalin, subordinating back-door deals with the bourgeois governments to the revolutionary solidarity of the international working class—which flows from that illogical "theory." That was what was really involved. And that was a genuine victory for Communism as a real step forward for the Left wing of American labor in the struggle against unemployment and capitalist misery.

SUBSCRIBE TO "UNSER WORT"

Workers and friends who read German and are interested in getting first hand accounts of conditions in Germany can do so by subscribing to Unser Wort, the illegal organ of the German Left Opposition, published in Prague.

The paper appears every other week. Subscriptions are for a year only and are $2.00. Subscriptions must be accompanied by currency. Checks and money orders will not do.

Comrades who subscribe must take into account the time element involved. They must allow time for their subs to reach the center here, and ten days for the sub to reach Prague and on top of that ten days to two weeks additional for the paper to reach them. In short, the first copy should reach the comrade about three weeks after remittance to us.

Address all subs to Unser Wort, care of the Militant, 126 East 16th Street, New York City.

CLASS IN "CAPITAL"

A course in Karl Marx's Capital is being given at the Labor Temple, 14th Street and Second Ave., by Albert Weisbord. The course will be held every Wednesday evening at 8:30 from May 31st to August 1st, including 11 sessions.

The unique feature of this course is that "Capital" will be given page by page and the ideas explained just as Marx gives them.

A Fighting Farmer Subscribes: Are You a Subscriber?

We print below a letter we received from one of our subscriber friends in the middle West. The letter is one of many. All these letters tell the same story. The Militant is important to these workers because it gives them a Marxist understanding of working class problems.

Are you one of these workers? Do you read the Militant every week or only now and then? Events are moving rapidly. No class-conscious workers can afford to take an indifferent attitude toward the developing world situation. He should read the Militant regularly. The rates are so priced as to make it possible for everyone who is working to subscribe $2 a year for fifty two issues and fifty cents for twenty six issues and fifty cents for a trial sub of 13 issues.

A LETTER FROM SO. DAKOTA

Strool, S. D., May 28, 1933.

The Militant

Comrades:

I received the notice that my sub has expired. I see Miller subscribed for me for six months and I had forgotten how long it ran—things are moving so fast these days that the time slips by on a person. I am a sheep man and I will have some coin in a few days when I sell my wool and I will send you two dollars for another year if you will please continue the paper. Right now I am broke.

Since reading the Militant I can see your position and the position of the party and I look forward to the coming of each copy. It grounds me that there has to be so damn much friction in the ranks of the rebels but what we look back over the pages of history, I think the old sap head people are doing pretty good to have taken over one country and held power as long as this. I can plainly see how the rest of the world might jump on the neck of the USSR and try to take it away from the people but the people at home might raise a little hell too.

Out here we are organizing the farmers into local committees of action—we are building the soviets and the farmers don't realize it yet. I find that we can organize just as fast as we can get them. Our programme is to resist evictions and to secure necessary relief in the form of work or cash.

Although the work has just started we are going along at a rapid rate, considering the distance between the neighbors and the fact that there have been so few evictions. I find that the young fellows are keen for action although they don't take any active part in meetings.

I suppose you are aware of the National Committee for Action in Washington and the relief conference that we have been putting on all over the country (united front). The party furnishes the leadership but we have to depend on non-party men to carry on the work in the field because there are not enough party men to go around. I don't belong to the party but I have been drawn into the work and will end up in jail one of these days but they can't put us all in.

After we get organized here so that we have enough strength and they jail anyone, we will go up to the county seat and tear down the jail because it is rather weak and it is in an inland town with a small population.

If you have any men you can spare you should volunteer some help to the National Committee 16221, S. W. Washington, D. C. If you have a list of the literature and the price I would like to have it so as I could order some a little later on. I want some of Trotsky's speech at Copenhagen.

Your truly,

A.

Unemployed and employed workers: Demand the extension of long term credits to Soviet Russia, which will bring Soviet orders to open American factories and relieve unemployment!

AMONG THE YOUTH

An Open Letter to the N.Y.D. Committee

We publish below an important letter sent by the Spartacus Youth Club to the National Youth Day United Front Committee. The letter speaks for itself.—Ed.

June 5, 1933.
N. Y. National Youth Day United Front Committee:

Dear Comrades,
The Spartacus Youth Club addresses this communication to you to sharply protest the actions of the committee in charge of the demonstration held in Harlem on National Youth Day. We wish to further the protest the conduct of members of the organization which initiated and is in the leadership of this united front, the Young Communist League.

The executive committee of the Conference had decided that various representatives of the participating groups would speak at the demonstration. At the last minute it was decided that too many speakers were scheduled and a number of speakers were arbitrarily eliminated from the list, among them the representatives of the Spartacus Youth Club. But that did not suffice. Three or four comrades who had not been scheduled to speak were given the platform, clearly showing the dishonesty of the reason for the cutting down of the speakers list, that is lack of time. A united front cannot be organized on such a basis.

Open air meetings were held by non-participating groups around the demonstration. The committee refused to stop them. This helped in the general confusion and lack of order. More important than even that, we charge members of the Young Communist League with violating the program of the united front by tearing leaflets issued by participating groups—the copies of the Militant and Young Spartacus, organ of the Spartacus Youth Club, and the leaflets of the Young Communist League. Opposition—Love some group. Despite the fact that some fighting ensued the comrades responsible for the demonstration and for the conduct of the YCL members refused to intervene. The Red Front Fighters, under whose initiative we do not know, formed a cordon sanitaire around the members of the Spartacus Youth Club thus dividing the demonstration into two and causing disruption. These actions were brought to the attention of the chairman of the steering committee and the district organizer of the Young Communist League. Both denied any knowledge of disorderly conduct or of the action of the Red Front Fighters. After some persuasion, the chairman consented to investigate, but when he saw the circle of the Red Front Fighters, around our comrades he very innocently pretended indignation at us for protesting against the Red Front Fighters' participation in the demonstration! When the torn copies of the Militant and Young Spartacus which were lying on the ground were shown to him, he walked away without a word. The steering committee is responsible for the conduct of the Red Front Fighters.

A lynch spirit existed among the YCLers. Despite the fact that the Daily Worker, the Liberator and other papers were distributed and sold they refused to allow the sale and distribution of our papers. Was this a united front demonstration or a meeting of the YCL and the Communist Party?

It was solely due to the discipline of the members of the Spartacus Youth Club and their refusal to be provoked which prevented an actual riot at the demonstration. The police would have intervened and the value of the united front would have been lost.

We demand that in the united front the participating groups refrain from physical attacks or provocations which would lead to it. We demand the right of every participating group to sell or distribute its literature at united front meetings or demonstrations without interference.

We further demand that the National Youth Day United Front

Conference precisely define its attitude toward the conduct of the steering committee and its chairman at the National Youth Day Demonstration and the conduct of the members of the Young Communist League.

For this purpose we present the following resolutions:

1. The National Youth Day United Front Conference criticizes the conduct of the steering committee and its chairman at the Harlem demonstration for:

(a) discriminating against speakers.

(b) permitting other groups to hold open air meetings around the demonstration without control of the steering committee;

(c) permitting the Red Front Fighters to disrupt the demonstration by forming a cordon around the members of the Spartacus Youth Club;

(d) not calling to order the members of the Young Communist League for provoking fist fights and tearing up leaflets and papers at the demonstration. The Young Communist League, as any other organization, is responsible for the conduct of its membership. We suggest that the Young Communist League inform its members that they must refrain from any physical attacks or provocations on the members of other groups and maintain discipline during United Front action.

3. We declare that every group participating in the United Front maintains its full right of criticism but must refrain from any physical attacks or provocations. That every group has the right to sell or distribute its literature at the United Front meetings and demonstrations except at the time when comrades are speaking.

4. We believe that by the adoption of this resolution we can go ahead with our work and convert the United Front on National Youth Day to a broad united action against Roosevelt's starvation program, against Fascism, against imperialist war, and for the defense of the Soviet Union, on the basis of a concrete minimum program. If this resolution is carried out we can proceed with the preparations for a conference for this purpose.

The non-Communist youth, as well as the Communist youth organized in the Spartacus Youth Club, will reject the kind of united action dished out in Harlem on National Youth Day. The present conference must decisively and clearly condemn such tactics.

Fraternally,

Perry Meyers, Sec'y

National Youth Day in Perth Amboy

Perth Amboy—National Youth Day in Perth Amboy, New Jersey, resulted in one of the most brutal attacks by the police who used tear gas bombs, guns, nightsticks and clubs against the workers, young and old girls, children, women, Negro and white in order to break up the demonstration. About 500 youth and workers had come to participate in the parade from all parts of the state of New Jersey. The YCL was represented by Passaic, Paterson, Jersey City, Trenton, Perth Amboy, Newark, Elizabeth and other cities of the state. One of the features was the large number of Negro youth and children present. The Left Opposition was represented by the comrades of the Perth Amboy unit of the Communist League of Struggle.

The parade was formed on Elm street; we marched through the city to the city field to hold our meeting and to carry through our sport event program. The songs and shouted slogans of the marchers gave a fine spirit to the parade and made a good impression. When we got to the city field all the police were lined up and refused to give the marchers the use of it but after a meeting with a committee, they decided to let us use Coppers field at the other end of the city.

At Coppers field the meeting was called to order by Alexander who was followed by Charles White, Rebecca Grecht and Frolman. In every way the police tried to disturb the meeting but finding they could not do so made their plans for a regular attack. Police, dicks and thugs of the American Legion began to infiltrate the demonstration and then at a signal a group of them came over to the platform, demanded a permit for the meeting and kicking over the platform began to slag the workers. Without the slightest provocation guns were drawn, shots fired, gas bombs hurled and a terrific beating given to the workers. Several of the comrades were badly hurt and sent to the hospital and nine were arrested.

Throughout the demonstration and the events that followed the Left Opposition, through the members of the Communist League of Struggle, took a very active part. They were the last to leave the grounds and were given responsibility to take care of the affair after it was broken up, getting bail, sending out various committees to get help, etc. There is no doubt that the prestige of the Left Opposition was greatly raised in Perth Amboy by our correct and prompt action. The party members now see that far from being counter-revolutionists we know how to take our place in the front ranks of the struggle.

Letters from Rhineland

Above all, the Nazis are preoccupied with preparations for the First of May. All the factory workers must appear at 8 a. m. sharp at their places of work. Then everybody is to proceed to the public square and from there to the churches, in company with the veterans' associations, etc. No one knows where those who dissent are to gather. It seems that several of the stouter characters refused to obey this injunction; for example, a well known machine factory. The bosses declared against the use of any coercion—their factory was a place of work and not a headquarters for political assemblies. Aside from this, they categorically refused to hoist the swastika on their rooftops. The money which had been collected for the purchase of the flag was sent back by them.

Up to the middle of the last year, one of our comrades was the leader of the section in our town. A certain X... unfurled a strong anti-Trotsky campaign and our comrade was not long in getting himself expelled. After his expulsion, X... was appointed in his place. Even at that time, the rank and file had a great distrust for X... and rose up against the expulsion of our comrade. But the bureaucrats imposed X... upon the workers. Today, in gratitude to the bureaucrats, X... turns all of them over to the Storm Troops and the concentration camps.

38 police functionaries have been summarily dismissed. The reason for this is to be sought in the fact that the chief of the section taught the Schupo (Reichshunter) the use of arms. This man has fled. His activity was betrayed by a member of the Schupo.

The "nature colonies" here have been occupied by the S. T. and the Hitler Youth. The Nazis do not forget anything. They are seizing hold of all domains of life and placing them under the control of the police.

Yesterday I witnessed the following incident: A Storm Trooper argued with a man of about 60 in the street. In the course of the argument, the S. T. beat the old man bloody and knocked him down to the ground. His right temple was an open wound and blood was flowing down his face. The passersby were aroused and hurried off at the S. T. Words like these were heard: "Watch out, when the times change, take care!" Such scenes are not rare here.

The Nazi march on May 1 was quite imposing. It is true that it resembled more a country fair show than a demonstration. It was without movement and without enthusiasm. Depression among the workers, who had to participate under threat of discharge. Here and there, petty bourgeois drinking alcohol from the bottle.

In some places the party comrades still were able to hoist the red flag on a chimney; the S. T. naturally soon came to take them down.

The party distributed a leaflet: "Under the Sign of the Cross." It was so dull and confusing that no one could make it out. The party comrades are so awkward in distributing leaflets, that they are caught en masse. Later, when the Nazi tribunals sentence them to two years in prison, the papers write: "Indignant judges."

Letter from the South West
Here conditions differ greatly according to the districts; first, as to the methods of the new power and then, relative to the party. The strongest oppression is felt in the Palatinate, where there has been an extraordinary number of arrests and where the petty bourgeois elements are greatly aroused against the working class. For our comrades too, the work is of unheard-of difficulty in these regions. But in the big centers, our organization works very well and has remained completely intact. Here the party is nearly finished. To the degree to which their members do not realize the whole weight and the full extent of the situation, it is still possible to be sure, for them to count on some activity. But certain sections of the town have already collapsed.

Letter from Thuringia
After the collapse of the C.P.G., the members became very much accessible to our literature. Those who have remained without an organization seek a new leadership. There isn't any more social democratic literature at all. We cannot complain about that. Some sections of the reformist trade union bureaucracy have, however, published some sheets without any political tendency.

Among the members of the CPG there is great indignation against the criminal leadership; nevertheless, the organizational conservatism still retains a hold on a number of workers with whom our bonds are becoming strengthened. Stool-pigeonry is very much widespread in the party (illegal regional bureaus are ransacked, as well as print shops and conferences; there are mass arrests). The great number of Lumpenproletarians who are now orienting toward "Aryanism" is the cause of this. The S. A. P. and the Brandler opposition are still working, but remains out of contact with their leaderships. Possibilities of legal work have completely disappeared. At the Municipal Assemblies there are at most a few rare social democrats. There are no representatives of the C.P.

The Truth About Conditions in the Labor Movement

Some very prominent social democrats have signed declarations in which they say that they will not have anything more to do with Marxism (Grell, former minister of Public Education in "red" Thuringia; Seele, head of the Reichsbanner and Landtag deputy; Kuhn, Landtag deputy, etc.). Some "Communist" leaders also fell on their knees at the police headquarters. (Töpfer-Wehnert, secretary of the Communist Landtag fraction in Thuringia; the chairman of the C.P. in Thuringia and of the municipal fraction; Schurf, Landtag deputy, etc.) Here is a short report and a sad balance.

Letter from Hamburg
Several middle provincial organizations of the S.P.G. (Bruswick, etc.) have dissolved. The Free Trade Unions have taken the stand of insulating themselves on the new state (this letter was written before Ley's trade union act of May 2—Ed.), emphasize their complete independence of political parties and their services for the German nation. In their meetings, they still all discuss in the bud.

The S.P.G. wherever it still exists, has done away with all the regular district meetings and reports all those which do take place, to the police, which prohibits them. Which is just to the fakers' liking!

The S.P.G. workers, in spite of their final break with reformism and in spite of their revolutionary reorientation, do not, nevertheless, take the C.P.G. seriously any more than they have in the past. They say: "Yes, and you Communists, what have you done? Just as little as our own party."

In the C.P.G. there are strong petulant tendencies, but also strong tendencies opposing them. Sometimes, petulant slogans are sneared over the walls of the houses during the night. The stools have penetrated very deeply into the party; that is shown by the very skillful methods of arrest. Policemen declare that of themselves they can find nothing; everything is done by anonymous denunciations, which come in wholesale and are in great part worthless, but sufficiently useful for the police to enable them to make several arrests a day.

The proletarian quarters in the city are submitted to raids on the very greatest scale, from time to time. These sections of the city are shut off for the whole day, and domicile after domicile is carefully searched. Many typewriters and mimeograph machines are found. In the central bureau for the organization of the Anti-Fascist congress, which was discovered, 18,000 Bafelund stamps were confiscated.

The Discussion on Germany

Resolution of Left Opposition Youth Group of Southeast Berlin on the Question of the New Party

1. The victory of Fascism in Germany has closed the period of our struggle for a turn in the CPG to the policy of the united front, and opened the period of struggle for the creation of the new party. That is a fixed fact on which there are no differences within the ranks of the L.O.

2. Nevertheless a fairly large group of comrades (represented by E.B. in No. 3 of Unser Wort) is of the opinion that it is impossible to set up the slogan of the new party immediately, since this does not correspond to the mentality of most party members, who still need additional experience with their party. We decidedly reject such a viewpoint as well as their whole way of posing the question. In our orientation, we are guided not by the fluctuating moods of the masses, but by the objective facts. These are: (a) organizational as well as political collapse of the CPG; (b) the impossibility of rescuing this party from disintegration; (c) the impossibility of this party's ever again winning the confidence of the working class. The recognition of these facts will inevitably penetrate among the party members as a result of their further experience with the party and will direct their sympathies toward the L.O., but only under the condition that we tell them the hard truth in its full extent, without being afraid of temporary unpopularity.

With the arguments with which E.B. justifies his rejection of the propaganda for a new party under present conditions, one might just as well have rejected the propaganda for the united front policy in the previous period. Only yesterday the party members considered our demand for the Leninist united front as "counter-revolutionary Trotskyism"; today they are convinced of our correctness. Today they reject the slogan of the new party, but tomorrow will convince them of its necessity. If we do not tell them in time, they will try to find a way out in other directions and greatly increase the difficulties of the necessary work of building the new party.

3. The recognition of propaganda for the new party does not mean that we turn this slogan into an ultimatum. In this respect we fully support the slogan of E.B. "cadres for the purpose of checking over the past and clarifying the situation." We consider this slogan as the correct link in the chain for

The instructions of the party to the members prove its entire incapability. In one circular it says that dues stamps for April are still to be pasted into the membership books; furthermore, at cell meetings, control of membership books is to take place. Even after the opening of the Reichstag, membership meetings of as many as 80 men used to take place, all of which were naturally raided. Even meetings of the ILD were sacked.

There are stool-pigeons in even the most internal meetings. They suddenly expose themselves by naming those who are to be arrested by the police, after their arrival. The stools are, or have been for the most part, functionaries.

Sentiment is predominantly depressing. In the party there is, to be sure, a great deal of optimism, which is strongly nurtured from above. "Time is working for us, we still stand before the decisive battles," the masses are turning away from the Nazis in huge numbers, because of their "margarine" policy (the reference is to the policy of emergency measures which the Nazis substitute for the grandiose pre-election promises—Ed.). However, the party did not want to see any differences at all among the housewife. Today it is clinging to them. It does not say that only the class struggle forces of the proletariat can bring the downfall of the Fascist dictatorship, but issues the opinion that Blomberg with his Reichswehr, International Jewry, America and England will bring this about.

The publications of the party are on a very low plane. The leaflets are addressed to all possible strata, but do not gather the revolutionary forces of the proletariat. The S.P.G. is designated in these leaflets as the "main social support of the Fascist government."

The party has sharpened the struggle against the Left Opposition. It utilizes the most repulsive methods. In Wandsworth a list of expelled Oppositionists was found by the police with remarks like the following: "At the time of the seizure of power by the Communists these people are to be turned over, arrested and made harmless." A Left Oppositionist was given to understand in a discussion that he ought to guard himself, they would not shrink back even from denunciation. Another comrade was threatened with a physical attack. Expulsions and insults have not stopped.

The Nazi terror strikes us Oppositionists as well: arrests, threats and deportation to concentration camps. But, by and large, our organization has taken all the necessary measures of precaution for security. Publication is carried on undisturbed. There is even a better sale of publications than previously. A slow stream toward the L. O. is becoming noticeable; connections all around are being strengthened.

At the time of the first capitulation they could still foster the illusion: "Work in the party," "Contact in the party," "Influence upon the masses." Today there is not even a trace of these illusions left. Zinoviev and Kamenev do not return from the opposition to the party, but merely from exile to Moscow. Stalin needs their return for the selfsame purpose for which he needed the appearance of Bukharin and Rykov on the tribune during the celebration of May Day; thereby, the void around the "leader," if not filled up, then at least concealed.

The failure of Zinoviev's and Kamenev's first capitulation, which had a political character, proved to be a relentless, and thereby an all the more effective demonstration of the correctness of the Left Opposition; the party can be served only by serving its ideas and not its devastated apparatus. The second capitulation, which has a purely personal character, strengthens that conclusion from the opposite end. Like Gogol's hero, Stalin gathers together dead souls for want of the living. The salvaging of the heritage of Bolshevism, the training up of new revolutionary succession, remains not only the historical task but also a lofty privilege of the Left Opposition.

Another Word About Heckert's Apologetics

The article by H. E. in previous issues of the Militant dealt with the rabid frothings of Fritz Heckert against Trotsky which were "unanimously adopted" by the Executive Committee of the Communist Party of America.

One passage in that memorable speech of Heckert's had not, however, as yet been given an answer by the actual events. This answer has since arrived, and in full measure, at that.

Heckert said literally: "But what this Hitler-Trotskyist platform of the 'United Front' represents in reality, a platform created to exonerate the S. P. G. is proved by the facts and events themselves which took place at the very moment when Trotsky wrote his article. Trotsky poses the defense of Leipart's unions as the second point of a common front between the Communists and the social democracy. At the same time, however, Trotsky's ally Leipart is delivering the trade unions to Hitler, declaring that the ADGB (German General Federation of Labor Unions) accepts the reorganization of the trade unions according to the Italian example. The facts have thus exposed in cruel fashion the counter-revolutionary significance of the 'platform' of the social-Hitler-

On Zinoviev and Kamenev

So they have once more capitulated. The Soviet press reports it triumphantly and the T.A.S.S. communicates the capitulation to the whole world. Meanwhile, it is hard to conceive of a fact which more mercilessly compromises not only the capitulators themselves but also the regime which requires such sacrifices. Broken backbones can no longer serve as props. And the Stalinist apparatus has become a machine for crushing backbones.

Zinoviev and Kamenev were subjected a few months before to expulsion from the party and exile not because of any oppositional activity of their own, but because of "knowledge of and failure to report" oppositional activity of the right wing. At all events, this was only a formal cause. The real reason was the fact that in the atmosphere of general discontentment, Zinoviev and Kamenev constituted a danger. They did it, it is true, capitulate back in January 1928. But to whom? To the anonymous bureaucracy passing under the name of the party. Today, such a capitulation has lost all value. One must acknowledge the infallibility of Stalin in order to have the right to live and breathe politically.

Zinoviev and Kamenev simply could not force themselves to such a moral prostration. They had been in the Lenin staff too long for that, too well did they know Stalin, his role in the past and his real caliber. The oath of personal fidelity to Stalin simply stuck in their throats. And that was just why they were expelled.

It is not hard to imagine what took place afterwards behind the scenes. For some time now the apparatus has been calculating that Stalin's leadership is costing the party too dear. Stalin himself feels it. It didn't go, of course, without the mediation and humble intercession on the part of the so-called "old Bolsheviks" on the one side, and their cynical exhortations on the other. "Acknowledge his genius—that costs very little nowadays—and come back to Moscow; after all, it is better to be in the party." And Zinoviev and Kamenev "acknowledged," that is, they finally sank down to the depths. Their personal fate is profoundly tragic. If the future historian will aim to show how pitilessly the epochs of great convulsions devastate men, he will bring forward the example of Zinoviev and Kamenev.

Since the Bradford Conference (Aug. 1932) the membership has further declined. At the same time a deep ferment developed in the ranks. The Revolutionary Policy Committee, a group formed months previously, continued to issue its own literature and hold meetings, some of which were advertised in the official organ of the I.L.P. in

The British I.L.P. Turns Leftward

The present world economic crisis and the pre-revolutionary crisis of British capitalism has had a marked effect on the entire English labor movement. This is particularly true of the traditionally left reformist party, the Independent Labour Party. A gauge of the growing maturity of a revolutionary crisis can often be found in the changes which the parties of socialist centrist undergo. These changes are seldom fundamental; they are rather changes of form and modes of expression.

To the party of J. Keir Hardie, which, immersed in the "practical" political tasks of the day, scoffed at the German theoreticians, Marx and Engels; the party which produced leading spokesmen for the House of Lords, the bourgeois prime minister, MacDonald, the aspiring Fascist, Mosley—suddenly, at Bradford last August proclaimed itself the party of revolutionary Marxism! The I.L.P. withdrew from the Labour Party, which it had built, on the grounds that its parliamentary representatives were refused to criticize and vote against the Labour Party in parliament. This led to the organization of the Socialist League by those who wanted to continue the old policy, among them such leaders as H. N. Brailsford and Fred Henderson.

Up to the formation of the Communist party (1920-21) the Independent Labour Party contained some of the best revolutionary socialists in Britain. Such an outstanding spokesman of the present Communist party as R. Palme Dutt, a Left Centrist of high calibre, got his training in the I.L.P. After the World War, the Independent Labour Party made advances towards the Communist international; addressed a number of fundamental questions to it. The reply drafted by Lenin, made even the more "radical" leaders lukewarm. Supporting the view of a democratic or parliamentary "revolution" to attain socialism, criticizing the Labour Party's open collaboration with the British imperialists, and permitting wide differences of opinion and action within the party, the Independent Labour Party has succeeded in keeping thousands of militant workers from the Communist party.

1914—20,000
1919—32,000
1921—37,000
Aug. 1932—72,000

Since the Bradford Conference (Aug. 1932) the membership has further declined. At the same time a deep ferment developed in the ranks. The Revolutionary Policy Committee, a group formed months previously, continued to issue its own literature and hold meetings, some of which were advertised in the official organ of the I.L.P. in

Realignments in the Camp of English Reformism

London and Lancashire, especially the influence of the R.P.C. was strong. The leaders of this group, Jack Gaster, C. K. Cullen and others—most of them intellectuals—call themselves Leninists. In the divisional conferences held last February they presented their program for stricter discipline in the I.L.P. for a revolutionary policy, the immediate organization of workers' councils (soviets) which would develop into a counter parliament, and for an approach to the Third International for collaboration. At the London and South Divisional and Lancashire Conferences their proposals were accepted. At the latter conference a resolution for immediate affiliation to the Comintern was rejected.

The belated manifesto (March, 1933) of the Communist International for united front against Fascism was hailed by the I.L.P. as a vindication of its viewpoint. It had participated on Feb. 4th in the Left Socialist Parties' conference at Paris which appealed to the Labor and Socialist International and the Comintern for united front against Fascism. A. Fenner Brockway wrote: "The greatest significance attaches to this manifesto because of the recommendation to the Communist Parties to cease the attacks upon other sections of the working class as a basis of united action can be found." (New Leader—3-10-33—Emphasis in original.)

The I.L.P. addressed an invitation to the C.P., the Labour Party, the Co-operative Party and the Trade Union Congress for united front on a definite minimum program against Fascism and the capitalist offensive at home. Only the Communist party accepted and a number of demonstrations have been held throughout the country by joint committees. The "recommendation" of the Comintern was swallowed by the robot leaders of the British C.P. who quickly forgot that "this demand of the I.L.P.'ers, whether locally or nationally, for the dropping of criticism is a demand which must be mercilessly fought." British Daily Worker, 8-13-32.

The I.L.P.'s forty-first annual conference, last April, met under such conditions: a sharp crisis in British imperialism, the victory of Fascism in Germany, a steady decline in membership, growing contentment towards Communism in its own ranks and the beginning of united front action between the Communist Party and the I.L.P. The address of Brockway on the effect of the decisions of the Bradford conference, the need for an extra-parliamentary institution, workers' councils, to unite the working class for the overthrowing of capitalism and the subordinate role of the bourgeois parliament was acclaimed by the Conference. A resolution to support the unemployed organization led by the Communist party, the N.I.M.W., was carried overwhelmingly after some dispute.

A sharp fight occurred on the question of international affiliation. The National Council of the I.L.P. recommended disaffiliation from the Labour and Socialist International. A resolution was introduced supporting disaffiliation and instructing the National Council "To approach the Secretariat of the Communist International with a view to ascertaining in what way the I.L.P. may assist in the work of the international." The mover of the resolution made it clear that he was not asking for affiliation to the Communist International but collaboration in whatever form is agreed upon. John Panton, secretary of the party, supported the National Council's view and polemized against the resolution calling for approach to the Comintern. Jack Gaster defended the resolution. The vote was very close. The resolution carried by a vote of 83 to 70.

Another resolution, which embodied the full program of the Revolutionary Policy Committee, offered a new constitution for the party. It emphasized the function of the workers' councils and the subordinate role of the parliament. It was then strongly opposed by the old guard, particularly F. W. Jowett, who stated that the I.L.P. should aim to achieve socialism by parliamentary means. The leaders of the R.P.C. supported the new constitution. According to the New Leader report of the proceedings (4-21-33) "by 80 votes to 5, (the) Conference rejected the vital section of the new Constitution." Apparently the most ambiguous terminology was desired!

An interesting part of the Conference was the attempt to introduce stricter discipline in the I.L.P. A motion to introduce a probationary period in which the applicant for membership would be tested was rejected. Further an amendment was introduced "safeguarding" discipline by disciplinary action on account of their objection to take part in war, was withdrawn on an understanding from John Panton that the N.A.C. would accept its intention! A truly revolutionary socialist party!

A resolution for united front action with the C.P., Labour Party, etc., was adopted after some discussion. The new national council although containing supporters of the Revolutionary Policy Committee like Jack Gaster is in the main controlled by the Brockway-Maxton tendency in the I.L.P.

The Comintern has replied to the request of the I.L.P. for collaboration. Instead of issuing a programmatic declaration so as to win the revolutionary workers within the I.L.P. to Communism, the Stalinist bureaucracy has confined itself to merely welcoming the step and declaring its readiness to collaborate with the I.L.P. A most excellent opportunity missed to educate the ranks of the I.L.P. But Stalinism, once again taken by surprise, is uncertain as to the next steps; it is in a quandary.

The American Stalinists claim the results of the I.L.P. conference and particularly the resolution to approach the C.I., which they incorrectly interpret as application for membership, as a victory "for the united front policy of the Communist Party of Great Britain. (Daily Worker—4-17-33) What sheer nonsense! In the last few years, the British party carried on the cruelest attacks of any section of the Comintern. Subordination to the "Lefts" during the British miners' and general strike in 1926; its constant changes on the parliamentary field which were understood by no one; suddenly the third period with its "independent" leadership of strikes and the building of new unions; then the famous Charter campaign which was an attempt of a united front mass movement which was still-born, its policy of falsification, etc., alienated the best sections of the I.L.P. from the British party. The proof is the fact that few of them were won for the party.

In the columns of the Labour Monthly a discussion has been going on for some time on "Communism and Left Socialism" of some value. But the practical activities of the party (with the exception of its unemployment work which has been fruitfully negated most of the gains made in that manner. In more recent times the Communist Review has contained articles which attempt to discuss the problems of the Left Socialists. But the influence of the British party on the Independent Labour Party or the Revolutionary Policy Committee is negligible.

The tendency towards Communism in the I.L.P. is due primarily to the awakening of the more conscious elements within it to the impasse in which British imperialism and world imperialism finds itself today. It appears paradoxical that at a time when Stalinism has failed miserably in Germany these elements approach the Comintern. From one point of view it shows their own political immaturity, from another, and more fundamental view, is an indication that they correctly do not identify Communism with Stalinism.

Good Response to Appeal

We have received the following communication from the American Committee of the International Commission for Help to the Imprisoned and Deported Bolsheviks (Left Opposition):

"We wish to thank the friends of the October revolution who have responded so promptly and generously to our appeal for help to the imprisoned and deported Bolsheviks of the Left Opposition in the Soviet Union. Gratifying as the response has been, however, it is only a drop in the bucket compared to the needs of the revolutionary fighters who are undergoing the severest privations in the struggle for their convictions. We ask all those who wish to keep intact the reservoir of revolutionary energy and experience represented by these men to renew their efforts to help us raise the funds which are so urgently needed.

"We wish to report the results of our efforts from the organization of the American Committee to the close of May 31, 1933 as follows: RECEIPTS from donations, $373.75

EXPENDITURES:

"We are not publishing the names of individual donors, as some of them have requested us not to make their names public, but we acknowledge all donations individually.

"Some of the letters which we have received accompanying donations show such splendid spirit that we cannot refrain from quoting a few:

"Dear Comrade,
"Enclosed please find a money order for two (2) dollars, which is a donation to the fund for the Russian Bolshevik-Leninists to help them along and save their lives. We consider them the real comrades, and further we consider their banishment as the blackest spot on the body of the Soviet State committed by Stalinist bureaucracy. The contributors are as follows:
M.K. $1.00, J.C. 50c, K.C. 50c.
With Communist greetings,
K.C., Bethlehem, Pa."

"Dear Comrade,
"Read the April 15th appeal of the Militant for contributions for our comrades exiled by the Stalinists.
"Enclosed please find $2.00. Sorry it isn't more. I had this money set aside to purchase painting materials, but it will give me more pleasure knowing of the good to be gained from it for our poor comrades in distress.
Sincerely yours,
I, New York City."

"Dear Comrade,
"Please accept my dollar as subscription for our comrades of the Russian Left Opposition who are struggling in exile from Stalin's persecution.

any, that is to say, counting upon a reinforcement of the workers' state and of the German proletariat. Developments took the opposite road. Today, when the German workers are crushed, when the Soviet state has been weakened, the course to adventurism of the purest war.

Without such a course, that is, without direct preparations for revolutionary war and the insurrection in Germany, the breaking-off of diplomatic relations and the economic boycott would only be an impotent and miserable gesture. The absence of Russian orders would, it is true, increase somewhat the number of the unemployed. But has there been a lack of unemployed for the revolution up to the present? What was lacking was a revolutionary party and a correct policy. That is doubly lacking at present. We cannot avoid examining now the question as to whom economic reprisals would benefit in Germany: Fascism or the proletariat. It is clear that the general problem of the conjuncture is not solved by Soviet orders. Reciprocally, the refusal of economic connections with Germany would, on the other hand, hit Soviet economy heavily, and consequently, the workers' state still more.

We repeat: the Stalinist faction bears a direct and immediate responsibility for the collapse of the Chinese revolution, for the destruction of the German proletariat and for the weakening of the workers' state. Along this fundamental line, the struggle against it must be conducted. It is necessary to cleanse the world labor movement of the leprosy of Stalinism. But it is necessary to fight against the roots of the malady and not against the symptoms of its inevitable consequences.

In the struggle against bureaucratic centrism, we remain, as Marxists, on the grounds of revolutionary realism. If the Bolshevik-Leninists (Left Opposition) were at the head of the Soviet state today, they would be forced, in their immediate, practical acts, to proceed from the relation of forces that has resulted from ten years of epigonic policy. They would be forced, particularly, to maintain diplomatic and economic connections with Hitlerist Germany. At the same time, they would prepare themselves for revenge. That is a great task, which requires time, which is not solved by a demonstrative gesture, but which demands a radical change of policy in all spheres.

the workers demanded a genuine united front, and second, he learned from his own organization that his attempt to split the Unemployed Federation brought a split in his own Workers Committee. The majority of the Workers Committee, led by George Leach and others, are continuing with the Federation. Borders received a majority vote on the city central committee, but the Unemployed Federation received the majority of its members and the largest locals.

workers in the I.L.P.—and they are unfortunately in a very small minority—is expressed in a statement issued by four members previous to the I.L.P. conference. These comrades clearly state that the place of all revolutionary workers is in the Communist party. They point out that the I.L.P. is a social democratic organization and cannot be reformed; that the Revolutionary Policy Committee course in this direction is false and futile. They further point out that the present Communist party has a number of serious shortcomings which require discussion. They immerse the theories and policies upon which they cannot agree: the theory of socialism in one country, the policy of the united front from below, the policy exemplified by the Amsterdam anti-war congress, and the absence of party democracy. They call upon the I.L.P. members to join them in this struggle.

The Left Opposition comrades, who have recently issued a printed organ, Red Flag, have a great task to their shoulders: to win the revolutionary workers of the I.L.P. for the Communism of Marx and Lenin, to educate the members of the Communist party along the line of the Left Opposition. On the basis of the lessons of the British General Strike and the Anglo-Russian Committee, the recent teachings of the German events, the program of the Left Opposition on the colonial question and in the Soviet Union, our comrades in Great Britain should forge ahead rapidly.

consideration of this ruling to exclude the Left wing and passed a motion to that effect by majority vote. It was ruled out of order, in true bureaucratic style, by the cynical socialist impressarios who fished out an unheard-of alibi—"a two thirds vote is necessary for reconsideration" (!). Let the reader keep in mind that the Lovestonites have been part and parcel of this conference and share the responsibility for its treacherous deeds.

Winter's Report

The united front conference opened with an able presentation by Carl Winter, secretary of the provisional committee, of its past history and the persistent endeavors it made to consummate a united front with the socialists and Lovestonite unemployed groups. The latter remained obstinate and blocked the path of united struggle. Despite constant appeal they refused to participate jointly in the demonstrations with the Unemployed Councils at the Home Relief Bureau and went out of their way to avoid common action. The last straw in their stack of deliberate division of the movement was the setting of a separate date for the city-wide demonstration to be held at the City Hall against the eviction and relief-slashing orders of Tammany Hall. This anti-working class move was perpetrated with the socialist leaders in full knowledge of the sincere desire of the United Front Conference for one demonstration on June 6th. All the pleas, negotiations, committees and reasons were to no avail. The reformists were determined to proceed with their own demonstration on June 6th. Towards this end they sent lying reports to the press accusing the Left wing conference of standing in the way of a united demonstration.

Winter exploded this nonsense, which flew in the face of all the previous facts and explained that when the Right wing unemployed groups were forced into a hole by the protests of their rank and file, they adopted the reactionary excuse offered by the Lovestonites that they were ready for joint action provided there were no political banners at the demonstration. He closed with the statement that the Left wing conference would be present at the demonstration on June 6th with the banners of all organizations carried above the demonstrators.

Then followed a pitiful sight. A delegation of three, the Lovestonite Rubenstein, of the Association of the Unemployed, and two others representing the socialist jobs movement, requested and received the floor to make an appeal for unity. This was granted to them. They only reiterated their abominable conditions for the demonstration: no political banners. The rejection accorded to them was cordial but their proposal went against the grain of the militants present.

Characterizing the attitude of the conference towards the "concessions" offered, was a resolution introduced by Amter for the resolutions committee which properly castigated the socialists for their violation of the decisions accepted in the Chicago conference and for their subsequent sabotage. To prevent the Stalinists from retreating from the position of the united front, so painfully acquired, Comrade William Kitt of the Alteration Painters' Union, presented an amendment to the resolution calling for another "appeal for united action of all working class organizations and for one powerful demonstration on June 6th and a united delegation." Both the resolution and the amendment were unanimously accepted by the conference. The proposal to demonstrate on June 6th was also carried. The delegate from the L. O. speaks of a purely agitational character. It was only when the delegate of the Left Opposition, George Clarke, took the floor that a silence of interest fell over the hall. The delegates were desirous of learning what the Left Opposition had to say and what policies it advocated for the unemployed movement.

He greeted the conference in the name of the Left Opposition stating that if the party continued on the new turn in the united front tactic and if they faithfully adhered to the decisions of the Chicago unemployed conference, new vistas of growth and a powerful impetus could be given not only to the jobless movement but to working class action in general. Comrade Clarke condemned the tactics of the socialists and the Lovestonites which, he declared, would divide the unemployed from the unemployed by excluding trade union bodies—the very thing that has prevented the unemployed movement from attaining any mass dimensions up till now. The exclusion of political organizations, he continued, was a reactionary move worthy of a died-in-the-wool A.F.L. labor stake; the struggle of the unemployed is a political struggle—it confronts the state at every turn and requires the participation of political organizations.

Comrade Clarke criticized Winter's proposals for the formation of local councils—delegated bodies of all working class organizations in the neighborhood—as not being extensive enough. Without the participation of central bodies this would mean a revision to the old tactic. He concluded his speech with the remarks that after years of blundering by the Stalinists one could not hope to force the sabotaging reformists into the united front over night, that persistent and stubborn efforts were needed and the goal was assured. His speech was greeted with a good round of applause. Comrade Weisbord of the Communist League of Struggle, also spoke along the same lines elaborating on some of the points.

Minor Intervenes for the Official Party

Then followed the Stalinist barrage—a mountain of confusion. Its mouthpiece was Robert Minor, speaking for the C.E.C. of the Communist party. He roared that no turn had been made, (in face of the C.I. manifesto, the Chicago events and the repeated appeal to the S.P. central bodies, this sounded extremely ludicrous), the party is still following the lines of the united front from below. He laid down the ultimatum demand—if the socialists won't come along with us then we'll go it alone, for who represents the masses, we or they? In this case why all the desperate efforts for united front conferences and demonstrations with the socialists and affiliated organizations?

Israel Amter reported for the resolutions committee. He echoed Minor's ultimatum and said that the Chicago conference of the unemployed did not represent the rank and file of the organizations assembled. Then whom did they speak for, themselves? And upon what authority did they arrive at the important decisions made at that gathering? These questions he quite naturally failed to answer. The whole tone of his report was

"Relief for the Unemployed"

"Is the pressing task of the entire working class! Only a real United Front of all workers organizations—political parties, trade unions, unemployed councils, mass organizations, benefit societies—can mobilize the power of labor in the urgent struggle to save the homes and feed the families of unemployed workers."

"Not single, planless demonstrations, in the nature of maneuvers by one organization to outwit another, but powerfully planned action under the control and direction of a United Front Conference for Workers' Relief can achieve the common aim—to win from capitalist adequate relief for unemployed men and women."

"The Communist Left Opposition takes part in this demonstration in the hope that it will be a step forward toward united action. The manner in which the socialist party has attempted to disrupt the unemployment demonstration called for June 10th by the Provisional United Front Committee Against Evictions and Relief Cuts (Left wing) must be condemned openly. The errors of the official Communist party in the Left wing up to now have hindered the organization of a broad, all-inclusive formation of a united front movement on behalf of the unemployed. The decisions of the Chicago Unemployment Conference held in May marked an advance in the direction of a national movement of all workers' organizations, and should be adhered to."

"We propose that the Communist party issue once more the call for the United Front for Workers' Relief to all workers organizations—without exception. The socialist party and its affiliates in particular, must reconsider their refusal thus far to participate in this mandatory action. The socialist workers must exert the utmost pressure on their leaders to bring about serious participation."

"The emergency is great! Act now! This mass movement and demonstration must be regarded and can be made a springboard for a more powerful working class movement for the overthrow of capitalism, the only genuine and permanent solution to the scourge of unemployment and misery. Workers, unite your ranks against capitalist misery!"

SOUTH AMERICA GROUP OF I.L.O. MARK ADVANCE

CHILI

As has been known for some time, the dissident Communist party, an organization possessing a broad mass influence, has for quite a while taken the road of affiliation with our current. After a prolonged discussion, the plenum of the Central Committee decided in January to declare its solidarity in principle with the Left Opposition International and to propose to the next National Conference, the formal adherence to our international organization.

A telegram addressed to the International Secretariat recently announces its formal adherence:

"The congress of the dissident Communist party has decided after ample discussion to adhere officially to the International Left Opposition."

— DEVINE

An article dealing with the progress and development of our section in Chili will appear in a forthcoming issue.

BRAZIL

Our section in this country is preparing its first national conference. Theses on the agrarian question, on the national, trade union and Russian questions have been proposed for adoption. The conference will also discuss the resolution on the world situation adopted at our recent International pre-conference.

The Brazilian section is publishing regularly its journal "A Lucha de Classe. The comrades enjoy great influence among the Hungarian and Italian Communist emigration.

The comrades collected six hundred francs for our German brother section—they were among the first sections to respond to the call.

CUBA

At Havana, Cuba, there has also been formed, inside the official party, a Bolshevik-Leninist opposition. For the present, it is only a small group, which requests us for shipments of literature and connections with the other sections of the International Left Opposition. The group has a platform, on the basis of which it is working and developing itself.

STRIKES SPREAD IN MANY PARTS OF THE U.S.A.

Workers, organized and unorganized, skilled and unskilled, men, women and children, from the fisheries of the Pacific to the textile factories of New England, from the old established Electrical Workers Union to the unorganized and seemingly unorganizable overall slaves of Lebanon, Mo., have downed tools and fought bitter battles against starvation wages and worsening conditions in the last few weeks. In Allentown, Pa. and the neighboring town of Northampton, women and children struck against starvation wage rates and conditions which beggar description. A number of shops have settled with the strikers with some improvement won. The strike spread to Bangor, Shamokin and Roseto.

750 girls struck three shirt factories in Shamokin. The average wage was $1 to $3 a week. 50 cents a week was common. One girl earned $1.30 in a month of steady work. Electrical workers of Denver, Colo., won their fight against a

that we have endeavored to form the united front with the socialists but they refuse to come along—so, he intimated, we are getting ready to return to the "united front from below." Amter presented a document for the resolutions committee, known as the Workers' Relief Ordinance, which contains various vital demands for the unemployed.

Comrade Kitt made a minority report on the resolutions on the Chicago congress and their application to New York. The resolution omitted mention of the city central bodies that were to be invited to the formation of the federation in New York and called for representation in such a federation on the basis of numerical strength. Comrade Kitt explained that such clauses would give the reformists a loophole to crawl out of the federation and proposed that the unionization take place on the same basis as in the Chicago conference. "The Stalinists defeated the amendments and consequently assume the responsibility for the restraint the reformist leaders will be able to exert on their followers when this question of unity comes up for consideration."

The six hour day and five day week was another bone of contention at the conference with the Stalinists. Defending the ambiguous slogan of the shorter work week, they claimed that everything else was the stagger system, and in view of the fact that some workers were working as high as seventy hours a week, the slogan of the six hour day was out of the question. The delegates of the Left Opposition and the Spartacus Youth brought powerful arguments to bear in favor of the concrete slogan of the six hour day and pointed out that all the conditions were laid for the building of a huge movement around that basis and uniting the unemployed and employed. The Stalinists took fright and accused us of a maneuver to put the party on record against the six hour day slogan and then proceeded to switch the issue with the line that this was only a local and not a national conference, etc., etc., ad nauseum. The six hour day resolution lost but not because the workers were against it.

Finally—the Stalinists for Soviet Credits!

A signal victory was won for the Left Opposition at this conference. After three years of persevering struggle the Stalinists accepted the internationalist resolution of the Left Opposition for recognition of and long term credits to the Soviet Union. Not very long ago it was called counter-revolutionary by the Stalinist bureaucrats—at this conference Amter said that "this resolution (on long term credits) needs little explanation. I am sure that everyone is in favor of it." With a few minor changes which in reality make the Stalinist adoption of this resolution more contradictory than ever, the conference went on record unanimously in favor of long term credits to the Soviet Union. The world does move!

By the time it came to the nomination and election of the permanent committee, the hall had dwindled from more than 400 to about one-fourth as many and with the aid of the remaining Stalinist stalwarts, the committee was packed with apparatus trustees. The minutes, to be sure, were awarded a place on the committee but the "counter-revolutionary" Left Opposition was debarré.

P.M.A. Starts National Drive; Left Wing Puts Forward Own Policies

should not have left the Lewis union. The Stalinists played an equally miserable role. Only after the union was a reality, after it had fought its first major battles, did the Stalinists stop throwing mud at the union. At no time did they understand the upsurge. At no time did they try to criticize its natural shortcomings politically. Now they are trying to make up for lost time and in their clumsy way, they are blundering as usual. Stalinism stands condemned to a greater degree than the progressive leaders who made serious mistakes in their struggle against Lewis.

We have no time to portion out "justice." The P.M.A. is in a life and death struggle and the Right wing policies must be exposed if it is to live. The Left wing forces must be united. Much has already been said in the columns of The Militant about the mistakes of the Right wing and of others. Much more can be said but the main danger now is the danger that the Left wing will not unite. If the Left wing cannot find common minimum demands in action, if they are to remain divided, then the Right wing will continue in its ruinous policy.

There are many progressives who would like to organize a Left wing that excludes the Communists because they think the Right wing may raise a howl and claim that the Communists are trying to capture the union. On the other hand, there are Stalinists who would like to have mechanical control and leadership assured in advance. Both these forces must come to their senses. The militant miners must do all possible to guard against both dangers. No substantial Left wing can be organized without the Communists. No Progressive Miners Union can survive in this period of labor history if the Communists are hunted inside of it like rats, as they are in the unions of the A. F. of L. labor fakers.

The permanent crisis of millions of unemployed, the relief which will pass over to a form of social insurance, the vast army of idle surplus labor that will permanently press down the wage level; the capitalist struggle to maintain a falling rate of profit at the expense of the workers—in short, the impoverishment of the American working class, has already set in. This vast economic change in America and in world capitalism and the new class relationship lie at the bottom of the new period of American labor history. In this, the struggle of the Progressive Miners of America is a prelude to coming storms and battles of the American workers. Trade Unions can no longer stabilize themselves as in the past decades. Reformists must adapt themselves to the new conditions if they desire to serve their masters. But they will not have solid footing. The class struggle of the American proletariat will make life miserable for them.

In this sense, the Right wing policies of the P.M.A. must not be confused with the Right wing of the average A. F. of L. union. There is a distinction, which was not brought about by the leaders. The distinction has been brought about by the different conditions and ability of the leaders to adapt themselves to these conditions.

For example, the Gillespie Mass Meeting on Decoration Day heard Flaherty and Percy speak about how the action of the bosses was driving the workers into becoming Reds. Flaherty said that if fighting for the union means being a Red and a Communist then he was a Red.

The union under the Right wing leadership is slipping fast. The Right wing knows which way the wind is blowing and is already adapting itself to the condition with radical phrases. But the time for phrases is past. We need action now, before it is too late. The more advanced element of the Left wing must proceed to organize a Left wing in every local. No political discrimination. They must fight for the following program, which is not the private property of the Left Opposition, but the collective opinion of other forces as well.

The members must fight for rank and file control and in no way must confuse this with the wrong slogan of "rank and file leadership." The Left wing must fight for class struggle policies and against the policies of class collaboration. Every attempt, on any trumped up charge, to expel Left wing militants because they are Communists must be fought by the whole membership.

Mass action must replace the present passive attitude of the union. Mass action as the base of the legal fight of the Taylorville cases, the Webb-Wang case and the Mooney case, etc., must be started at once. Mass picketing must be resumed.

The Union must take up the fight of the unemployed throughout the entire field. The organization of the unemployed in every coal county into unemployed organizations having the backing of the Progressive Miners of America will enable these workers, who are in the main miners, to obtain more relief than they are getting now. This will keep up the fight and strengthen tremendously the struggle against the operators. Some places (Charlottesville and Springfield) the Relief Agents are driving thru forced labor for relief. If this is accomplished, the operators will see no need of paying even a five dollar scale.

The struggle for the six hour day and five day week with wage increases must be put forward as a concrete demand of struggle. The struggle for wage increases to meet the inflation prices (30 percent increases in some mining towns already) must be started.

The miners' union has already been very successful in drawing in the women. The Ladies Auxiliary has often been the backbone for some spineless creatures in difficult situations. The union must draw in all the youth in the coal camps who are unemployed, potential miners or potential strike breakers. Their power, added to that of the Ladies Auxiliaries, will increase the fighting capacities of the union.

The talk and action of sending organizers to other fields does not answer the important question of how to spread out nationally. The organizing of the Left wing in the I.M.W.A. in other fields is necessary, but the main thing on the order of the day is the CALLING OF A NATIONAL CONFERENCE. Invite the West Virginia miners, the Nova Scotia miners, the National Miners' Union and all Left wing groups in the U.M.W.A. This is the main task of the P.M.A. Any play with words and talk of a national organization without this move will play into the hands of the Right wing and eventually, the operators.

The Left wing miners should organize their own Left Wing. No one can do this job for them. However, they must not get the opinion that only a coal miner knows anything about tactics for coal miners and only a bricklayer knows anything about tactics for bricklayers, etc. The advice and the help of the whole Left wing must be utilized. The miners' Left wing causes should, however, be for and of miners. We do not need any advice about the danger of outsiders. This is a reactionary slogan. What we need is Left wing action. And the quicker, the better. — HUGO OEHLE

The 'New Deal' in Practice Industrial Recovery Bill Hits at Workers' Standards

The National Industrial Recovery Act has at last become the law of the land. After several weeks of wrangling and, at one time even threatening to completely run wild, Congress has at last been whipped into line, and finally passed the bill in substantially the same manner in which it was originally advanced by the president. The precise manner in which Roosevelt intends to use the powers delegated to him remains yet to be seen, but a brief scanning of the three months of new deal program makes one suspect very much that the new industrial recovery deal will be nothing more than a continuation and an extension to the entire country of the Roosevelt dollar-a-day plan.

The National Industrial Recovery Act was originally conceived of by the president as a means of stemming a rising movement for a series of measures that were being advocated by various labor groups. The first and most potent of the measures which had begun to loom large on the economic horizon was that for a six-hour day five-day week. Unexpectedly passed by the Senate, with support being given the bill by the liberals, the A. F. of L. and the railway unions, it began to appear that the Black Bill might suddenly pass through the realms of bills before Congress, to a measure waiting for the president's signature. There was even talk of incorporating into the bill a national minimum wage law. Of course the amendments advanced by the Communists against a reduction in pay, were not even considered. Despite this however, all the manufacturers associations and local and national chambers of commerce rushed into the fray to defeat the bill. They found a capable ally in Franklin D. Roosevelt, who, running counter even to the proposals of his own Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins, requested that the thirty-hour week bill be dropped, and advocated in its stead, the present work.

What the Act Consists of? The bill as it was finally passed consists of two sections. The first, devoted to the increase of public works, is most probably but another one of the many promises to increase public works that the American people became so familiar with under the Hoover regime. Over three billion dollars are to be expended for public works. What this means one cannot as yet say. Does this huge item include within itself the sums to be expended at Boulder Dam for the next five years? Does it include the four year expenditure contemplated in the Tennessee Valley? Does it include the three year naval building program? And does it include the ordinary yearly public works expenditures? Too often now, we have been treated to grandiose figures by the Hoover regime only to find at the end of the year that the total public works expenditure had been less than the year previously. True, the fact that the exact same thing occurred in the New York State regime of our former governor Franklin D. Roosevelt (promises of public works increases observed with actual decreases at the end of the year) should not prejudice one against the three billion dollar outlay; but if nothing more, we remain at least skeptical.

The second section of the bill and by far the more important one is the industrial control section. This section has been hailed as a boon not merely to the industrialists but also to labor. This is the bill to increase profits, decrease unemployment, introduce a shorter work week, produce higher wages and put our entire industry on an organized basis. In short, this measure, like Lydia E. Pinkham's pills, is good for whatever ails you be it falling hair, fallen arches, dandruff and falling teeth. What are the actual provisions of this section, and what is its history and the history of those empowered to enforce it? Only in this manner can we obtain an inkling as to what this huge all inclusive measure will actually mean.

The Origin of the Bill A brief history of the origin of the bill has already been given. It was the administration's way of side-tracking the agitation for the thirty-hour week, for the minimum wage, for no-reduction in pay. As for the man to enforce the provisions of the bill? It is the same Roosevelt who originated the dollar-a-day scheme for the Reforestation Army; it is the same Roosevelt who gave the veterans sugary words and then—a dollar a day; it is the same Roosevelt who forced through a federal wage cut to the lowest brackets; it is the same Roosevelt who has as his intimate counselors and companions the Woodrums and Davises of J. P. Morgan fame. Let us consider the measure itself. It consists of a series of items, all of which have in their opening sentences the word "may." Nothing is stated in a positive manner; all

The Anti-Fascist Congress to Meet in Paris Soon

The European Anti-Fascist Congress will at last take place on Whitenside in Paris. The International Left Opposition has already many weeks ago published its principle declaration for this congress. Since that time the candid warnings in the declaration of the Left Opposition have been confirmed to the highest degree:

Provisions
1. Any trade or industrial group may adopt a code of "fair competition," which code the president may approve, reject, modify or change. Where no code is agreed to by industry the President may draw one up for the trade.
2. After a code is approved it is enforceable by law. The President may institute a licensing system to make the code effective; in that case nobody can engage in that business without a license.
3. Any action under the bill is exempt from the anti-trust laws.
4. In the industries affected by the bill, the workers are to have the right to collective bargaining; yellow dog contracts and the closed union shops are both outlawed, and the employers must apply the minimum wages, maximum hours and labor conditions, "approved or prescribed by the president." These standards are to be worked out by collective agreement between labor and employers if possible. But where no agreement is approved by him, the president may prescribe a labor code of his own making.
5. The duration of the law is one year.

Such are the provisions of the bill. In brief, industry is told to organize under government supervision and warned that, should a

Opportunists in Bloc vs. Lefts at 4th. Gillespie Conference

Gillespie, Ill.—The fourth session of the conference of the Progressive Trade Union Educational Committee held at Gillespie, Ill., on Sunday, June 11, rubber-stamped, by an overwhelming majority, the policies adopted at the previous conference. For the third consecutive time, the "new federalists" were defeated.

The incomplete credentials report listed 158 delegates from 43 organizations. Only 30 unions were represented (partial report); a dozen from the Progressive Miners of America, half a dozen from the Trade Union Unity League, and the balance—small A. F. of L. locals from nearby mining towns.

Altogether the representation was as small, if not smaller, than the previous conferences. This weakness was undoubtedly due to the wording of the call which stated that the purpose of the conference was "to further our policy of organizing... into a new labor center," thus implying the conference was held for the purpose of organizing a new federation, and possibly also, in minor degree, due to some of the former represented organizations not receiving copies of the call from the secretary.

A Bit of Sleight-of-Hand

McFarlane, secretary of the Progressive Trade Union Educational Committee, who is the leading force in front of the scenes to organize a "new federation" was, incidentally, also compelled "because of lack of finances" to mimeograph only a portion of the policies adopted at the last PTUEC conference. The portions omitted, were the most important points, which he personally disagreed. (1) That a sufficient basis for the creation of a new federation of labor is lacking at the present time. (2) That at the present time we cannot form a permanent organization due to the limited and sectional representation at the conference. (3) To continue as a committee to keep in touch with sympathetic trade union bodies and be ready to act jointly with them in the preparation of a broader conference on a national scale.

Class War Rages In Mine Area of Illinois

Battling heroically against strike breakers aided by deputy sheriffs, pickets of the Progressive Miners of America gave a splendid account of themselves at the Peerless Mine of the notorious Peabody Coal Co. in Springfield last Wednesday.

The battle started as 2,000 miners-pickets asked the scabs at No. 59 mine not to go to work. Immediately, firing by machine guns and rifles broke out from the mine tipple. Taking advantage of cover the pickets advanced and succeeded in dispersing many of the gunmen.

Fighting continued in various parts of the city as groups of pickets supported by the heroic Women's Auxiliary fought against efforts to disperse them. Seven members of the PMA were shot, one seriously but 42 strike-breakers and thugs were sent to the hospital. Tom Urban, Progressive Miner, was shot in the stomach and his life is in danger. Many miners were bruised and cut in the light.

The National Guard was rushed from Taylorville and played its usual role. One member of the Women's Auxiliary, insulted by the Guardsmen, knocked out two of them. Picketing will be continued shortly.

Militant mass picketing prevented the attempt to open up a Peabody mine in Saline County, Ill., with scab labor. As 200 rats with Lewis "union" cards, escorted by armed guards and deputy sheriffs tried to enter Saline County they were met by thousands of pickets. During the night the pickets had been stationed at strategic points along the approach to the mine in first, second and third lines of defense with strong reserves stationed near the mine. The New York Times reports the sheriffs as stating that he had never seen so many armed miners and under the circumstances he thought it wise to advise the scabs to retire.

The miners of both Saline and Williamson counties have splendid traditions of mass struggle. The thoughts of the fate of the scabs at the strip mine in Herrin some years ago led wings to the Lewis-Company scabs as they fled back to their paymasters.

The Left wing of the miners are giving the lead in mass picketing and in the fight to spread the struggle into other fields by cooperation with other Left wing forces.

Trotsky Proposes U.S.-Soviet Trade Accord As London Meet Lags

Interview Stresses Inevitable Failure of World Economic Conference and Calls for A Realistic Plan of Business Collaboration Between the Two Countries

The New York World Telegram reports an exclusive interview with Leonid Trotsky on the subject of the World Economic Conference.

The short statement of our comrade outlines a plan for the establishment of economic relations between the Soviet Union and the United States based on the relations of the world economic and political situation.

Its revolutionary, working class content sharply distinguished the position of the Left Opposition from the opportunist position of the Stalinist regime as given by Litvinoff at London.

"The Soviet delegate declared the attitude of the capitalist world toward a state of one hundred and seventy million inhabitants which had adopted the Soviet system and was attempting to bring about Socialism was a contributing factor to the political uncertainty in the world. He urged recognition of the peaceful coexistence of the two systems—capitalism and Socialism." (New York Times, June 15, 1933.)

We give below the reply of comrade Trotsky to the questions asked him as quoted by the World Telegram:

"You have asked my opinion of the economic conference. I have not the slightest illusion about its results. If the numerous conferences of recent years teach anything it is that real contradictions cannot be eliminated by the general formulas which inevitably make the essence of all such conferences. Actions are necessary.

"One of these necessary actions should be settlement of relations between the United States and the Soviet Union. In so far as your new administration launches out on this path, it will take an extremely important step from the standpoint of international politics as well as from the standpoint of economics.

"The Fair Power Pact settles nothing. The real plan of Hitler is to find a point of support in Italy and England for war against the Soviet Union. Whoever does not see this is blind.

"Establishment of normal relations between Washington and Moscow would deliver a much more decisive blow at Hitler's bellicose plans than all the European conferences put together.

"No less important significance may be attached to the collaboration between the United States and the Soviet Union with respect to the Far East. The present conduct of Japan in no wise expresses its strength. On the contrary, the adventurist measures of Tokyo are strongly reminiscent of the conduct of Charist bureaucracy in the first years of the present century.

"But it is precisely these grisly operations of irresponsible military empires that may inexorably engender tremendous world convulsions.

"Liaison between Washington and Moscow would not be without its effect on Tokyo and with a corresponding policy it might arrest in time the automatic development of Japanese military adventurism.

"From an economic standpoint establishment of normal relations between the Soviets and America would yield positive results. The extensive economic plan of the Soviet Union cannot in the coming period base itself upon fascist Germany, with which Russia's relations will inevitably become extremely unstable.

"All the greater significance is thus acquired by economic collaboration of the two republics, European-Asian and American, whose combined population runs to nearly 300,000,000.

"Collaboration could have planned character regulated from above and reckoned on a basis of a number of years to come.

"The presence in Moscow of a United States representative would give Washington the possibility of convincing itself that despite the acute transitory difficulties of trade, the Soviet Union is perhaps the surest investment for capital.

"I would be very happy if you would communicate these simple observations to the American public."

These well reasoned out and realistic proposals for economic collaboration between the Soviet Union, sorely in need of credits and the United States, sorely in need of trade, should give an additional impetus to the movement here for the recognition of the USSR and the extension of long term loans to it. The American workers especially have everything to gain by such an arrangement. A planned and extensive trade agreement between the two countries would be the surest way of opening up numerous factories that now lie idle and would give jobs to thousands of unemployed and starving American workmen on the basis of Soviet orders.

The surest way of bringing about recognition and the all-vital trade agreement is by the mass pressure of the toiling masses upon the capitalist government. The slogan of Soviet Recognition and Long Term Credits should immediately be made to occupy a front rank position in the struggle of the unemployed and in united action of employed and unemployed workers.

The militant section of the American working class must especially inscribe this slogan on its banner. It is an extremely important measure for the relief of workers' misery in the crisis; it is an excellent opportunity to show by living facts the superiority of planned socialist construction over capitalist anarchy; finally, it is the most realistic way of cementing the bonds of international solidarity between the Russian and American workers for the defense of the proletarian fatherland.

THE SENATE INQUIRY EXPOSED

The Banking Investigation Itself is the Biggest Scandal

The greatest scandal exposed by the Senate Banking and Currency Committee investigation has been the investigation itself. Here is a governmental body equipped with unlimited authority and adequate resources, supposed to be investigating the thing that is important. It is like a policeman catching a murderer in the act of stabbing his victim, and "investigating" the knife to see if it is free of germs.

The consequences of the investigation are automatic—either nothing abnormal will be reported, everything being in good legal order according to the highest-priced legal advice; or some little violations even of the capitalists' own law will be triumphantly exhibited, to which the bankers will reply serenely, "What do these little spots matter in comparison with the enormous volume of transactions in which we have acted as bankers should act?"

What Did Morgan Reveal?

What has been brought out in the Morgan testimony? That the gentlemen did favors to their friends, which any business man has a right to do; that they did not pay taxes when they did not have to; that they conducted several different operations out of which they made a profit. What conclusions can the Senators draw from these facts, or what action can they take?

It is true that the liberal press took the opportunity to publish charts showing the Morgan control over great sections of industry, railroads and public utilities, and drew their liberal conclusions from them. The Daily Worker for that matter also published a chart, and pointed out editorially how rotten bankers are.

The real point, however, is that the Senate investigation is being conducted with no other aim or possible outcome than to "expose" for the sake of whitewashing, to continue the delusion that the government apparatus is really interested in defending the interests of the masses against the bankers, and thus to support the capitalist system by pretending great activity in removing its defects. The fake attack on "bad banking" is a means of reinforcing the reactionary idea that banking would be all right if its defects were removed, like freckles, when what is needed is

What Can the Senate Comm. Do?

The greatest possible measure of audacity on the part of the Senate committee might conceivably be a recommendation that private banks be prohibited from accepting deposits; that would mean that a bank, in order to function, would have to assume the form of a corporation. This "revolutionary" act would mean that J. P. Morgan & Co. would have to change their firm name to J. P. Morgan & Corporation. "Reforms" in the income tax law, in the corporation laws, in the banking laws, might result in a little more work by Morgan's lawyers and accountants in figuring out ways of getting around the new laws. The whole would be presented with a great flood of propaganda to the masses as an evidence of the government's Leon Goodman Arrested in Phila.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Comrade Leon Goodman, member of the Philadelphia branch of the Left Opposition, was arrested on Tuesday, June 13, at 9 p. m., at Hope and Jefferson Streets, Philadelphia.

While comrade Roberts was speaking about Roosevelt's "raw deal," cup Gallagher tried to smash the speakers' stand. When comrade Goodman told the cop that he had a permit and protested against this interference the blue coated thug immediately arrested our comrade. The cop did not appear at the hearing.

To magistrate Zweig all Communists are criminals. When the magistrate asked whether comrade Goodman was a Communist he replied that he was a member of the Communist League of America (Left Opposition). This was enough evidence against Goodman, without permitting him to say anything in his defense and the judge immediately railroaded him for ten days.

We continued the meeting, attendance of which kept increasing, despite the arrest. The meeting lasted until 10:30 p. m., with comrade Cary Morgenstern and Roberts as the speakers.

We called upon the workers to be

Chilean Opposition Organized

Santiago, Chile — Our Chilean comrades, who until their recent national congress of March 19, 1933, bore the name of Communist Party (Chilean Section of the C.I.), have decided to carry forward their revolutionary struggle as the Communist Left (Chilean Section of the International Communist Left Opposition).

Their Congress has had an enormous influence on the political situation in Chile. Future numbers of the Militant will include important reports from that section of the battlefield. At present we limit ourselves to the following official appeal taken from the Political Bulletin of the Chilean Section:

Comrades: The 19th of March marks a new period in the revolutionary movement of Chile. This was the day set for the convocation of the 9th National Congress of the Communist Party (Chilean Section of the C.I.). This congress was to meet as a Congress for Communist Unification. The attempt towards unity failed as a result of the refusal of the Leftist (local Stalinist) bureaucracy to take part in such a meeting. Therefore, the 19th of March marks the initiation of the revolutionary efforts of our Party under the banner of the

FROM THE MILITANTS

I. L. D. Expels
Left Oppositionist

New Haven, Conn.—Again New Haven is on the map for expulsions by Stalinists of members of the Left Opposition from revolutionary organizations supposed to be free from all partisanship and based upon broad class issues. These are comrades M. Gandelman and A. von, recently expelled from the unemployed councils on charges of circulating leaflets for and inviting members to the Max Schachtman lecture on the German situation carried by the L. O. on last April 20th. The third is comrade Victor Duell, expelled on June 1 from the Sacco-Vanzetti Branch of the International Labor Defense, in which she held the office of secretary for the last two years.

At the time of joining the I.L.D., comrade Duell was known as an oppositionist expelled from the official party and removed from her posts as secretary of the Workers International Relief and the International Working Women's Council. She never concealed her views and was given out the antidote to members and sympathizers.

Now Trouble Started

The trouble started when comrade Duell asked a few pertinent questions at a discussion period of an educational program held on March 2 last, by our I.L.D. Branch. She had been addressed by a member of the John Reed Club on Germany. The speaker told of the wonderful movement of the C.P. in that country at that time, but nothing was said about its present plight since the rise of Hitler.

In the question period comrade Duell raised the problem of the united front and the catastrophic results consequent on the criminal policy of the Stalinists. She also brought up the matter of the Seventh World Congress of the C.I. She asked whether the whole world situation, particularly the events in Germany did not warrant the calling together of the highest body of the international proletariat. She received no answer to her inquiries, but at once an old party member arose and pronounced her a Trotskyist and a slanderer.

On May 14, a district Conference of Functionaries of the I.L.D. was held in New Haven. After a long report from the District Organizer of the I.L.D. and an address by the organizer of the C.P., the meeting was thrown open for discussion. The discussion revealed that the branches were functioning poorly and much uncertainty seemed to prevail as to how to build the branches on a firm basis. Much was said on the united front. Comrade Duell asked the comrades (they were practically all party members) — criticism was made because non-party members had been drawn into making roses if any one of the members present could tell her exactly where the party stands on the united front. She said that after years of repudiation of the Leninist united front, like a bolt from the blue the C.I. on March 5 called upon the Communist parties to approach the central bodies of all working class organizations with an offer for joint action against the capitalist offensive. She described the good results that had been obtained through the application of this policy mentioning as one instance the Tom Mooney United Front Congress, in the short time that it had been carried out. She added that now, just as suddenly as the previous turn, a revision back to the united front from below was becoming noticeable as was to be seen in the C.I. May Day Manifesto. These remarks called down the wrath of the D.O. of the I.L.D. on her head. He stated that the application of the united front was flexible and that the party would soon clarify the matter to the members. Comrade Duell, he proclaimed, was trying to sow confusion among them and that was intolerable.

On May 25 at a meeting of the E.C. of the branch a letter was read from J. Milton of the Workers School of New Haven by the chairman in which charges were presented against comrade Duell for so-called counter-revolutionary activities. These consisted in acting as chairman at comrade Schachtman's meeting on April 20th at which she was supposed to have stated, among other things, that workers in the Soviet Union were imprisoned and tortured and that Stalin, in particular, was responsible for this oppression. What comrade Duell actually said was that all the ideas of the Left Opposition had been pronounced "counter revolutionary" by the Stalinist regime in Russia and that members of the L.O. had suffered persecution and untold misery, imprisonment and exile, many of whom had given their lives for their ideas. A committee of four was elected to investigate the charges.

The committee, now enlarged to nine by the addition of three witnesses who had attended the Schachtman meeting and two party members met with comrade Duell before the I.L.D. membership meeting on June 1st. The charges were again read and she was given the opportunity to defend herself. This she did by stating exactly what she said at the meeting and showing a written outline which she had prepared before the Schachtman meeting. But other charges were brought against her, such as using the I.L.D. mailing list to send out "The Militant" and distributing it to members and holding counter-revolutionary ideas in general.

The committee then retired to consult and bring in their recommendations.

expulsion to the members of the branch which held its meeting on the same night. There were sixteen comrades at the meeting, ten of whom were new members—some of merely a few weeks' standing. The committee brought in the recommendations that her official position as secretary be taken from her; that she might become a rank and file member for six months and if, during that time, she acted in an acceptable manner she might be reinstated to her former position. All the "discussing" of course came from the old party members.

Comrade Duell stated before the members that if such a status meant the repudiation of her views on the principles of the L.O. she could not consider it. At this she was expelled.

Cannon Meetings
in Minneapolis

Minneapolis, Minn.—The situation in the Communist and labor movement is such today in Minneapolis that comrade Cannon, the National Secretary of the Left Opposition, can speak to "everybody." His last meetings here four years ago were marked by a violent physical attack by the Stalinists, a free speech meeting, and the arming of our members, etc. This time Cannon spoke before practically the entire membership of the official party on one occasion, and good sections of it at three other meetings. Not a whisper, let alone a show of fists, came from any party member in these meetings. They attentively listened to what he had to say.

The first meeting where Cannon spoke was the rally arranged at Labor Headquarters for the Minneapolis Free Tom Mooney Conference. A united front meeting, each organization in the Conference, together with the A. F. of L. Social Party, and the Farmer-Labor Party had a speaker on the program. His speech for Mooney's freedom got well-rounded applause from the party followers and trade unionists in the hall. He taught the Communists here how to speak in a united front meeting. The party members need to learn how to do this very badly. This occurred on Wednesday night, there were about 350 present.

The following Saturday he gave his lecture, "America's Road to Revolution" before 175 workers, in the Mayor's Reception Hall at the City Hall. The meeting was well sprinkled with party members and sympathizers, and socialist workers. When the patented question on "activity" was made, Cannon described the situation of the local unemployment movement and the need for unity and correct policy in it, and then called for names of volunteers who would be willing to work together with the Left Opposition to effect a change. Eighteen workers besides League members volunteered for this end. A basis for an Unemployed League was thus made. Following Monday, the talk on The German Tragedy was given to a large crowd, with more party members present, in the same hall. The thundering indictment of the social democracy's betrayal and the criminal Stalinist blundering policy was driven home, for all questions and discussion centered around the matters of Communist tactics and organization principles. Party members were questioners, listeners, and learners at this meeting. There was no slander or disruptive action at this meeting on their part. Socialist workers were also impressed, for here was Communist criticism with reason.

Comrade Cannon also spoke before the Student Forum on the Campuses of the Minnesota University on the Mooney Case and the movement for his freedom. He correctly tied this case with the general struggle for workers' rights. Sandwiched between these public meetings, Cannon met with the League branch where the miners' campaign and Militant drive was discussed at length, together with local activity. The last of these meetings was an open meeting of the Branch where three workers joined the League, and we summed up the results of the first week of our financial drive for two hundred dollars. We had received cash and pledges for $10.50 to date.

"UNSER WORT"

Workers and friends who read German and are interested in getting first hand accounts of conditions in Germany can do so by subscribing to Unser Wort, the illegal organ of the German Left Opposition, published in Prague.

The paper appears every other week. Subscriptions are for a year only and are $2.00. Subscriptions must be accompanied by currency. Checks and money orders will not do.

Comrades who subscribe must take into account the time element involved. They must allow time for their subs to reach the center here, and ten days for the sub to reach Prague and on top of that ten days to two weeks additional for the paper to reach them. In short, the first copy should reach the comrade about three weeks after the date of subscription.

Address all subs to Unser Wort, care of the Militant, 120 East 16th Street, New York City.

On The Workers Front

Burning Problems Facing the New York Dressmakers

Throughout the entire dress trade in New York and out of town, the workers are talking strike. The question of the strike has become the central question for the dressmakers. Several years of abject misery, involving retreat from half-way tolerable conditions gained by years of struggle, have brought this question to the front with piercing sharpness.

For the past 2 or 3 years, dressmakers in N. Y. have been working for as little as $2 a day and with a top wage of no more than $18 a week for the great bulk of the industry. Union hours are a thing of the distant past too. There are no union hours. The boss dictates and the workers have to acquiesce. How did this dismal state of affairs come about? What are its root causes? That the depression and unemployment play their part, is, of course, a foregone conclusion. But the source of the whole trouble runs much deeper than that.

The Division in the Ranks

For nearly five years, two unions have been fighting each other fiercely, making the united action of the dressmakers in their own behalf an utter impossibility. Every serious and class conscious worker knows, to be sure, that it is the expulsion policy carried out so ruthlessly against the militant Left wing in the once united International Ladies Garment Workers Union by the reactionary, class collaboratorist Sigman-Hochman-Dubinsky clique which started the split among the dressmakers and which forced the Left wing to organize itself on the outside in the Industrial Union. That is clear as day for every needle trade militant. That the Left wing Industrial Union, thru the sectarian "Third Period" policy of the Stalinist leadership, played into the hands of the splitting tactic of the Right wing clique should also be clear for every Left wing militant by now.

Disunity Plays into the Hand of the Bosses

This division in the camp of the dressworkers, initiated by the reformist clique and objectively abetted by the Stalinists, is what is responsible for the prostrate condition in the whole trade. The bulk of workers, grown apathetic because of the disunity, remains unorganized. The open shop prevails. Moreover, then that, the open shop is a constant source of pressure against the shops which still stand under union control.

The state of affairs of two unions fighting each other is, furthermore, a constant trump in the hands of the cockroach bosses whose threads are spread wide over the whole market. The contractor or jobber who is intent in fighting off the demands of the workers in his shop, has no trouble at all in playing off one union against the other to his advantage. He can, with the greatest ease, shift his equipment from one shop to another, and none of the unions are in a position to control his actions, even if he goes so far as to substitute the open shop. The fact alone that the contractor has this alternative is in itself enough of a whip for him to scare the workers under him into submission.

Another insufferable effect of the split is the division it has brought among the various sections of the trade. A section like the pressers, due to the chaotic conditions caused by the split, has become open prey for outright racketeers.

Problems That Need a Solution

It is all these obstacles that have to be overcome, if the dressmakers and the other needle workers are to help themselves out of the rut. They cannot overcome them except by bold, militant action against the boss. That is, by a strike. They cannot carry out such an action successfully against the boss unless there is a single, united struggle, unless the Left wing becomes the heart of militancy in such a united struggle. In all camps there is talk of strike and talk of one, united strike. In words, at least, everybody is unanimous. It remains for the dressmakers to give themselves an account of how this single, united strike is to be brought about. It remains for them to get clear on how the strike is to be prepared.

A strike in the dress trade can be effective only if it comes at the height of the spring season which is the busy season in the trade. To consider the possibility of a strike before next February is out of the question, if the strike is meant seriously. In order to prepare for a successful strike in February, it is absolutely imperative to do the necessary advance work. That is, it is necessary to carry on an intensive organization drive in the winter season which begins in August.

A Single Strike Without a Single Organization?

To talk of a single, united strike without a single, united organization drive is ridiculous. The unorganized are too apathetic to be recruited into two unions at the same time. The two organization drives will end only in confusion and wreck the preparations. If the necessary impulses toward the organization, or rather, the reorganization of the trade, is to be given, a sincere effort must be made toward the unity of the two unions, the International and the Industrial. Only a genuine effort at unity can awaken the workers out of their apathy and raise their confidence once more in organized action.

That the Right wing—Dubinsky, Hochman and Co.—will sabotage all attempts at the establishment of such a fighting unity of the dressworkers is a foregone conclusion. Their actions in the fur trade show that they are always ready to conclude their united fronts with the bosses' associations and the capitalist police rather than with the militant Left wing.

The task of cementing the dressmakers' unity is a hard task and requires grit and endurance. Only the Left wing, armored with a correct policy, is capable of making this necessary an actual reality. It can do this only by patient and persistent efforts to force the Right wing saboteurs to show their cards, and by gaining the confidence of the great majority of the workers in the I.L.G.W.U. in the course of these efforts.

What Policies are Required to Fight the Bosses?

By what policies can this be accomplished? That is the burning question for the Left wing workers. The Stalinists in the leadership of the Industrial Union, do, to be sure, speak of one strike. How do they propose to accomplish one strike? The all-important question of a single organization drive to precede the strike—which is indispensable for its success—they leave unanswered. In other words, up to February the ranks of the dressmakers are to be left confused, no actual push is to be given to bring them out of their apathy. In the strike itself, the Industrial union leadership proposes a united front with Local 22 of the I.L.G.W.U. A conference is to be held; the conference is to get Dubinsky to hand the leadership over to the rank and file. That is how much the Stalinists have to offer. In other words, they put the card before the horse: First, a common strike, then the question of one united organization is to be solved.

It must be said outright: with such a policy, with the repetition of the stupid "Third Period" tactic of "Independent Strike Committees," "Rank and File Leadership," no headway will be made. Whatever the motivation—let us say, the hope of the Left wing that in the course of the strike, the majority of the workers will endorse the militant policies and rally to the banner of the Industrial Union—such a policy defeats its own purpose. It gives the Right wing fakery the opportunity they are looking for. They will always look for a loop-hole to permit them to creep out of united action with the militant Left wing, "Rank and File Leadership" and "Independent Strike Committees" are just the kind of loophole they need to fool the workers into thinking that the Left wing rejects the reality of existing unions and their respective strengths, that the Left wing wants to ignore the "regular" organizations and to carry out some "maneuver." That is just the way to give the fakery a chance to tell the workers that the Left wing is insincere. But it is precisely this tactic of the Right wing bureaucracy that must be defeated. It is the precise task of the Left wing to prove to the workers that their call for united action is sincere and that they mean business. Only a show of such sincerity can awaken the dressmakers out of their apathy and arm them for struggle.

A Policy to Fill the Need of the Moment

The Communist Left Opposition (Trotskyites) long ago proposed to the Left wing Industrial union "to make an open proposal to the I.L.G.W.U. for the readmission of its membership in a body in the field of its jurisdiction. This proposal must demand the unity of two organizations on the basis of no discrimination, no special conditions or restrictions imposed on the members of the Industrial Union, full rights for every member, union democracy and the rights of minority political expression." (Resolution presented to the Convention of the Needle Trades Workers' Fraction of the Communist League of America (Left Opposition), October, 1932).

Such a proposal is more timely now than ever. In fact it is indispensable for the preparation of a successful strike and for a genuine preparation of it—a united, single

For the Teachers
Expelled by B. of E.

The following analysis of the situation in the Teachers Union, of New York City, Local 5 of the American Federation of Teachers in the A. F. of L., embodies the ideas of a number of Progressive Group and Rank and file teachers, the two Left wing groups in the union.

The Ryan-O'Shea regime of the New York City Board of Education has initiated a campaign of expulsions from the school system of the outstanding militants in the teachers' fight against salary reductions and the worsening of their teaching and living conditions. The bureaucratic axe has just cut down I. Blumberg. Two others, at this writing, are facing expulsion charges: 1. Begun and W. Burroughs. Their crime consists in having courageously protested the expulsion of Blumberg. It is no secret that others are also slated for expulsion, their names are known even as it was known some time in advance that Blumberg was to be expelled.

The charges, of course, are technical and pertain to administrative matters. But they are only a convenient pretext. The B. of E. objective is revealed by its undercover campaign against all protest which it brands "red," "Communist," "radicalism," the familiar reactionary incitement of prejudice against progressive opponents.

The Ryan-O'Shea regime very shrewdly timed its expulsion campaign to begin shortly before the close of the school term, calculating that the summer vacation would nip in the bud whatever protest movement the teachers would build. At the present writing the defense movement has reached considerable proportions and is still growing, whether it will be able to defeat the B. of E. campaign it is still too early to say.

The Union and Expulsions

Blumberg was not a member of the union. But Begun and Burroughs and the others slated for expulsion are members of the union and of its Left wing. It is to the credit of the Left wing that it was quick to react to these expulsions. The "instant burn of clamor" that it made to throw the weight of the union into the defense movement raised the question sharply in the union itself. Under its pressure a committee was appointed to investigate the cases and report on them. The report on Blumberg—already expelled—commits the union to ask the B. of E. for a fair trial for him. On the Begun-Burroughs cases the union, instead of declaring its solidarity with them as it is duty-bound to do, took a position, which can be construed only as giving objective support to the B. of E.

The position taken by the union constitutes a defeat for the Left wing which correctly stands for the unqualified support of all the victims of the B. of E. reign of terror. The importance of this issue should be made clear by the Left wing to the entire union membership and the teachers in the system. If the union, which exists for the purpose of defending the teachers' interests and of protecting them against such attacks, stands aside while the reaction humiliates and expels the militants from the system the reaction will feel itself encouraged to proceed against any protest whatsoever. Such a policy says to the B. of E. that it can count in advance upon the "neutrality" of the union while it "punishes" all protest against its faithful service in behalf of Wall Street-Albany economy and trenchant schemes. Such a policy places the union on the wrong side of the fence. Instead of arraying the union against the B. of E. and its banker-politician inspired economy it makes it a partner to their attacks on the teachers' salaries and conditions.

Such a policy will succeed only in discrediting the union in the eyes of the thinking teachers and of the labor movement generally. On the other hand, the policy of the Left wing is a progressive one in the interests of the union and the teachers. The Left Wing must continue the fight to redress the line of the union.

Administration and Left Wing
This difference between the union administration and the Left wing is not the only one. The others also involve the fundamental questions of union policy. To understand the years' old struggle between the administration and the Left wing it is necessary, first, to understand what sections of the teachers support them. The union administration today draws its support from the older, better-salaried and more conservative teachers. These men and women are little inclined to struggle. They look for-

AMONG THE YOUTH

First Hand Account of Young Nutpickers in Reforestation Swindle

Before coming to Camp Dix, I entertained no illusions about conditions here. Like so many other fellows, I "freely" chose this manner of life—the three meals and one dollar a day being the center of attraction—in preference to a more or less uncertain city life. My impression was amply justified.

I reported to the Army Building from which all fellows were sent to the camps. After a hasty examination, the batch of which I was a member, received a pep talk from the officer in charge. He drew a parasol version of camp life, describing it as a model place for moral and physical discipline. And the 1904, "the cats are so swell they knock your eyes out. It was wrong. It did not take us long to stamp him a liar.

His speech ended, we marched to the terry building to eat before leaving for camp. Filthy mess kits were handed to us as we passed by the big garbage cans that contained the food. Hot beans, cold canned tomatoes and raw onion was our bill of fare. This sweet mystery of life had a smell for which there are no polite words. But what really did throw a veil of discouragement in us was the coffee. We surely believed that it was made hot in the swine trough. A group of boys made a brave attempt to stir it down. They failed miserably. Some vomited like sick cats. These fellows changed their minds and went home. A cautious few who had watched them went with them. The rest of us decided to stick it out. We were transported by bus to camp and it was surprisingly pleasant to make us forget the suspicious start.

Upon arriving at camp we were assigned to companies. The fellows I spoke to were pretty well disgusted. They probably expressed the mood of most of the camp—there are about fourteen thousand men here. It seems that inferior food, no female comradeship and low wages make for the main source of discontent. And to make matters worse, a rubber trading post maintained by the government charges from twenty-five to fifty percent more for staple necessities. Since Uncle Sam does not supply toilet articles and the boys have no money to buy razors, towels, soap, etc., Camp Dix very much resembles the House of David.

Of course newspapers that play up the wonders of the Civilian Conservation Corps, religiously suppress news of any revolt or race riots. Some weeks back, the capitalist press reported that forty-five so-called agitators were expelled for revolting against the food. I spoke to about fifty men of the company in which the incident occurred. They—non-Communists—vehemently denied that any of the expelled fellows knew all they were even tinged with the palest vermillion. After working all day in rainy fields, digging trenches and pitching tents, they were fed moldy beans and half-cooked potatoes. Every fellow spoke with admiration of the expelled forty-five, "who had the guts to open their mouths and kick."

Another incident happened that the press did not even mention. Negroes are segregated from the whites, even at church on Sundays. While the sky pilots (and this place is infested with them) preach eternal brotherhood, they do their utmost to prevent fraternization between black and white. A riot broke out several weeks ago in which a few Negroes were stabbed. Nobody seems to know the minor details since the combatants are either in the hospital or jail. But everybody agrees that the fight resulted over food. Soldiers now patrol the separating avenue with cocked rifles and fixed bayonets. As one soldier remarked, "A couple of grenades did the job." A deep pit testifies to that.

Many fellows express their discontent by deserting. Others knowing what they are in for, penitence in the city, prefer to remain. True, the government does not force them to stay, but starvation does. They console themselves by reflecting that six months of forest work will develop their physiques. That it will, I have no doubt. What the government wants is men with strong backs and weak minds. Surely the tasteless swill that is served will not increase anyone's intelligence. The commanding officer assures the people that the "forest army" is much healthier than the men examined in the last draft. Because of the crisis, young men walk a good deal and eat plain food which is inexpensive, whereas in good times young men are dissipated to get rich food and exercise as little as possible. We are plainly given to understand that crises are beneficial to the working class. Whether the workers believe this tomy-not is another question. Roosevelt's "New Deal" differs from Hoover's policy only in the degree of cornering some three hundred thousand young workers and forcing them to increase the wealth of the bosses. In this way the government kills two birds with one stone. It sets a new standard of wage cutting and at the same time paves the way for mass creation of constant capital that will make the present crisis look like an appetizer in face of the next and more terrible crisis. Needless to say, the government has an excellent center to teach the workers how to reduce their cost of living on the point of consumption, by introducing in their diet the cheapest and coarsest food.

— R.

St. Louis, Mo.—"Another week another dollar, a million weeks a million dollars," was the rather gloomy prospect for the St. Louis nut pickers under Capitalism and wage slavery. None of them had ever read the new book at the public library, "How to Live on Nothing a Year," and Roosevelt's inflation program had swept over them like a hailstorm over a fourth of July million parade, leaving them flat.

But enough is plenty and too much is hog's bait. It was either work or starve or no work and starve. They resorted to the only other alternative. They struck. Out into the streets they came, young and old, male and female, Negro and white. "Social" distinctions and racial differences were forgotten. They had spitted their real enemy and they went after him with their only weapon, solidarity of action.

Continuously the boss felt them out by offering them an increase which amounted to about 50 percent. They spurned it. And no wonder! The average weekly wage of the Negro girls was about $1.80, while the white girls (due to greater skill) it was $2.55. The boss was willing to use scabs but none applied in spite of the fact that the capitalist press maintained a cowardly silence about the true conditions as long as it could. Child strikers in Pennsylvania and a similar strike in St. Louis are, in spite of their similarity, two different things.

During the strike, several girl strikers were arrested, the excuse being given by the police that they were too young for the picket line. Not too young to be brutally exploited, but too young to defend their rights against the capitalist baby stivers.

Equal to the occasion, with their usual stupidity, the Stalinists of the P.W.U. immediately proposed a committee to put the case before Mayor Dickman, hoping, doubtless, to "expose" him as the agent of the bosses. But the prophet of the New Deal was not found mapping. Here was the chance of a lifetime brought on a silver platter by none other than the Communist, the very ones he was racking his brain for a plan to discredit. Galvanizing into action, he was a perfect picture of the defender of outraged decency. He spoke to the strikers at the Labor Lyceum. He appointed our old friends, The Social Justice Commission, composed of "liberal" ministers, and the strike was soon settled, the credit going to the political shysters and the religious fakery.

Fortunately, the wage gains were enough to give the workers courage in their mass power. The former price of 30 cents a box was increased to 90 cents, an increase of 200 percent.

ERRATUM

A very bad printer's error crept into the article "A Postscript on Uniter" in the last issue of the Militant. A whole section following the beginning of the paragraph which reads: "But a word on the action of the Left Opposition caucus..." was deleted, and others bungled on the linotype. This section should read as follows:

"But a word on the action of the Left Opposition caucus at the conference. We objected to the amendment not so much because the wording ran counter to our principles. If the worthy gentleman from the Stalinist camp would take the trouble to refresh his memory, he would know that from the first—in articles, resolutions, speeches over a period of more than three years—we have linked up the question of long term credits to the Soviet Union with the agitation and propaganda of the superiority of planned, socialist construction in the U.S.S.R."

"What was objected to is the fact, that instead of coming out with the complete truth; instead of telling the American workers outright that the Soviet Union is today gripped by a terrific economic crisis—which is by the way due to the adventurist bungling of bureaucratic centralism in Russia itself; instead of telling the American workers, that because of this and because of the rise of fascism in Germany—for which Stalinism likewise bears its share of responsibility—the world imperialists, Wall Street in the lead, are more ready for bloody, upon intervention than for the extension of credits to it; instead of telling the American workers that, due to these dangers, the land of the Soviets is more in need of their active help than ever, in their every day struggles, in the struggle against unemployment—that instead of all this: the epigones of Stalinism in America merely cover up the dangers and resort to a meaningless phrase—'where they are building socialism and have already abolished unemployment'—which only serves to cover up their own 'infallibility,' or rather, their own bankruptcy."

The words which were deleted are given in blackface type above.

The Platform of the Brandier Group

Number 3 of "Gegen den Strom," the organ of the Brandier-Gruppe, now appearing in Strassburg, contains theses on the struggle against Fascism and other programmatic declarations. This number is very important in the determination of the physiognomy of the group. What have the Brandierites learned from the catastrophe? Have they moved forward? Let it be said right at the outset: the theses contain a number of quite indubitable fundamentals, principally in the domain of criticism of the party regime, of the policy of the "United Front" only from below, and the theory of social Fascism. But apart from these critical ideas (which, despite their elementary character, must be insistently repeated), "Gegen den Strom" remains a document of opportunism, as much by what this publication says, as by what it fails to say.

1. The theses justly accuse the Stalinist bureaucracy of deliberately minimizing the importance of the defeat. But from their own evaluation of the catastrophe, the Brandierites do not draw the necessary conclusions with regard to the party. As in the past, they express the desire to return to the party, that is, they act as if no catastrophe had taken place. In this manner, the Brandierites help the Stalinists politically to cover up the significance and the dimensions of the defeat.

2. "It is not Communism that has been beaten," they write, "it is the ultra-Leftist tactic that has been beaten, the bureaucratic regime that has been beaten." The method of leadership pursued up to now that has been beaten? The question is not put politically but in doctrinaire fashion, as if the struggle was between abstract principles and not between living political forces. Communism as a doctrine has, of course, not been beaten; what has however been beaten is that party in Germany which had a false tactic, a bureaucratic regime and which pushed the proletariat to the catastrophe.

3. The "ultra-Leftist course" has been shipwrecked. Whence does it come? Is its social content? Who is its enemy? On this score, just as in the past, we do not hear a single word. Yet the Brandierites acknowledge that the false policy of the Communist International, which led to its ruin, has lasted for ten years. Whence comes this unprecedented perseverance in a discredited "ultra-Leftist course"?

4. Is it true, however, that the course of the epigone Comintern has always been "ultra-Leftist"? Was the five-year long subjection of the Chinese Communist Party to the Kuo Min Tung ultra-Leftist? How shall we characterize the policy of the Anglo-Russian Committee, which ruined the very promising Minority Movement in the British Trade unions? Was the policy of the Comintern ultra-Leftist in India? In Japan? ("Workers and Peasants' Parties"). Isn't it obvious that the program of "national emancipation" was and remains a gross opportunistic adaptation to the chauvinist psychology of the German petty bourgeoisie? Can one regard as ultra-Leftist the present-day policy of blocs with bourgeois pacifists, with individual democrats, etc.: the Anti-War Congress, the Anti-Fascist Congress, the Anti-Imperialist League, and in general all the work directed by Muenzenberg's department for masquerades and charlatanism? Can one tax with "ultra-Leftism" the declaration of the Comintern on March 5th, which proclaims its readiness to refrain from criticism of the social democracy all during the period of the united front?

5. The theses declare that the ultra-Leftist policy of all the foreign sections is executed at the command of the Political Bureau of the Soviet Union. And what about the policy in the USSR itself? Doesn't the ultra-Leftist course have its origins there as well? Are not the one hundred percent collectivization and the exaggerated industrialization, expressions of an ultra-Leftist course? And on the other hand: Can it be denied that the period of economic adventurism in the USSR was preceded by years of economic opportunism?

6. The Political Bureau of the C.P.S.U., according to the theses, is not in a position to give direct leadership to the policy of several dozen countries. In and by itself, this is incontestable, but it does not explain at all the character of the disease which is ravaging the Comintern. Were it simply a question of the remoteness of the Political Bureau, of the lack of time, of the lack of information, of the lack of knowledge of the situation in the various countries, then the mistakes would be of the most diversified character. But it is not a question of isolated empirical mistakes. What is the essence of it? What determines its persistency and its comparative constancy?

7. What is the meaning of the system itself of commanding several dozen parties by the secretariat of the Political Bureau? Is this accidental, or an aberration of the mind? The Brandierites talk a great deal about bureaucratism; but they do not clearly understand the meaning of the term. Bureaucratism, to the extent that it is a question not of isolated accidental aberrations but of a mighty system, is the manner of thinking and of acting of a bureaucracy, that is, of a special social stratum which may and does come into conflict with the proletarian vanguard. Who is the principal bearer of bureaucratism in the Comintern if not the Soviet bureaucracy?

A Few Steps Forward - But No Conclusions

8. The Brandierites are compelled to evade this central question because, by their whole character and spirit, they are only a proscribed, insulated little detachment of this same bureaucracy. They fight against "ultra-Leftism," but they say nothing about the opportunism of the bureaucracy, for they themselves shared, and still share, in all its rightist mistakes.

9. The theses declare that the beginning of the false policy of the Comintern coincides roughly with the withdrawal of Lenin from work. But don't the Brandierites know that the shifting of the general line to the Right and to the Left of Marxism — was accomplished with the aid of one single ideological lever: the struggle against Trotskyism? If one pushes aside the personal details, the falsifications, the baiting campaign, etc., and grasps the essence of the matter, the revision of the methodology of Marx and Lenin took place under the aegis of the struggle against Trotskyism. The Brandierites have not understood this to the present day. They think that the struggle against Trotskyism was "in and by itself" correct, but that under cover of this struggle which constituted the principal content of the party's ideology for many years past, some miracle or other caused a bucksliding from the line of Leninism to the line of the "ultra-Leftist" course (in actuality, the line of bureaucratic Centralism).

10. Were the Brandierites Marxists, internationalists, they would be unable to declare the policy of the Comintern bureaucracy in the USSR inviolable and demand the same inviolability for themselves in Germany. It is not at all a question here of the autonomy of the national sections (we fully acknowledge the necessity of such an au-

China Receives New U. S. Loan

The new deal government at Washington, so solicitous for the welfare of the poor speculators on the Chicago wheat market and the New Orleans cotton exchange, is about to come to their aid again. The present step, like most of the new deal kind, is completely surrounded with the usual trappings of "aid to the impoverished farmers." But like most of the farm aid bills, seventy-five percent of the benefit will go to the financiers whose nearest approach to a farm is the wheat room of the Chicago Board of Trade.

This week's newspapers carried the headline announcements of a fifty million dollar sale of wheat and cotton to the Chinese National Government. The money, to pay for the purchases by the Chinese government of the wheat in this country, is to be advanced by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation as a loan payable after several years. Although no mention of the subject appears in the dispatches relating to the subject, the cotton will most probably be used in the contemplated Nanking campaign against the peasant armies. The Chiang Kai-Shek government which has been spending millions in his unsuccessful campaign against the peasant armies of inner China, has now succeeded in securing the advance of this fifty million dollars from the American government.

For the American unemployed, however, the Roosevelt administration, like that of Hoover, is providing merely fine phrases. In the same day there appeared the announcement that despite the grain crop failures in many parts of the country, and despite the campaign of the government to cut down the wheat acreage, the total amount of wheat being stored in the granaries of this country at the present totals almost four hundred million bushels. This huge supply of wheat is being let to spoil in the huge warehouses of the country, and attempts made to secure any of it for the unemployed have been frustrated (with the exception of a few million bushels of Farm Board wheat turned over to the Red Cross last year.) A conservative estimate would show that if the four hundred million bushels stored in the country today were advanced to the unemployed, it would last for almost five years.

Instead of taking any measures to relieve the suffering, exactly contrary steps are being taken by the government and the various relief agencies. The New York City Home Relief Bureau has cut off all payments of rent. In addition, the Gibson Committee which through the Red Cross has been distributing food have announced their intention of discontinuing this work after the summer.

This is the indictment of the present system; amidst plenty, there are many starving. Only a powerful working class movement will force from the capitalists a portion of the huge supplies of all types of food and clothing stored throughout the country.

New Falsifications of the Stalinists

The Slander of Trotsky's "Judas" Role

In the past year a new bit of gossip emanating from Moscow was put into circulation: Lenin declared Trotsky to be a "Judas." When? Where? Why? At first, the European Stalinists were a little disturbed about telling this filthy rot to the face of the advanced workers. But when the defeat of the German proletariat entered another crime, the most terrible of all, into the inventory of the exploits of the Stalinist bureaucracy, they had to take recourse in very stiff measures. They now began to circulate the gossip about a "Judas" with increasing frequency.

What is it based upon? Two years before the war, in one of the moments of the ascension of the Russian struggle, Lenin angrily called Trotsky a "yudushka" in a note which he wrote. Whoever is even slightly acquainted with Russian literature knows that "Yudushka" (Golovyer) is a literary type, the hero of the Russian satirist Saltykov-Shchedrin. In the emigrant struggle of those days one could find in almost every polemical article "digs" borrowed from Saltykov. In the case before us, it was not even an article, but a note written in a moment of anger. At all events, Yndushka Golovyer has no relation at all to the Judas of the Evangelists.

In connection with the unavoidable exaggerations in the polemical letters of Lenin, Stalin taking up the defense of the attitudes of Zinoviev-Kamenev in October 1917, wrote in 1924: "Lenin sometimes deliberately runs ahead in his letters, pushes into the foreground such possible mistakes as may be made, and criticizes them in advance with the aim of warning the party and insuring it against mistakes, or else he sometimes pushes up trifles and makes 'an elephant out of a goat' towards the same philological aim." To draw from such letters of Lenin (and there are not a few of such letters by him) a conclusion about "tragic" differences of opinion, and to make a big deal about it, means not to understand Lenin's letters, not to know Lenin. ("Trotskyism or Leninism?"—1924.) These deductions of Stalin, which stand up very badly as a justification for the conflict of Zinoviev-Kamenev in October 1917—it was not a question of a "trifle" at that time, nor a "goat"—can nevertheless be completely applied to that third-rate episode which produced Lenin's note from exile on Yndushka Golovyer.

That Lenin had violent encounters with Trotsky in the years of emigration, is known to everyone. But that there was a number of years before the October revolution, the civil war, the upbuilding of the Soviet state and the founding of the Communist International. The true relations between Lenin and Trotsky are, it would appear, set down in later and more authoritative documents than that of a note resulting from a conflict in the emigration. What do the professional calumniators want to say when they throw the comparison with "Judas" into the debate: that Lenin did not trust Trotsky politically? Or that he did not trust him morally? Out of hundreds of utterances of Lenin, we cite two or three.

On November 1, 1917, Lenin said at a session of the Petrograd party committee: "I cannot even speak seriously about it. Trotsky has long said that the unification (with the Mensheviks) is impossible. Trotsky has grasped this and since then there has not been a better Bolshevik."

In the days of the civil war, when Trotsky by himself had to make decisions of extraordinary scope, Lenin, on his own initiative, handed him a blank sheet of paper with the following inscription at the bottom: "Comrades! I know the rigorous character of the orders of comrade Trotsky, but I am so convinced, convinced to such an absolute degree of the correctness, the expediency and the necessity of the order issued by comrade Trotsky in the interest of the cause, that I completely support the order—V. Lenin."

If the first of the two declarations cited above gives a clear enough political evaluation, the second one reveals the degree of moral confidence. It is hardly necessary to quote the dozens of citations from the articles and speeches of Lenin where he expresses his attitude toward Trotsky, or to reproduce here once more the correspondence of Lenin-Trotsky on the national question or on the question of the foreign trade monopoly. We will confine ourselves only to recalling the letter which N. K. Krapavka, Lenin's companion for so many years, addressed to Trotsky a few days after Lenin's death: "Dear Lev Davidovich: I am writing to tell you how Vladimir Illich, about a month before his death, stopped, in reading through your book, at the passage where you gave a characterization of Marx and Lenin, and asked me to read the passage to him, how attentively he listened and then how he himself read it over again. And there is another thing I want to tell you: the feelings which Lenin conceived for you country," now threatening to stifle proletarian internationalism; they were shown the responsibility of Stalinism for the various revolutionary defeats, especially for the German defeat, the revolutionary process of which was carefully analyzed; the zigzag policy of the Stalinist bureaucracy was carefully explained.

In the national field, these comrades found themselves obliged to recognize, first, the growing influence of our party even in the Leftist ranks; secondly, they recognized the errors and the internal dissension fostered by the bureaucracy of the official national organization as well as that of the South American Bureau.

We demonstrated by means of testimony provided by the Leftists themselves that our party was growing and developing in scope and influence at an accelerated rate in contrast to Leftism, whose ranks were rapidly diminishing and in some localities, disbanding. We did this without the least desire of underestimating the surviving importance of the bureaucratic forces.

Appeal for Unification

That the Communist Left (Chilean Section of the International Communist Left Opposition) could hold such a Congress, whose great political influence is undeniable and at which the workers' positions were consolidated through weighty debates and discussions, was due to the fact that the Communist Left represents a movement that is historically in the process of development. In the C.I., as well as in the official national sections, such meetings are sterile, because everything is fixed beforehand, all dangers of criticism by the rank and file against the top being carefully avoided.

The Leftist bureaucracy does not only fear a common congress of both factions. It also stands in terror of a democratic congress of its own faction, where uncovered as well as latent discontent exists. The Leftist (Stalinist) bureaucracy, backed by the international bureaucracy, will only call a national congress when everything has been gotten ready to silence the expression of discontent by the base.

The Left Opposition, here as everywhere, is ready to take part in a Congress for Communist Unification because it sincerely desires Communist unification.

Comrades, it is up to us, after this Congress, to redouble our efforts and our Bolshevik tenacity. We are the standard bearers of the revolutionary movement of the world. The tens of thousands of oppositionists whom Stalin holds exiled in Siberia, the deportation of Trotsky to Pripkovo, the example of Oppositionists all over the globe—all this shows us the way.

We have united in an international organization in the triumph of which are rooted the accelerating factors of the proletarian revolution. We must fight on. We must labor heroically. We must attack Leftism in the entire country, taking it by storm in the city as well as in the rural districts. This is the basic slogan peeled forth to you by the Central Committee of the Communist Left (Chilean Section of the International Communist Left Opposition), elected by acclamation by the delegates of the First National Congress of the International Communist Left in Chile.

News From German C. P.

Reject E.C.C.I. Resolution

Six Berlin districts of the C.P.G. have rejected the E.C.C.I. resolution on the German question as politically false. One district demanded the return of Heinz Neumann (probably from the Soviet Union). The E.C.C.I., however, denied this request. These are working districts. The rest have no connections.

Expulsion at the Top

The majority of the members of the Central Committee of the C.P.G. is in Moscow. Their reports are of the same character as the Heckert speech. The "Lehmannite" There has been no defeat in Germany. The E.C.C.I., together with the Germans, has decided to expel everybody from the party, who speak of a defeat and express critical sentiments generally. Thus, for instance, comrades Wollenburg and Felix Wolf have already been expelled because of criticism against the German policy. The expulsions at the top, where only few uncorrupted comrades still attempt to draw the lessons of the catastrophe, speak mountains for possible mass expulsions in the lower ranks.

Stalinists Furnish False Information

The information in the Stalinist press regarding the circulation and regularity of appearance of the Rote Fahne is simply fabricated. It appears irregular and rarely. "Unser Wort" strikes fear into bureaucratic hearts.

The E.C.C.I. has criticized the representation of the C.P.G. abroad as well as Muenzenberg's organization for lagging behind Unser Wort, which was the first Communist organ published abroad. The E.C.C.I. warns against the great "danger" of Trotskyism. The representatives of the official apparatus abroad, above all in Czechoslovakia, have reported to Moscow that Unser Wort makes a big impression everywhere and leads to "demoralization" in the party.

Problems of New York Dressmakers

The question of the establishment of a single union in the trade is now a question of life and death. A successful strike, a thorough-going organization drive must take into account other essential branches of the trade which are indispensable for united struggle and for its extension. The establishment of one union would give the Left wing access to the Cutter's Local, lack of unity with which has destroyed many a previous action; to the Spanish and Italian workers who are increasingly becoming the predominant factor in the trade and who are organized almost exclusively in the International; finally, to the out-of-town market which is the sore spot of needle trade organization, and which finds even the powerful tight wing only with skeleton apparatuses.

Perspectives of the Struggle

These sections of the trade must be given consideration, if the strike is to achieve its ends. The question of the out-of-town market is especially a burning one, in view of the attempts of the bosses to rid themselves of winter union control there is even in New York.

The unity of the dressmakers can well become the starting point for the establishment of unity in the whole needle industry and when it reaches that point, the strength of the Left wing will be increased tenfold due to the powerful victory it will have achieved by rallying the majority of the fur trade. Tremendous possibilities lie ahead for the Left wing in the needle trades. It is only necessary to know how to reach out for them, how to make use of them. The first step is the establishment of one single, class struggle union among the dressmakers, the elaboration of a single organization drive, the conduct of a single, united strike.

The Industrial Union has no time to lose. If it has learned the lesson of the failure of dissipated, scattered militancy; if it wants to really harness the heroic militancy of the great bulk of workers in the trade, it must proceed immediately with the proposals to the International indicated above.

gain an entrance through the students.

Not a student laid a hand on the president or any member of his group. Several self-styled "vigilants" who claimed affiliation with the athletic committee began to assert themselves among the demonstrators, and so, the capitalist press reporters got their story of a "students' anti-war riot." The athletic committee of City College denied any association whatsoever with these "vigilants."

The American Civil Liberties Union is taking the case to court on the ground that the students have the right to parade on the campus, therefore the expelled students should be reinstated.

This is clearly a question which resolves itself around the students' militant demonstration against militarism. As such there is nothing about it which can be settled in court. It can only find its solution in the struggle between the workers and the boss classes.

The N.S.L. in an executive meeting decided recently on its change of platform, in true Stalinist manner, without any discussion on the floor by its rank and file membership. From a Communist organization basing itself on adherence to Marxist policies (more or less), they have become a sort of "students' union" having itself on student issues. "It is hoped that in this way we will attract the student by his own problem so that we may develop our principles from practical work with the students," says the statement on the change of policy.

The expulsions at City College deprive the student movement of its most militant members and its most active fighters. Through the introduction of a few arbitrary decrees the authorities have succeeded in isolating the Left wing leadership from the mass of the student body.

The success of the faculty in their expulsion campaign, and the failure of the organization of a real protest movement in behalf of the expelled, can in no small degree be placed at the doors of the National Student League in failing to build up an anti-war movement of fighting dimensions, in confining its anti-war movement to the student plane and in supporting the Stalinist "Amsterdam" brand, the dimensions of the present fight were to a great extent laid down beforehand. At the Chicago anti-war conference the proposals of the Left Opposition delegates, proposals to organize the anti-war fight on the only plane on which it would be effective—that of the Communist movement taking a leading role in the organization of a genuine worker-student united front against war—were rejected by the N.S.L.

The whole opportunistic tactic of the Stalinists in the recent period in the anti-war movement has isolated the students from the working class at large without whom the struggle against imperialism war, heroic though it may be, will be of little or no consequence. Instead of calling for a genuine united front from the bungeers of Stalinism called into being the criminal masquerade of Amsterdam which based its strength not upon the proletariat and its organizations but on isolated intellectuals of the Barbusse-Rolland variety. The results of this frightful division perpetrated by the Stalinists between the students and the workers now becomes apparent even here at home, in the College of the City of New York where the students fighting heroically are left to shift for themselves with no genuine labor support. The responsibility for this rests on the shoulders of the Stalinists whose whole zig-zagging policy has caused this frightful isolation, this absence of any real sentiment in the working class for assistance and support to the expelled students.

But the task still remains to organize a genuine movement against imperialism war. Only in this way will the best service be rendered to the expelled students. The struggle for their re-instatement can only be effective if it becomes the spur for the building of an anti-war united front which will bind the students to the main body of the militant working class.

More Flowers. . . Naturally, Germany will not become Fascist. The victories of Communists vouch for this, victories beginning with the mass defense against Fascism and all the way to the struggle of the Berlin Transport Workers. This is vouched for by the hundreds of thousands of German workers who are striking under the leadership of the C.P.G. This is vouched for by the new hundreds of thousands of workers' votes which have been cast for Communism, this is vouched for by the irrepressible advance of Communism. . . Opportunists in Bloc vs. Lefts at Gillespie

When the matter of these omissions of the policy of the PTUEC was brought up by the delegates, McFarlane answered that they "didn't have enough money to have all the points mimeographed" as he was forced to send out a mimeographed sheet with only the minor points—16 of them. Most of the delegates chuckled up their sleeves. They understood.

The Stalinists were down in full force—Minerich, Shaw, Kling, Weber, and a baker's dozen of lesser functionaries from Chicago, Detroit, St. Louis, etc. Due to their ceaseless activities in the past several months (and more important, their change of policy in regard to the P.M.A.) the Stalinists are winning back some of their former adherents who parted company with them at the time of their "third period" strike strategy. The Stalinists proved to be the major force at the conference. However, the only politically advanced group in the conference was the Left Opposition which ideologically whipped the Left wing forward.

Course of Action Adopted

The conference re-affirmed the position of the other three conferences and again disposed of the "new federation tendency"; went on record urging the Progressive Miners of America, the National Miners' Union, West Virginia Miners, I.W.W. of Colorado, rank and file of the I.M.W.A., the Miners Union of Nova Scotia, etc., to unite nationally in order to prepare a national organization campaign and a strike against the prevailing scale; recommending the organization of Committees of Action in the various localities to carry on united front activities against forced labor, yellow dog contracts, inflationary process, and other local grievances; urged unity of the employed and unemployed and called upon all unemployed organizations to attach themselves with the National Federation of Unemployed Leagues; and passed resolutions against forced labor in Carlinville, against Governor Horner's reign of terror, for the immediate liberation of Tom Mooney and the Scottsboro boys, etc.

Only one resolution met with Stalinist opposition. This was a resolution giving a political analysis of the Industrial Control Bill which was submitted by an outstanding Left Oppositionist, Hugo Oehler. Tony Minerich, spokesman for the policy and resolutions committee, led the fight stating that it was unnecessary to read the resolution—which would have taken but a few minutes—and proposed in its place to go on record "against the Industrial Control Bill and its class collaboration provisions."

Oehler Gets the Floor Despite Stalinists

Despite Stalinist opposition, comrade Oehler succeeded in getting the floor and introducing his resolution as an amendment to the report offered by the policy committee. The resolution gave a political analysis of the international situation and the perspectives for the future of the American labor movement in regard to the newly passed Industrial Control Bill. In particular, it explained the defeat of the German working class which marks the beginning of a world-wide capitalist reaction to further beat down the workers' standard of living. It stressed the necessity of immediately setting in motion, on a national scale, the workers' resistance against the "new deal," which erects a gigantic class-collaboration paraphernalia, makes strikes illegal and a crime against the government.

The Stalinists united with the Right wing to defeat the L.O. proposal. The Stalinists interpreted the document as a "counter revolutionary" resolution. They objected with hypocritical indignation that the "German working class did not suffer defeat." They wasted a lot of hot air with their usual trite, resolutions and conferences" and ended up, not unnaturally, with a call to vote down the resolution and to send a protest (!) to Washington. The Right wing, construing the resolution as an attack upon them, frantically hurried around trying to muster votes to defeat it. They were at one with the Stalinists. Politics makes strange bed-fellows.

All sorts of attempts were made to gag comrade Oehler and prevent him from summing up on his amendment. The Stalinists became full-blown parliamentarians with the complete support of the Right wing. But comrade Oehler managed to get the floor.

Summing Up the Discussion

He pointed out that the resolution on the Industrial Control Bill resulted in the most important discussion of the day. Comrade Oehler stated that since this was the first conference since this Bill had gotten under way it was the proper place to take action on it. He expounded the straw men set up by the Stalinists, pointing out that although none of his opponents gave a substantial argument against the political analysis, yet they will vote it down. For the benefit of the Right wing, comrade Oehler stated that the resolution was not a slander against the P.M.A., but on the contrary, it gave the officials even more credit than they gave themselves, by showing their progressive character in relation to the entire American labor movement. In conclusion he brought out the historical perspective for the American working class proving that the attack upon its standards through the Industrial Control Bill was a direct result of the defeat of the German proletariat. He finished his speech with the axiom that action is meaningless unless it is based on a correct policy.

Minerich succeeded in squeezing in a last word with arguments that posed the question from a local angle—and not an international one (which is beyond the horizon of these national socialists). He professed not to see the connection with Germany and asked why Oehler didn't mention China to the extreme hilarity of the myopic Stalinists present.

The voting, of course, was a foregone conclusion. The amendment lost by a vote of 73 to 17 with about a dozen abstentions. The amendment was defeated but the Left Opposition again demonstrated its political superiority over the Stalinists who cannot see the necessity of preparing to fight against anything until it is too late—Fascism in Germany and now the Industrial Control Bill.

to do that. On the contrary, they have the sorry courage to defend their policy as correct and vindicated. Look at the social democracy. It is now, literally, a rotting corpse. But the Stalinist faction, which, at present, still stands at the leadership of the Comintern, which is responsible for the policy of the C.P.G., which, in the final analysis, led in such a way that it helped Hitler in his road to power, what position do they take? They cover themselves partly with silence and partly they speak in such a manner as if nothing had happened.

"The German proletariat has not suffered a defeat." Then has Hitler not triumphed, too? Or is there a victor without a vanquished? Has nothing changed in Germany? But in the same breath they count on a quick collapse of Hitler; that the economic crisis alone will accomplish that which the powerful organizations of the German working class were unable to achieve; that is to break the neck of Fascism.

Question upon question—the answers, however, are awaited in vain. Let us not deceive ourselves—a "congress" which has nothing to say but the old empty phrases and formulas, will, despite the numerous workers' delegations, only sow further confusion, disappointment and discouragement in the working class. Courage is needed to speak out what is. Empty rationalization serves only to hide the cowardice of a bureaucracy which can no longer justify its own policy.

The I.L.O. has something to say to the working class and it speaks clearly and openly. Our declaration is laid on the table of the Anti-Fascist Congress. It must be given serious consideration. Ever wider circles of the working class turn their attention to us. The Stalinist bureaucracy cannot silently watch this growth of the Left Opposition. But, it is too weak, too impotent and too cowardly to discuss with us politically, openly and honestly before the entire proletariat. Its weapons are:

Flowers of Stalinist Prognosis

(From the German Pamphlet "Leninism against Stalinism")

"Nothing would be more fatal than an opportunist overestimation of Hitlerist Fascism. If we permitted ourselves to lose our correct class gauge because of the swelling up of the Hitler movement . . . and allowed ourselves to be pushed into a panic frenzy . . . then we would of necessity be led to a false manner of posing the question in our practical work against the Nazis as well as above all with regard to the S.P.G." (Thaelmann, Speech at the Plenum of the C.P.G. on February 19, 1932. Page 24.)

"It would be false to believe that the most important process that is taking place in Germany at present is the growth of Fascism." (P. 1198) is the growth of Fascism." (Page 1198.)

"Also, the 22nd of January (the Fascist mobilization in front of the Karl Liebknecht House) stood under the sign of the turn in class forces favoring the proletarian revolution (!)" (Thaelmann: "The Nazi Provocation in Front of the Karl Liebknecht House and Several Lessons," quoted from Muenzenberg's Unsere Zeit, February 5, 1933. Page 134.)

And now the Senate committee is worrying about whether there were enough or too many or not enough holding companies involved in the process of the acquisition of these railroads, and whether they paid all the taxes that they should have, and whether the investors' interests were properly considered. Not a word about the frightful abuse of the real wealth of the nation, about the utter disregard of the interests of the workers who were speeded up and those who were fired by the thousands in the Van Sweringen's efforts to show Morgan how cheaply they could run a railroad, about the waste of resources involved in the building of new links to join roads in a field whose traffic was insufficient to support existing lines, or about the permanent burden on the masses represented by the issue of over-capitalized securities whose hunger for interest and dividends will be met by increased fares and freights, as was done last year, and by further cutting wages, firing workers, and speeding up the rest, with a 20 percent wage cut to be proposed to the railroad workers shortly. Not a word about the part all these manipulations played in raising the fictitious level of prices to a new high on top of another until the whole flimsy structure collapsed and buried the existence of millions in its ruins.

No—all this is taken for granted, shoved aside, regarded as "legitimate private business." That is the real scandal of the investigation. And an indispensable step on the workers' road to power will be to write up a clear understanding of the fact that the scandal of scandals is the existence of capitalism itself, of its normal life and methods as well as of the diseased and parasitic by-products which inevitably breeds.

Provocations and slander—are the answers which the Stalinist bureaucracy gives to the principle declaration of the I.L.O. to the Anti-Fascist Congress. It does not shrink from the most flagrant accusations against us. Let us take one instance: the I.L.O. and comrade Trotsky are blamed because the Anti-Fascist Congress could not be held in Prague as scheduled. So writes A. Karolski in the Basle Kundschau.

"This time it was not only Wells, Stanger and Hitler who prevented us from holding the congress in Prague . . . these are all harmless in comparison with the provocations of Mr. Trotsky against the Anti-Fascist Congress. He denounced the Congress to the world bourgeoisie, told them that it had been arranged by paper organizations, made fun of the factories participating in it and electing delegates to it, mocked at the invitations to the intellectual circles who wanted to fight for the cause of the working class . . . etc." Together with this and in the same breath comes the unheeded slander that Trotsky demands of the Fascist murder bands in Berlin that they bring the arrested Bulgarian Communists "To the gallows!"

These are the arguments of the Stalin bureaucracy against the principle declaration of the I.L.O. Instead of thorough, principled discussion—a pogrom incitement. How hopeless the cause of such people must be who have to resort to this sort of "arguments!"

The idea that the International Left Opposition denounced the congress to the bourgeoisie and told them that it had been arranged by paper organizations is simply absurd. Does not the R.G.O. (Red Trade Union Center) belong to the initiators of the congress? And does not the world bourgeoisie know what the R.G.O. is? Just so much trash and slander.

What About Copenhagen?

And what about Copenhagen, where the congress also was supposed to be held and couldn't be? Was that Trotskyist "denunciation" too? We would not at all be surprised to read this in the Stalinist press tomorrow.

Apologies Copenhagen: Who was it, during the journey of comrade Trotsky to Denmark, that denounced to the world bourgeoisie a "secret Trotskyist conference in Copenhagen?" It was the official Stalinist T.A.S.S. (Press Agency of the Soviet Government). We shall leave things rest with this small reminder. The method of the Stalinist slanderers is simple: they attribute to others their own actions. Such a method is quite transparent.

The question of the Comintern is of interest in this connection. In Germany, a catastrophe has taken place; the strongest Communist party in the capitalist world lies prostrate, with a broken backbone; a strong Fascist wave is rising in Europe; the Communist Party of Austria is proscribed; the S.P.G. swept aside; the Second International writhes in the throes of rigor mortis—but the Third, the Commu-branch of industry fail to come to any agreement suitable to the government, a "fair code" will be forced upon it, and any protesting will be repressed by the "license" necessary to continue to operate under the new law.

The past five years has seen this complete about-face on the part of the relationships of government and business. Under the Coolidge administration we had—non-governmental interference in industry, both in words and in action. Under Hoover this had changed to governmental proclamations of non-interference, together with the readiness of increased government participation in private industry (Farm Board, Railroad Credit Corp., Reconstruction Finance Corp. aid to the banks and railroads, etc.) Today, we see the Roosevelt regime proposing to supervise and direct American economy, and in addition, admitting so openly. Such has been the change brought on by the past few years.

How Is the Working Class Affected

It is only in an indirect manner, however, that we are concerned with the inner organization of the capitalist system, only in the reflections of this organization upon the working class. And the reflection of the above measure can be seen to portray the real image of when translated into labor reorganization and consolidation, terms means: less workers, increased lay-offs and wage cuts; for it is only in this manner that the bill is to be interpreted by the working class. The railroad workers are to be the first to receive the gentle medicine of coordination, and they have already begun to feel the full meaning of the government's labor program, so that even the railroad unions have begun, in their mild manner—began to raise a voice in protest against this American bearing Greek gifts.

As for those combinations of words seeming to indicate that Roosevelt will introduce the minimum wage, and maximum hours, one cannot but be reminded of the record of the man empowered to enforce the measures. Hidden beneath the sugar coating will be revealed the cruel harshness of the starvation program. The "right of collective bargaining" will be transformed into a company union program. The "maximum wages, maximum hours" will, when translated into reality, become, most likely nothing more than the extension of the "stagger system" to every large factory in the country. It is not the bourgeoisie that will voluntarily surrender part of its profits to better the condition of the working class. The workers will have to organize, to fight many a difficult battle to win these elementary labor demands, the thirty hour week with no reduction in pay.

cism, in the defense against attack, the Bolshevik-Leninists will take their fighting places in the common ranks, just as they have done up to now, everywhere and at all times."

"This is the position of our Declaration to the Anti-Fascist Congress. And in this sense we shall do our work at the congress. Slander and pogrom incitement hamper us, to be sure, but our voice will be heard by the working class in Fascist Germany and by the whole world proletariat. (From Unser Wort)

The Industrial Control Bill

Workers Must Organize Against State Capitalism

The speedy adoption of the Industrial Control Bill was no surprise to the industrialists. Before the bill became law three conferences of the railroad presidents, the coal operators and the iron and steel men were held in Chicago. Long before President Roosevelt signed the bill, the now administrator, H. S. Johnson, was busy at work on his job as the head of industrial control. Within the first week after the bill became law five major industrial groups, which, in normal times employ two-thirds of the workers of America, were in session working out their industrial codes.

The iron and steel, soft coal, automobile, oil and textile bosses are busy planning how they can increase profits under the terms of the bill. The twenty leading manufacturers of oil burners have already drafted their industrial code and sent it to Washington for approval. The railroad presidents commenced the good work with an announcement of a 22 1-2 percent wage cut.

The Industrial Control Bill which is accredited to Roosevelt, was, in reality, originated by the leading financiers and industrialists. Their democratic office boys, headed by Roosevelt, only carry out their orders. The Industrial Control Bill is a necessary step to tighten up the decaying structure of capitalism at home. It is aimed to hurry the process of centralization and concentration to enable the American imperialists to obtain a position of advantage in the intense and bitter international economic and military struggle for world markets and trade advantages. The small producers and others who are opposed to the bill, as are a handful of capitalists. The competition and anarchy of capitalist production will be "organized" on a higher level. However, the leading section and the real rulers of the country were behind the bill. Those who put up a howl, such as the merchants and manufacturers, were not objecting to the bill, but to the section which gives lip service to the workers' interests. There are a section of the open shoppers who continue to speak plain English. They are not yet familiar with the new kind of talk, copied from the European reformers—a language which gives lip service to the workers' interest everytime a new attack upon the working class is to be launched.

A Form of State Capitalism

The Industrial Control Bill, as a form of state capitalism, is a desperate attempt to find a way out of the contradictions which engulf capitalism. Traylor, the La Salle Street banker, speaking before the soft coal operators in convention at the Drake Hotel in Chicago, where they were planning how to make more profits said, "the program of the new administration is an effort to save ourselves from annihilation." "There is more security in the new deal, whatever that may be, than there is in the communism of Russia, which might be our program if we failed in the old standard program which you and I believe in."

We are informed by the bourgeois economists and the rest of their ilk that the "planned economy" is to inaugurate an era of "fair competition". But have not these apologists for capitalism informed us for the last score of years that any governmental interference, capitalist or otherwise, into private business, will wreck our industrial system and eliminate fair competition? Industry and government always were partners and always will be, because government can be nothing else than an instrument of suppression used by the dominating economic group. The only difference is that in the past the relationship was more disguised only in emergencies, in wars, and in the period of decay capitalism is the relationship of the economic masters and the government office boys stripped naked before us.

The conferences already held, and what little has leaked out from them, clearly indicate the line of

Mass Meeting! Germany Under Hitler

AN EYEWITNESS ACCOUNT of the Fascist Dictatorship in Action—The Condition of the Social Democracy—The Communist Party and the Trade Unions

Speaker:

ARNE SWABECK

Just arrived from a visit to Germany and to comrade Trotsky.

Stuyvesant Casino.

Second Avenue and 9th Street

THURSDAY, JUNE 29th at 8 P. M.

ADMISSION: 15 CENTS

Auspices: New York Branch, Communist League of America (Opposition)

On June 4 and 5, the European Anti-Fascist Congress, many times delayed and postponed, was finally held in the Salle Pleyel at Paris. The Daladier government had refused permission to hold the meeting anywhere outside of the well-known Communist halls. The restricted nature of the congress, lacking a broad working class base, did not allow for a mass protest and pressure to force the concession from the government to hold the convention in full view of the Parisian proletariat.

The "free lancers"—the Radical deputy Berger, the novelists Andre Gide, Victor Marguerite, Henri Barbusse, the professors Prenant and Nejedly, etc.—naturally dominated the scene. The Stalinist Comintern bureaucracy, which improvised the whole affair, kept well in the background during its entire duration.

"DAILY WORKER" ON CONGRESS

Significant for the sham character of the whole business, is the reaction of the Stalinist press to it. The Daily Worker, for instance, did not even dignify the congress with a first page account, but relegated it to the back page. This speaks enough for the bureaucracy's own lack of confidence in their doings. No decisions of any value were adopted, no discussion of fundamentals was permitted. Ceremony and flowery speeches—there is the sum total of the results achieved by it.

LEFT OPPOSITION EXCLUDED!

The International Left Opposition was officially excluded from the sessions. Behind the scenes, the bureaucracy built up an entire apparatus whose business it was to see that the Left Opposition's voice be stifled, no matter from what quarter it may come. Direct reports are still forthcoming and it is not yet definitely known whether the Bolshevik-Leninists gained access by round-about ways or not. But from the preliminary impression made by the congress, the intent of Stalinism not to permit the Left Opposition to force it to give an account before the whole working class of the crimes it perpetrated against the German and the international proletariat in the tense months and weeks preceding the seizure of power by Hitler.

SLUG HOLDSHEV-LININISTS!

At a regional Anti-Fascist Congress in the Franco-Belgian (Luxembourg) Union Headquarters of Paris, Left Oppositionists delegates from the League Communiste and local unions were forcefully misused and disgracefully battered by slugs organized under the direct leadership of outstanding French bureaucrats.

At a second regional meet in Paris, not only were the delegates from the Left Opposition excluded, but bona fide trade union and mass organization representatives suspected of solidarity with the views of the Left Opposition were barred from the hall. Stalinist united front!

NEVERTHELESS—OUR VOICE IS HEARD!

It remained for a member of the Young Communist League of France to take the floor for a presentation of the views of the Left Opposition. That was entirely unexpected and consternation reigned in the ranks of the bureaucracy. Before the young orator could conclude his remarks with a declaration of concrete proposals put forward by the L. O., the bureaucracy organized a monstrous noise throughout several parts of the hall to drown out his voice. His counter-resolution received two votes, the Stalinist mass-querade was not entirely airtight.

WHY THE TERROR AGAINST THE LEFT OPPOSITION?

Why the terror against the Left Opposition? Why this unheard-of determination on the part of the bureaucracy? A glance at one of the speeches is sufficient for illumination on this point. The German delegate Mueller, shoved to the forefront by the bureaucratic impresarios, had the following to say: "If today Fascist terror is raging worse than ever before, it is not an indication of the strength of Fascism, but of its weakness (1). But it is also a sign of the rapid rise of the revolutionary wave." (Daily Worker, Saturday, June 17, 1933.)

A FABRIC OF LIES

It is with such a fabric of lies and illusions that the Stalinist bureaucracy attempts to cover up its criminal shipwreck in Germany. It is upon this self-same rotten fundamental of untruths that Stalinism proceeds to cover up its tracks before the working class of the world by speaking of preparations for a German general strike to overthrow Fascism now. It is their fear that the Left Opposition would tear the mask off their cynical, lying countenances and force through a discussion of the real state of affairs and those responsible for it that

All Out to Anti-Nazi Meet on Union Square

On Saturday, June 24, the militant workers all over the United States will come out in the streets and demonstrate their solidarity with their German fellow workers tortured under the bloody heel of Hitler's Fascist rule. This demonstration, called by the United Front Anti-Fascist Committee in conjunction with various labor groups, must try out its answer to the bestial oppression of the naked capitalist dictatorship in Germany. Down with the Nazi terror!

The Left Opposition calls upon its members and sympathizers to be on hand in the demonstrations throughout the country and in New York on Union Square on Saturday, June 24th at 2 P. M., in the common protest against German Fascism. All out! Down with German Fascism!

Danger Signals Flash at London Conference

War to Solve Crisis Nears as Contradictions Sharpen. Imperialists Wrangle Over Tariff, Prices, Markets. Hugenberg Betrays Real Plans -- to Attack USSR.

Although the London Economic Conference has been in progress for only two weeks, it has already given ample proof of two things: the breakdown of the illusions of reasonable, peaceful international agreement, and the built-in head-on collision of American imperialism to smash through every obstacle to obtain its ends.

In view of the high tension of the world crisis on all fronts—economic, political, social, military—this means that the London Conference, by exhausting some of the theoretically possible peaceful alternatives, and by bringing international conflicts of interest before an international arena, will constitute a long step in the preparation of the coming imperialist war.

The keynote of the conference—intrigue, treachery, a nauseous hypocrisy, and the naked violence of an accomplished fact—was given before it started, when Roosevelt took America off the gold standard while MacDonald was on his way to Washington, thus breaking the strongest weapon in the British armory, the stabilized depreciation of the pound sterling in terms of the dollar. England repudiated MacDonald had left, with a preferential trade agreement with Argentina that gave the lie to its sanctimonious talk about increasing the freedom of international trade.

America, which had insisted on putting the question of German reparations on the agenda at the Lausanne conference last year, refused to permit the war debts to be discussed in London; as if a genuine settlement of currency questions could be reached unless it were decided whether or not hundreds of millions of dollars would be moving each year to the United States. MacDonald promptly opened the conference by throwing the question of war debts on to the table, quickly followed by Jung of Italy. Hull of the American delegation held over his speech for twenty-four hours during which the threat of possible withdrawal by America hung over the conference.

Matters were patched up enough to permit of the organization of the conference into two committees, one on currency and the other on economics. The composition of the committees alone indicates how little seriously the conference itself took their activities. The chairman of the currency committee is a provincial Ohio politician, James M. Cox. The economic committee consists of representatives of Holland, Argentina and Germany. England is represented on neither committee.

The real negotiations all this time have been taking place behind the scenes. While the pretentious masquerade and the speeches dripping with international good-will were going on at the conference, a little committee having nothing to do with the conference was fighting grimly and silently behind the scenes for the real decisions. It consisted of the governors of the central banks of the United States, England and France. Five days after the conference started, this real and small committee disbanded when the American representative left for Washington.

In the same way the wheat conference had been sitting for a week before the "big show" started. Like the bankers' committee, it has run into a deadlock of national interests; as the bourgeois press reports, it only exhibited "the hesitations of the Australian and Canadian wheat growers, the apprehensions of the Polish and French peasants, the grievances of the Argentine live stock producers, the concern of Italy and other countries to reserve their internal markets for their own farmers."

S.P.G. Vote Shakes 2nd Int'l

1.

The policy of coalition and tolerance, ever typical of the Socialist Party of Germany, found an ignominious end when Hitler seized power. As a social raises a child so did the Nazis raise a child. From 1914 to Hitler's accession, the S. P. G. bore direct responsibility for the policy of the German bourgeoisie in regards to the German masses. Its occasional attitude of opposition expressed itself in pitiful amounts, as the refusal to consent to retrenchment in social insurance and reduction of salaries. Other goals and other tasks the S. P. G. was incapable of setting for itself. It was too closely bound to the decadent state apparatus of the German Republic. The forces of the social democracy could just bear a penny opposition and no more.

Already long before Hitler's seizure of power, the S. P. G. was rotten, corroded internally thoroughly by bureaucraticism. It was a party without an inner life. That for one time another grotesque "State Party" could establish itself alongside the S. P. G. was one of the curiosities frequently occurring in the history of the Weimar republic. However, the S. P. G. was the state party. It was the party of the Weimar republic. The "work of Weimar" was condemned to destruction, and with it the S. P. G. proceeded to its end. Nobody has so clearly formulated the task of the social democracy as Tarnow at the Leipzig party convention. Its job, according to him, was to act as doctor at the sickbed of the capitalism. Indeed, the Tarnows, the Weises, the Severings, have guarded the sick patient solicitously, but they could not cure him. Even their medicine of the "lesser evil" was of no avail, and the magnificent patient sent his Fascist henchman, Hitler, to break the head of the old family doctor, the S. P. G. And so the medical career of the Social Democracy came to an end.

Very rarely has history offered such an extreme example of heedlessness and helplessness as the "straggle" of the S. P. G. against Fascism. Not only was the S. P. G. incapable of showing how to fight against Fascism; it did everything in its power to prove that it could take the place of Hitler in all respects. As usual, reformism wrongly estimated its forces in this case too. The S. P. G. has long ago lost all feeling of the requirements of the class struggle. It placed faith only in the omnipotence of the apparatus. The bureaucratic apparatus could gag and deceive faithful workers. It could choke strikes and uprisings. It could not, however, deceive the bourgeoisie, and it did not have the strength to choke and gag Fascism.

Even if the social democratic apparatus did not collaborate in policy, they believed at least in the inner value of a policy of class toleration. To them the thought of

Hitler Clashes with Hugenberg for Control

The Hitler-Hugenberg rift has more than an internal significance. Especially is this so when simultaneously with the raids on Hugenberg's Green Shirts the Nazis also raided the office of the Bavarian People Party (Catholic) in Munich.

At least in so far as the raids on the Catholic center were concerned an official communiqué declared: "Leading personalities of the Bavarian Peoples party were connected with the recent events in Austria, especially with the suppression of the National Socialist party" (Austrian Nazis).

The Nazis mean serious business in Austria. They will tolerate no vacillation from distant allies or near allies. That is, from the Bavarian Catholics or from Hugenberg's nationalists. Already the Nazis have undertaken a mighty propaganda—not only in word but in deed. Nazi bomb factories have been discovered in Austria. Dollfuss, Austrian Chancellor, has used this as a pretext to banish the Nazi press.

Lovestone and his kind notwithstanding, the differences between the Hitler and the Hugenburgs are not yet completely ironed out. The social and political aspirations of each still represent varying phases of dominant class interests.

Hitler has not yet completely consolidated his power. But he has been and he is marching forward on the path of reaction with seven league boots. Unless the Communist movement sounds the alarm and acts in time—Austria will be next in order!

But here it must be declared that the American party, at least, if Robert Minor and Alexander are its true spokesmen, and we have no reason to doubt that they are, has learned nothing from the past.

Speaking before an audience of workers in Brownsville, Brooklyn, the other night on Fascism, they offered such empty and vainglorious platitudes that though the hour was nearly twelve when the two main speakers concluded the audience virtually demanded speakers from the Left Opposition to take the floor and present their point of view. Though three minutes were allotted, the speaker for the L. O. took the opportunity to point out that Alexander's theory—the more misery the better—was in reality a petty bourgeois Anarchist theory, that the Leninist approach is to call a defeat a defeat and not to say that the ravages of Fascism are "in reality a victory and a sign of strength for the German working class," as Alexander and Minor inferred. When the speaker's time was up he asked for an extension of time. The sentiment of the workers was to grant it. The chairman refused to intervene and as the speaker started to con-

Ill. Miners in Mass Action

Women's Auxiliary Takes Valiant Part in Struggle

10,000 MINERS IN FUNERAL CORTAGE

10,000 miners marched in the funeral cortege of Thomas Urban, member of the Progressive Miners Union slain by Lewis and Peabody gunmen, in Springfield, Ill. Thomas Urban, laborer in the United States, was murdered in the gun battle that took place when scabs attempted to operate a mine struck by the Progressive Miners of America. The "democratic" governor of Illinois, Horner, prohibited all banners and bands in the parade in the interest of "law and order."

Everywhere except in those places where the armed National Guards prevent meetings, the miners and their wives gather in their thousands to discuss their problems. The whole of the mining territory seethes with agitation and action. Seven miners and one miner's wife have paid with their lives for the crime of organizing and fighting for a union of their choice.

MINERS WOMEN A SERIOUS "MENACE" IN SOUTHERN ILLINOIS

The chief of police of West Frankfort, Ill., and his henchmen forcibly and brutally dispersed members of the Women's Auxiliary of the P. M. A. drill team which was practicing on a base ball diamond in that city. With no provocation whatsoever the uniformed thugs charged the women, leveled the vilest curses at them, slapped them, pointed a machine gun at their children and ordered them to disperse. One woman and five men were arrested for the "horrible" crime of marching around on a ball field. Several were beaten. A monument to the "freedom of assembly" in America.

NO RACE DISCRIMINATION HERE

We have always contended that the solidarity between the white and Negro workers will be best achieved in struggle. It is in the impact struggle against the bosses that the artificial barriers of race and color will melt like so much ice on a hot summer day. We quote the following simple, eloquent testimony of this fact from a letter written to the Progressive Miner, organ of the P. M. A. by a miner's wife from Saline County, Ill.

"About two weeks ago we went to attend a colored funeral and they honored us to the full extent. The Negroes said that this was the first time white and colored folks had ever mixed here. They said that they were glad to find some people who didn't discriminate and lived up to their union obligations."

Hold Protest Meeting in Phila.

Philadelphia Pa.—An enthusiasm which more than hints at the smoldering unrest of the workers and their desire for leadership in struggle blazed forth in answer to the protest open air meeting called by the Philadelphia Branch of the Left Opposition where more than six hundred workers came out to show their resentment and to denounce the Fascist tactics of the police and the courts exemplified in the malicious frame-up of our comrade Leon Goodman at an open air meeting held at the same corner two days earlier.

This protest meeting was far bigger than any open air meeting the Stalinists have ever had in this city. The workers responded to our leaflet appeal. Eight o'clock they lined the street within the vicinity of Hope and Jefferson Streets. Some hailed us as we approached. The workers were heartened at our appearance and drew close to hear the protest meeting and to take part in the protest meeting.

Comrade Carey, though not a member of the Opposition was invited to take part in this meeting and was the first speaker. The other speakers were comrades Morgenstern and Roberts, Hirsch acting as chairman. The workers were anxious to listen to our comrades and called for them by name.

A resolution was passed condemning the action of the arrest and demanding the immediate unconditional release of comrade Goodman. Petitions were passed among the workers which many signed willingly. At the close of the meeting workers formed groups among themselves and around our comrades and discussed.

The Philadelphia Branch has been carrying on a campaign of open air meetings before the workers in the Kensington section of the city. The workers are willing to fight but they demand leadership. Stalinism with its bureaucratic ultimatum demands stifles initiative and independent thought among the vanguard of the working class. This mass meeting protesting Goodman's arrest casts a perspective of what strength lies latent among the workers. The Stalinists with their policy of isolation are in great measure responsible for their non-organization.

To get aid from the L. I. D. was as easy as it is to pull an elephant out of a quicksand bog. We were advised to let Goodman serve the sentence and our request for a speaker to be sent to the protest meeting was met by evasion and finally refused.

New York City to Stop All Jobless Relief

The announcement that on September 30th, the Emergency Unemployment Relief Committee will discontinue its activities receives little comment in the bourgeois press. And for good reason. Open admission of the failure of "private charity" would be too much to expect. Nevertheless, it is now clearly evident that the bourgeoisie is unwilling to shoulder the expense of even the beggarly sops thrown to unemployed workers.

As a matter of fact, however, the bulk of the funds for this work, as class conscious workers probably realized a long time ago, was coming not from our great philanthropists but from employed workers.

For the past several years many firms in New York had followed the policy of "requesting" their employees to make weekly donations to the unemployment fund. These were mainly of small amounts, running from 10 cents to 50 cents per week. With the deepening of the economic crisis, followed by further drastic wage reductions, a militant spirit developed among the workers, many refusing to continue the weekly payments. Confronted with a dilemma, the bourgeoisie characteristically faces the problem: disband the committee! This is equivalent to a starvation sentence for the unemployed.

So as to make a pretense of continuing the work, a good deal is said about coordinating public and private charities, with emphasis on the former. Everything will be left in the hands of the past masters of relief distribution, the Tammany politicians.

Such a prospect must be doubly alluring to the jobless of this city, especially in view of the attitude of the bankers on governmental economies. To expect the bourgeoisie to submit to additional taxation, for the purpose of meeting relief needs, is to expect too much. The dissolution of the Gibson Committee should make this fact plain.

On top of that, Mayor O'Brien announced last Tuesday night that if the city's revenues "broke down," they would have to appeal to private charitable agencies to help carry on unemployment aid. Revenues have already broken down, and the attempt to pass the buck back to private charities means eventually the utter breakdown of the whole system of relief to unemployed workers and their families.

How is the miserable condition of the unemployed to be improved? Only through a broad and militant struggle. Such a movement demands above all united action. The need of the hour is unity, a common working class policy to fight the onslaught home that the workers mean business, that the starvation program of the new deal will not be quietly accepted. A united front of all workers organizations must be the answer. This is the only way that the emergency can be met.

—D. BELLOWS.

C. Zetkin, Veteran Red Dies at 76

Clara Zetkin is dead. The veteran revolutionary labor leader of more than 50 years of active, militant service to the cause of the German and international proletariat has passed away in a sanatorium near Moscow a few days ago. The death of Clara Zetkin, a real tragedy to the world's working class, coincides with the greater tragedy of the German proletariat whose movement now writes under the heel of Hitler and his brown cohorts.

The name of comrade Zetkin is associated with some of the most glorious traditions of the German proletariat and its struggle for emancipation. She began her participation in the socialist movement under the tutelage of Marx and Engels. She was in the forefront of the battle against the anti-Socialist laws of Bismarck. The great honor of being the initiator of the organization of working class women on an international scale belongs to Clara Zetkin. Her name is indissolubly associated with this indispensable activity.

More important and more outstanding in the fighting career of comrade Zetkin has been her unremitting warfare against the traitors of the German social democracy and the Second International. Together with Karl Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemburg, she kept aloft the banner of internationalism during the dark days of the imperialist slaughter. This indomitable fighter did her part in the foundation of the heroic Spartacus League in Germany, the Communist International. The Bolshevik work of Clara Zetkin was a milestone in the days when the proletarian international had all its strength turned towards the world revolution—in the days of Lenin and Trotsky. Lenin paid her a significant tribute when he said that "the only man in the German party was an old woman."

In spite of her militancy and heroism, comrade Zetkin was soft and even equivocal, at times, in the inner struggle in the ranks of Communism. Sometimes her sympathies swayed to Brandler, in the early days she showed inclinations towards the Left Opposition. The epigones many times made malicious use of the prestige of Clara Zetkin.

Notwithstanding, the death of this brave leader is a real loss to the Communist and revolutionary workers. The name of comrade Zetkin is an inspiration—it is enshrined in the hearts of the proletarian vanguard wherever it battles for freedom!

P.M.A. in Perspective

A Review of the Past and Signs for the Future

With each passing day it becomes increasingly necessary to consider the situation in the Progressive Miners of America with the aim of ascertaining its tasks in the light of recent developments. The P.M.A. is at the crossroads. The policies it adopts will decide its future. In any discussion of this union, it must always be borne in mind, that the organization was founded on the basis of a militant struggle against the Lewis machine in the United Mine Workers of America.

At the outset, its struggles for existence revolved around two fronts: against the coal operators (primarily the Peabody Coal Company) and the officialdom of the UMWA (having at its disposal money, materials, etc.), both working with the support of the State of Illinois, its courts, police, the controlled press, etc. With such an array of reaction surrounding it, the course chartered out in advance for the new union was (and it remains so now) a precarious one.

Under such conditions two paths are open for the new union. Either it succumbs to the pressure of reaction or it maintains that militant class struggle character which brought it into existence, and endeavors to spread the union beyond the borders of the State of Illinois in order to make it a truly national union of the coal miners. There is no middle road for the union to travel. The militants in the union must understand that their successful struggle against Lewis in Illinois laid years before in the fight made by the Progressives in 1924, by the Save-the-Union movement in 1928 and similar struggles over a period of a decade. The victorious struggle of the Progressive Miners Union came as the mighty wave of these many fights.

The "Red" Scare

After a series of unsuccessful efforts by Lewis and the Peabody Coal Company to destroy the new union, they resorted to a familiar weapon used by all reactionaries and hunkies in the labor movement. The "red scare" was employed. It was directed against Gerry Allard, the editor of the Progressive Miner. By this means they hoped to drive the officialdom of the P.M.A. into reactionary channels. This offensive launched by the reactionaries met a healthy rebuff in the rank and file of the P.M.A. The leadership of the P.M.A. said to go, reacted in a most shameful and pitiful manner. It apologized and did precisely what the reactionaries desired. It too declared itself in deadly opposition to Communism in general and to Communists in the new union. It announced that the union was "pure" of radicalism. Instead of meeting this challenge in a straightforward militant manner it engaged in a "red-hunting campaign." And in their own way, they now proceed to cleanse the union and direct blows against the most militant section of the P.M.A., that section without which the new union would have been an impossibility.

One thing is certain, the drive against militants in the new union will spell its inevitable death, and at present constitutes an ill-omen of what will take place in the union, if the leadership will persist in its present course—remaining smug and self-satisfied with early gains; a union in Illinois and a few contracts. In a discussion of the union it is necessary to return to some fundamental questions of tactics and strategy that are indispensable to the miners' organization.

The greatest possible error that the militants can commit is to consider that the struggle against the Lewis machine in the UMWA, was an isolated struggle for democracy and the rights of the rank and file miner in the union as such. It is impossible to make such an abstraction of the struggle for democracy in any workers' organization. The inner life of any organization is a reflection of its policies. In a like manner the inner life of the UMWA was a result of the policies of betrayal committed by its leadership. It cannot be said that Lewis and his murderous regime is more brutal and vicious than other reactionaries in the labor movement. All of them act alike, when confronted with a desperate and militant rank and file. It is in defense of their policies, that the Lewis machine resorted to the vilest methods in destroying the will and desires of the coal miners. In the same manner the basis for the struggle of the miners against their leadership, arose primarily in reaction, not to the throttling of democracy, but to the traitorous policies of the ruling clique.

Why the Fight Against Lewis?

The Lewis machine dedicated itself to the task of helping the coal operators at the expense of the coal miners. Instead of acting as the labor leader of workers and serving their interests, they acted as labor lieutenants in the service of the capitalists—in this case the coal operators. The decline of the once powerful United Mine Workers, is a tale of successive betrayals of the miners. Strikes were sold out. Wage agreements were made that added only the operators and reduced the already low standards of the miners to an even lower scale. Conditions in the mines became steadily worse. With the coal industry, already over-developed and constantly menaced by the development of electric and water-fuel-power, drifting to the south and the unorganized fields, the Lewis regime did not raise a finger in the direction of the organization of the unorganized miners. The unorganized fields steadily increased production until they were mining the great bulk of the coal produced in the United States. Yet the leadership did not budge. Wherever such possibilities of organization existed, as in West Virginia, Lewis betrayed the miners.

With such a background of constantly worsening conditions for miners, is it any wonder that with in the rank and file a wave of resentment developed into a stormy revolt? In order to enforce its policy of betrayal, the Lewis machine resorted to every means at its disposal to check the revolt of the miners and thereby, to successfully carry through his policy. To accomplish it, he had to steal elections; expel militants by the hundreds; kill, maim, torture; and destroy every vestige of democracy in the union. The union was no longer an organization of the coal miners. It was a place of loot for the agents of the coal operators in the union who, in carrying through this great betrayal of the miners, also proceeded to rifle its treasuries.

What should have been the course of the UMWA? Assuming it to be a genuine organization of workers, it should have proceeded on a bold scale to unionize the unorganized fields, extend the struggle against wage cuts and for wage increases, for a general improvement of the working conditions of the miners. Needless to say, it did exactly the opposite. As has already been cited above, in order to enforce his external policies, Lewis resorted to a destruction of the inner life of the union. It is to be observed, thus, that the struggle for democracy in the Lewis union, was dependent upon raising at the same time the question of policies.

Every movement of revolt in the UMWA, whether or not it momentarily raised the question of democracy as a forefront issue, nevertheless had to first of all present to the miners a program in contrast to the prevailing program of the Lewis union. Of what value is a program for democratization of union, which is not accompanied at the same time with a program of vital, militant struggle to save the union (through its extension); against wage cuts (for increases); for retaining the improved conditions in the mines (and their extension)? Obviously it cannot be of much value.

The Howat Movement

The outstanding experience of the Howat movement which rode the wave of one mighty revolt, and gained power in Illinois, was that in spite of its cry for democracy, and the need for turning the union into the hands of the rank and file, it failed miserably, brought about no changes in the life of the union, acted as a perfect agent for Lewis, because its policies were identical to those of the Lewis machine. Unless any movement can tear itself from the policies of betrayal to the adoption of the course indicated, all its pretenses of democracy, of a "rank and file" union, will fall to pieces.

The democracy of the union will be achieved only on the basis that the union is militant, and aggressive in the interests of the rank and file.

This is the second of a series of articles on the situation in the Teachers Union of New York City, Local 5 of the American Federation of Teachers in the A. F. of L. It embodies the ideas of a number of Progressive Group and Rank and File teachers, the two Left wing groups in the union.

II.

Contrary to its picture of the situation in the union, in which it appears as the representative of the interests of the teachers, the administration is clearly revealed by its policies to be the representative of only the higher-salaried, older, and more conservative teachers in the union to the exclusion of the larger interests of the union and the teachers as a whole. Let us take first the question of the fight against the salary cut which the teachers got last December.

Long before the cut was actually passed at the special session of the State legislature, called for that and similar purposes, it was clear that the attack was impending. The Left wing claims that it was obvious as much as two years ago. It was certainly unmistakable by the end of last summer, when Walker, who was then mayor, asked all civil service employees and teachers to accept a cut of 8-13 percent.

An organization which exists for the purpose of defending the interests of the teachers against such attacks, must be on the alert to discern them when they are being prepared. If the administration can show that it saw the attack in time, gave warning that it was coming, energetically mobilized the teachers to resist it and armed them with a correct policy, it can be said to have discharged its duty and deserves the confidence of the membership of the union.

But this is what the Lefkowitz-Linville administration cannot do. They failed to see the attack in time. Worse! They turned a deaf ear to the warnings of the Left wing. It was only when Walker took to the press with his appeal for voluntary cuts in the interests of economy, that the administration stirred from its lethargy.

By that time it should have been clear to all from the financial situation of New York City and the negotiations between the city and

ON THE WORKER'S FRONT

New York, N. Y.—For the past few weeks negotiations have been going on between the Pocketbook Workers Union and the Industrial Council of the Leather Goods Employers Association. The conferences were broken off several times. According to our members report at the union meeting of June 15, the employers demanded (1) a piece work system for operators and cutters; (2) abolition of the two weeks' trial period, which means the free right to hire and fire; (3) abolition of the unemployment insurance fund and the employment office, etc.

In other words, the bosses are demanding the open shop and hope to undermine the already meagre conditions of the workers. After a heated discussion the membership decided unanimously to call a strike as soon as possible.

How is it that at a time when there is general talk of raising wages, the pocketbook bosses are demanding a lowering of conditions? The answer is that our present administration, the "Fraternal Club" misleaders did not enforce 10 percent of even that rotten agreement which they forced on the workers last year. For the right to collect dues in the shops, they gave the bosses a free hand to whatever they pleased with workers. The bosses have naturally taken advantage. Workers have been thrown out of

Sugar Coated Misery

New York City.—The firms and factories operated by the bankers (they are many after four years of crisis) are the first to be affected by the Industrial Recovery Act.

The H— Paper Co. is such a place, and already last week the employees were informed they would go on a six hour day. As the workers were being paid by the hour and were working eight and a half hours per day that meant, exclusive of considerations of higher prices and rents, a thirty per cent wage reduction.

Thirty percent less than what they were getting (they were averaging less than forty cents an hour, and many of them got only three days per week every other week, or five dollars and ten cents per week to live on—none of them had been working full time) brought forth a healthy response from among the workers who threatened to walk out in protest.

The superintendent sensed the possibility of this development and immediately busied himself, personally interviewing the "loyal" employees best acquainted with the factory as a whole. Then he must have met with the president of the company and with the bankers again. For his tactic was changed. He met the threat of a walkout with the threat of firing a certain number of workers (he would not name them nor in any way imply who they might be), but accompanying this threat with a promise of a five day week.

For the present, this move having been given the authority of law and having been put over on them in the name of the President of the United States and the Federal government, the workers involved are experiencing the meaning of the Industrial Recovery Act and the New Deal: more unemployment, more misery. —SHOP WORKER.

Pocket Book Workers Vote for Strike their jobs indiscriminately, the wage scale is not being paid, time-and-a-half for overtime has been done away with. Certain shops like Blum and Mittenhal, Kadon Bros., etc., have been allowed to send their work to outside contracting shops.

The "Fraternal Club" administration never made an attempt to carry out the agreement which carries provisions against all of the above abuses. If these S. P. fakers have not enforced the agreement they signed last year, how can they trust them to sign a new agreement today which may be still worse? That is why the workers demanded the election of a conference committee from amongst the membership. The workers know that they can have no faith in Shiplacoff, Wolinsky and Co.

The present agreement, which was enforced, "expired" June 1. While the agreement guaranteed $32 and $37 per week, workers are actually getting only $15 to $22 a week. While the agreement did not permit more than 5 per cent shop reorganization, Chlick, Morris, White, Mazik, Stone and Groper, Blum and Mittenhal have thrown out from 30 to 50 per cent of their workers. The union leadership put up no resistance whatever.

This is the leadership that was driven from our ranks a few years ago and only recently got back into it. Who is responsible for the return of this disastrous leadership which has brought our industry to such a terrible state of affairs? It is the clique? The so-called and fake Progressives, the Leather Goods Workers Society who formed a united front with the "Fraternal Club", not to better conditions but to defeat the Left wing. It is these same people, who know that the leadership cannot be trusted, that rejected the demand for a new conference committee representing all groups and tendencies and the election of a general strike committee under rank and file control.

The Left wing approached these "progressives" for common action against the bosses and the "Fraternal" clique, but they refused. The Matlins, David Myers, etc., will be held responsible for any treacherous acts perpetrated by the administration, for failure of militant strike preparations.

But the Left wing too must be criticized for not using their united front proposals to the Progressive openly before the workers, for not putting these people to the wall by continually hammering them in the open with such proposals. The Left wing must be criticized too for leaving such a favorable opportunity as the Bridgeport revolt of the Morris White workers (and the resentment against the blood-sucking tactics of White in his New York shops, with which we will deal in a separate article) go by unexploited.

It is now a week since the membership decided to go out on strike in answer to the bosses' demands. Instead of carrying out the membership decisions, the leaders are trying to patch things up by a back-door agreement. They are preparing a new sell-out which they mean to force upon the workers by terror.

What can be done in order to prevent a new sell-out? (1) All groups must unite in a general strike committee and force the officials to call the strike immediately. (2) The strike must be prepared so as to involve the non-union shops. (3) Militant mass picketing must be organized. (4) The general strike committee must select a negotiations committee composed of one member from each group to negotiate on the following demands:

- (1) A 40 hour week, to relieve unemployment.
- (2) The abolition of reorganization and readjustment privileges.
- (3) For unemployment insurance to be paid by the bosses only.
- (4) For the abolition of the institution of the "impartial" chairman.
- (5) For the right to strike when employers violate the agreement.

These demands will be granted only when the employers see an organization which can strike unilaterally and strike hard. Only through struggle have the workers gained conditions from the employers. The pocketbook bosses will be forced to grant our demands not by any industrial Recovery Bill from Washington or by any Miss Perkins, but only through their own struggle and organization. —N. D. F.

'Law an' Order' in Illinois

Homes of the Progressive Miners in Christian County, Ill., were bombed last week and one house riddled with bullets by coal company agents in an effort to terrorize the miners to return to work under company terms. While picketing is forbidden and even peaceful meetings of miners' wives broken up by the National Guard, apparently "law and order" allows coal company thugs to bomb and shoot with impunity.

SUBSCRIBE TO "UNSER WORT"

Workers and friends who read German and are interested in getting first hand accounts of conditions in Germany can do so by subscribing to Unser Wort, the illegal organ of the German Left Opposition, published in Prague.

The paper appears every other week. Subscriptions are for a year only and are $2.00. Subscriptions must be accompanied by currency. Checks and money orders will not do.

Comrades who subscribe must take into account the time element involved. They must allow time for their snubs to reach the center here, and ten days for the snub to reach Prague and on top of that ten days to two weeks additional for the paper to reach them. In short, the first copy should reach the comrade about three weeks after remittance to us.

Teachers Union and the Fight Against Wage Cuts

the Wall Street bankers for a loan to the city, that the impending salary cut was an integral part of this banker-politician inspired economy. The policy of the union administration should have had the aim of making this clear to the union membership and all the teachers in the system. That was its simple duty.

Policy of the Administration

But that was not the line which informed the policy of the administration. On September 2, in another statement issued by the union, over the signatures of Linville, president; Lefkowitz, Legislative Representative; and Charles J. Hendley of the CPEA, Treasurer, the administration stated: "(1) Mayor Walker has asked all civil service employees and teachers to accept a voluntary salary cut.... (5) Deputy Comptroller Frank J. Priol, and his civil service group are opposing the proposal for salary reduction actively, vigorously, and successfully." (our emphasis.)

This was on September 2. On October 20, in another statement, signed by the Joint Committee on Left wing activities in the Teachers Union, and the officers of the union—a document which attempts to reply to the criticisms made against the administration by the Left wing—the administration has the following to say on the question of the salary cut: "(4) In the summer of 1932 following the action of Mayor Walker in demanding voluntary cuts of 8-13 percent from all city employees, at a time when the leaders of the conservative organizations were showing signs of submitting, the officers of the union came out with three strong statements opposing the cuts under any circumstances. Undoubtedly, these statements turned the tide against the proposal for the cut!" (our emphasis.)

As every teacher knows now, the special session of the State legislature cut the teachers pay from 6 to 10 percent. The banker-politician economy triumphed over the bossanons of the union administration. What the administration succeeded in doing, was to disarm the teachers before their attackers and restrain them from active resistance.

The Joint Salary Committee

This record does not exhaust this aspect of the question. The Teachers Union is represented in the Joint Salary Committee and has four members on its Executive Board. The Joint Salary Committee is a city wide organization made up of representatives of the approximately 75 teachers' organizations in the city, including the Teachers Union. At this point we cannot undertake a detailed analysis of the composition of the J. S. C. Suffice it to say that most of the 75 organizations represented in it, are paper: 44 organizations have less than 100 members—one numbering only 8; 21 organizations have less than 500 members; and 15 have above 500. To boot, supervisors, who by their position in the school system, are partly or almost entirely integrated into the Board of Education, and whose interests, consequently, are not those of the classroom teacher—these supervisors who comprise only 4 percent of all the teachers in the system, make up almost 50 percent of the membership of the representatives to the J. S. C. and of its Executive Board. The cause of this situation and the various plans for its necessary reorganization will be discussed later.

The Joint Salary Committee was created for the purpose of advancing the salaries of the teachers, protecting their pensions, etc. In the course of its existence it has collected tens of thousands of dollars from the teachers for this purpose. How well it has defended their interests can be seen from its record in connection with the recent salary cut. The Joint Salary Committee did absolutely nothing to resist the salary cut. It declared that the issue was not at all a salary reduction but the protection of the legislation on the books in Albany, making mandatory, salary increases for teachers! And along these lines it conducted its agitation. Such a policy must be branded for what it is—a teacherous sell-out!

The union administration tailed completely to sound the alarm against this treachery. On the contrary, it participated in it and covered it up. On December 16th, Lefkowitz put a motion at a meeting of teachers, calling for a vote of confidence in the Joint Salary Committee! By this policy the union administration compromised itself in the eyes of all thinking teachers.

The Gillespie Meet

A Resolution which was Rejected and the Reason Why

The June 11th Gillespie Conference, called by the Progressive Trade Union Educational Committee, consisting of Left wing trade unionists in this section ended by preventing the establishment of a New Federation of Labor and by reaffirming the decisions of the previous conferences. The backbone of the conference, as usual, was the delegation from the Progressive Miners of America and the numerically largest force from other organizations was under the control of the Stalinists.

The policy committee took a correct position by rubber stamping the program and policy laid down at the previous conferences and by bringing in some proposals for concrete action and for committees of action to be established in the different sections of the country to work toward the coordination of all Left wing groups in the trade union movement.

However, the Stalinists, who had the largest number of delegates in the conference, and the policy committee which they controlled, failed miserably to measure up to the task confronting the American working class and the needs of the conference. To call a conference to rubber stamp the decisions of the previous conference is a waste of energy. Conferences are not called for such a purpose. A conference of Left wing trade unionists must consider the most pressing problems of the class, point out the dangers developing and confronting us and map out a program of action for the class to fight against the capitalist offensive.

Thrust of Industrial Control Bill
The most menacing capitalist measure confronting our class and the least understood by our class at this stage is the Industrial Control Law of the capitalists and their state. In the future, when the labor history as well as the economic history of America is written, this measure will stand out in all its capitalist ugliness as an attempt to hold up a tottering structure and beat down the workers.

The Gillespie Conference was the only Left wing conference of trade unionists held in this period and the logical starting point to rally the American workers against the Industrial Control Law and to fight the labor misleaders' plan to tie the American workers to this scheme.

The Left Opposition delegates and some of the other delegates realized this danger and the needs of our class. We were fighting independently against this Industrial Control Bill in the past and could easily have found common ground at the conference. Delegate Hugo Oehler drew up a resolution (appearing in this issue of the Militant) giving a political analysis of the Industrial Control Bill and endeavoring to use the Gillespie Conference as a starting point for a national fight to prepare our class to fight the capitalist offensive.

The Stalinists could not equal the task because they could not understand the situation. They have not yet learned to point out the dangers ahead, to foresee the blows. They can only feel blows when they fall upon their heads. Their policy committee, in reporting, rejected our political analysis and instead brought in a report with a one-sentence motion which said merely that we go on record against the Industrial Control Bill. Delegate Oehler entered his resolution which was rejected by the Stalinists as an amendment and then the fight started.

Stalinists Set Up Straw Men

The Stalinists set up straw men and proceeded to tear them to bits in their fight against our resolution. They said: Oehler wants to waste our time calling conferences to fight the Industrial Control Bill; what we want is mass action of the workers. They said our resolution was too long, they said everything imaginable but they did not show where the resolution was wrong, where the analysis was false. The Stalinists opposed the international approach in the resolution with shameful and narrow-minded localism. The Stalinists must some day learn that action must be built upon correct analysis.

The task of the Gillespie conference gathered together from all parts of the state was not to rubber-stamp our previous policy, but to present a correct analysis of the most dangerous move at present of the capitalists against the workers, and to map out a program of action upon a correct analysis in order to fight against it.

Delegate Payer told the Stalinists that in Germany they did not realize the danger of Fascism until after Fascism had smashed the party, that they do not understand anything until it falls upon their heads and are repeating this blunder here; that this Left wing conference, called on the eve of the Bill becoming a law, should be used as a starting point to organize the American workers against the capitalist offensive and present to the workers a correct analysis of the Industrial Control Bill.

The leaders of the P. M. A., the right wing counters by circulating petitions, and at that, not against the Industrial Control Bill and the dictatorship it will establish over the coal industry, but merely against having Lewis appointed czar of the coal industry, asking that the Progressive Miners Union be also considered by the Government when they select the czar! Instead of the brutal dictatorship of Lewis they want to give the workers a sugar-coated dictatorship, as though it makes any difference how you're killed, by hanging or by the electric chair.

Finally, when the vote was taken, the Right wing P.M.A. delegates, the delegates who were for a new federation, and the Stalinists voted together against our amendment. The vote was 72 to 17. Our vote was a conscious vote of Left wing miners and other delegates, who like ourselves, realized the importance of using this conference to start a fight on this issue and to present a correct analysis.

—HUGO OEHLEH

Resolution on the Industrial Control Bill

The American working class has lived through four years of the world crisis which has violently shaken the American structure and completely changed the position of the working class. In this period the offensive of the American capitalists against the working class has continued on all fronts. The working class has been driven back in disorderly retreat. Wages have been reduced and the standard of living has been reduced below the necessity level. The unemployed number over 18 million. Private charity has long ago broken down. Public and governmental relief has proven inadequate to cope with the present situation.

The labor leaders and reformers have done nothing to check the offensive. Everywhere the misleaders of labor and the agents of the capitalists have held in check the workers' resistance and have only functioned to console the workers after the capitalists have delivered their deadly blows.

The struggle of the Progressive Miners of America, in revolt against the corrupt Lewis machine, the Operators and the State was a heroic attempt by the miners to stem the tide of the capitalist offensive, to stop the retreat of our class. The struggle of the Illinois miners acted as a temporary rallying center for the whole class. Then the pressure of the enemies' forces and wrong policies of the leaders swerved it from its course. It is not yet too late to correct these errors and utilize the Progressive Miners of America as a rallying center for the whole American labor movement. For this a daring leadership and policies of class struggle are needed.

Admission of Capitalist Bankruptcy

Following these attacks the capitalists and their government, thru the Roosevelt administration, are driving through the Industrial Control Bill, which will strengthen the dictatorial power of the capitalists over the working class. When the Roosevelt administration declare an emergency existing and proceed to "solve" the emergency by the Industrial Control Bill, through government partnership, it is an open admission of the decay and breakdown of capitalist production, an admission that the gigantic productive forces can no longer cope with the situation and be used, under private ownership, to feed the millions of wage slaves.

It is a capitalist attempt to find a way out of the contradiction between socialized production and private capitalist appropriation by establishing a form of State Capitalism.

The Banning of the Austrian C.P.

Vienna, May 28.—On May 26th, the proscription of the Communist Party of Austria was signed by the Council of Ministers because of "its off-times established danger to the state and its illegal activity." The proscription has already been carried out, the party offices closed, all literature, etc. confiscated. The Rote Fahne, the central organ of the party, still appears, but it has changed ownership. The Workers Bookshop also remains as an independent enterprise. There can be no possible doubt as to how long the Rote Fahne will hold out.

With the proscription of a political party the Bonapartist Dollfus regime has taken a significant step in its further development. The significance of the step does not lie in a change in the relation of forces. The C. P. A. had become too insignificant for that, and the government knows this only too well. This government measure is important, however, and to the highest degree at that, insofar as it establishes a precedent that can be utilized later.

It must also be recognized that this time too "little" Dollfus proceeded very skillfully about the work. It is no mere coincidence that at this same time Hitler's new measure which, by requiring a passport charge of 1000 Marks, practically stops the entire traffic of foreigners from Germany to Austria. On this basis, the Christian Socialists deal sharp blows against the Austrian Nazis whom they accuse of having inspired these measures of the German government and of open treason to Austria. The forthcoming proscription of the Nazi party is spoken of in papers closest to the government. At the same time we learn that the Nazis made an offer of a coalition to the Dollfus government, but that it was rejected. Every means is used, Hitler's fullest support is given right out in the open, in order to consummate the Black-Brown coalition.

Importance of Foreign Traffic

The tying up of the foreign traffic on the part of the German government serves the end of lifting the Austrian Nazis into the saddle of power and by this means, to bring about the integration of Austria with Hitler-Germany. Since foreign traffic plays a great role in Austria's trade balance and especially now, because of the scarcity of foreign valuta, the government feels that it has been hit in its sorest spot. An immediate political consequence of the German measures could also work havoc in the Christian Socialist party in the fascist country, Tyrol, Salzburg and Kärnten, where the Nazis already dispose of a considerable following.

The Austrian Christian Socialists, however, do not desire to share the fate of the Nazis in Germany. Dollfus carries on a desperate fight against his Brown shirt opponents and their leader, Hitler. To work to strike a decisive blow at the Nazis, who constantly undermine his basis; unwilling to conduct such a struggle, because by doing that he would change the relation of forces in favor of the social democracy, he merely resorts to empty threats against the Nazis by proscribing the nihilistic C.P.A. He will not intimidate the Nazis by such methods. The Communist party, however, has been laid prostrate.

Workers Passive to Banning of C. P. A.

This party, the oldest in the C.I., made it easy for him to play the strong man. The entire bourgeois press limits itself merely to the publication of the official report of the proscription. Only the Arbeiter Zeitung devotes a leading article to the event of May 27th, in which it shows that the Communists could complain to the Constitution, in case it still existed. An empty protest, in which the Arbeiter Zeitung declares its feeling of solidarity with the Communists, marks the final tone of this article. Otherwise, the proscription of the C.P.A. has brought forth no repercussion in Austria, the working class has not responded in the slightest degree to this blow of the government. No one can doubt the lack of influence of the C.P.A. any longer. The Communists have been stripped of still another action.

That it was possible to remove the C.P.A. from the scene so noiselessly, in the manner of an ordinary police action, without any political uproar—that cannot astonish anyone who at least in the last few years observed attentively the policy of the C.P.A. It has reproduced the political and theoretical balderdash of Stalin and Thaelmann in an even more vulgar form. Its leading bureaucrats represent the very dregs of the Stalinist bureaucracy. They saw Fascism established in Austria in 1929 and were earnestly of the opinion, as early as the Fall of the same year, that an immediately revolutionary situation existed in Austria, that Workers' Councils should be formed and the struggle for power prepared.

Austrian Stalinists in Dregs of Bureaucratic Stupidity

In the Spring of 1930 even the ECCI has to prove to the Austrian leaders that this was pure idiocy. But the expulsions of those who had opposed the Central Committee were confirmed. Since then every government became more Fascist and the social democracy ever more social Fascist. The Stalinist bureaucrats, in the Central Committee, became ever more absolutist, ever more stupid and conscienceless. Whoever dared to think critically inside the party and to defend his opinion was unalterably stamped as a counter-revolutionary. They had no ideas of their own and restricted themselves to being Stalinist loud-speakers in Austria. Nowhere could he have found such willing worshippers as here. This they proved also in the months after the collapse of the German Communist Party. Thaelmann's shameful oratory was for them a revelation, doubt in which brought with it immediate expulsion from the party.

It became exceedingly futile in the weeks just passed, in which the situation became ever more critical, to look for the line of the C.P.A. That they could not trust in their lucky stars became clear even to the Vienna Stalin agents after the German catastrophe. But to defend democracy and to push the social democratic workers forward in this direction—that was Trotskyism and counter-revolutionary. The party swung round and about without a rudder and without an aim.

"C. P. A. Comes to Infamous End" The last possibility to obtain political significance and influence was cut off from the C.P.A. by the Comintern through the refusal to decide upon an international united front action against Fascism by direct negotiations between the Second and Third Internationals. Left to itself it had no other perspective before it except that of vegetation. Its infamous end, which it had to face defenselessly, will, it is to be hoped, cause a part of the old guard in the C.P.A., insofar as it has not yet scattered, to reflect more seriously. A perspective for illegality is entirely lacking insofar as the C.P.A. is concerned.

The relationship of forces has not changed at all with the proscription of the C.P.A. But the fact that the masses, who today still stand behind the S.P.A., remained apathetic in connection with it, is a dangerous omen for the future. Even in the next few days Dollfus will prove that against the Nazis, whom he meant to threaten with the dissolution of the C.P.A., he will not and cannot undertake anything decisive. For the forces of development go far beyond Dollfus's head and in the last analysis it will be shown that the blow against the C.P.A. was a blow against the entire working class—not against, but to the advantage of the Nazis. Germany has also proved this to us.

Stalinism was, indeed, hard hit by the proscription of the C.P.A. and will not be able to recover. Communist lives, it has long ago ceased to be carried by the Central Committee of the C.P.A., the latter only compromised it. The Left Opposition, Bolshevik-Leninists, will, in spite of the circumstances, assure the extension of the ideas of Marxism-Leninism and recreate the revolutionary vanguard in Austria together with all Communist and social democratic workers who are prepared to learn from the events and draw conclusions from them.

The End of Austro-Marxism

The Austrian social democracy was highly esteemed even before the war among its brother parties for its statesman-like spirit. "Our Deibel," a member of the German party leadership once said to Austrian friends, "our Deibel is only a cavalry colonel, but your (Victor) Adler is a Field Marshal."

After the war, socialist Austria became even more famous. And why not? If Stalin could undertake the building up of socialism in a single country, then the Austrian social democrats could tackle an even more complicated task, the task of building socialism in one little province, and even in a single city. They gave the new Austria "the most democratic constitution in the world" and created thereby the prerequisites for a socialization which was to be just as irresistible as it was peaceful.

And this achievement they brought about—as the highest triumph of socialist statesmanship—in union with the Christian Socialists. But the red Vienna built cooperative houses and children's baths, overhauled the whole educational system in a fashion hair-raising for the "blacks" (the clergy) and brought about other such bold changes. In short, the Austrian social democracy rose by its deeds and became the "Exemplary Party of the Second International," it became looked upon in the whole socialist world as if it were some miracle. Its prominent, after they had reconstituted the Second International, the bloc from Friedrich Adler to Noske, led on the floor at all the international congresses. The teaching which its thinkers had thought up, Austro-Marxism, victoriously surpassed the narrow bounds of the homeland.

A Review of the Past That Helps to Understand the Present

And the Austrian Social Democracy Under such circumstances it is self-evident that today, after the German social democracy has suffered a collapse unique in the history of the labor movement in its "struggle" against the swastika, all socialists turn their eyes to Austria, the exemplary little country of socialism, where Fascism, encouraged by Hitler's victory has just taken up the struggle for power. All socialists hearts and minds are stirred by the question: How will the Austrian social democracy stand up in this struggle? Will it not stand the test much better than the German party? Are not, looking aside from its striking qualities, the circumstances themselves auspicious for it?

The German working class was defeated because it was split, but the unity of the Austrian working class has never been seriously threatened by the Third International. The Communist Party of Austria has always been of negligible size, small, weak, unimportant. The Austrian social democracy is proportionately bigger than any other social democracy. In addition to that, Austrian Fascism is in itself split into two hostile camps, Heimwehr Fascism, with the aid of which Dollfus wants to cut the throat of democracy and smash the workers, does not enjoy the support of the National Socialists, but is hard pressed by competition from them. Really, in such a situation, should not the Austrian social democracy come off with flying colors?

The question is already answered. It cannot be doubted that the collapse of the German social democracy will not stand alone for long. The Austrian social democracy will soon stand just as naked by its side. It will lose the "war" against "Dollfus the little," has already lost it in fact. For it hasn't begun any and won't ever, under any circumstances, undertake one.

Its True Face

In order to understand this as the only possible, as the self-evident thing, what this Austrian social democracy, praised in all tones and admired in all languages, really is—not in its own imagination, not in the imagination of its brother parties, but in actuality.

Heinrich Luger once said: Liberalism has a great future behind it. That can be said equally as well for the Austrian socialism. Its beginnings were auspicious. Under the leadership of Victor Adler the Austrian working class waged battle against the decayed Hapsburg monarchy which aroused the admiration of the old Engels. But ultimately, the Austrian state remained the victor in this struggle.

Not in open battle. It crushed its opponents gradually, and incorporated the Austrian social democracy slowly within itself. Thus arose Austro-Marxism.

If we look upon its lists and not upon its mouth, Austro-Marxism proves to be nothing else but reformism. Like every other form of reformism, it is the adaptation of the labor movement to the bourgeois state, its subordination to the bourgeois state. What distinguishes it from the other forms of reformism, what allowed it to appear for a long time as something essentially different and unique was the circumstance that it assumed the task of adapting the labor movement to a state which was going to pieces. Therein lay its extraordinary strength, that is what gave it the possibility to achieve successes to which it appeared to have no right according to the relationship of forces. The Austria in which all the national parties leaped at each other like wild beasts and daily threatened the existence of the state, was in reality the classical country of the most guarded compromise. All these state conspirators who made the men of being so intransigent and irreconcilable were in reality mercenary, had the souls of petty shopkeepers and were members of the vulgar compromise. They held their fists under the nose of the government so as to be able later to stretch out their empty palms before it with all the greater success.

Collusion With Hapsburg

In this state, which could not live and could not die; whose existence was a lamentable drag; which had no friend if it did not pay him in cold cash—in this decadent world, the great Austro-Marxist idea was born: the renovation and entrenchment of the Hapsburg state in return for concessions to the working class. This program looked very new, very bold. It was like a creative thought in this world of fruitless pettiness. But in reality, this grandiose Austro-Marxist conception was only the translation of the common garden variety reformist program—common fodder for ruling rights—into the Austrian.

Since then Austro-Marxism continually made state policies, no longer class policies. Its ideas revolved only around parliament. It emulated all the petty arts of parliamentary revisionism from the bourgeois parties. The Marxist conception that the liberation of the working class must be the work of the workers themselves was smiled upon as old fashioned.

Austro-Marxist lore knows of no acting, struggling proletariat. According to it the worker does not make his history, he only experiences, suffers. And so, little by little, almost imperceptibly, the suffering working class becomes automatically triumphant, quite in line with the immutable laws of capitalism and capitalism becomes filled more and more with a socialist content. That was the secret force of Austro-Marxism. Public opinion is blessed with the most scholarly, with the keenest arguments for its inner thoughts and for its actions.

Versailles Revisionism Engenders New Social Chauvinist Wave

Bratislava, C. S. R.—For and against the revision of the border lines—that is the bone of contention in Europe. The line-up is not yet complete—the governments haven't got that far; neither economically, nor politically, nor strategically—the two fronts are still being prepared. The befuddled peoples of Europe have reached a new stage of the two chauvinistic fronts: Versailles and Anti-Versailles. The trench lines are becoming more and more discernable—Italy - Germany - Hungary against Versailles and for Revision. France and the small Entente against Revision and for Versailles.

The line-up of the two fronts signifies—war preparations. The Four Power Pact stands only in appearance in contradiction to this fact. It is merely an episode, a temporary agreement, a postponement so to speak, in the meantime, the working class and the Soviet Union is to be got rid of. Through the assumption of power by Hitler the Revision Front was enormously strengthened. Therefore also, the commotion in Hungary. The reactionary masters of Hungary are not yet agreed in their opinions—as to who could best carry out the Revision policy.

The Legationists count mostly upon the monarchist Restoration. The Hungarian Nazis expect most of a Revision under the protection of Hitler. And the Goemboes wing considers itself as the most appropriate executive. But all are agreed to bring back the past, to further the chauvinism against Versailles. These are war preparations.

Workers Against All Capitalist Wars

How does the Czechoslovak chapter of the other front look? The same sabre-rattling, but against Revision and for Versailles. The bourgeois government of the Czechoslovak Republic is also carrying out an ideological mobilization. There is the futile talk about "Defense"—that is only diplomacy. The truth is that Hungary as well as the C.S.R. are ruled by profit-hungry capitalists who are chasing after markets. Therefore the friction, the inevitable wars in the capitalist system, in the next war of the capitalists, just as hitherto, there will be no "defenders" among the bourgeois governments. It is not decisive who begins the war—for or against Revision—for every war is an aggressive war against the working classes of both the belligerent capitalist countries. If there is any one who has to defend himself, then that is the working class, the international working class.

In this light, we must regard the demonstrations which the Czech bourgeoisie held in Bratislava and Kaschau on May 27th. The Slovak League marched in full force against revision. For the demonstration there were mobilized: the Sokol, the Legionnaires, the social democrats and the representatives of Hunania, Jugoslavia and Poland. What the workers organizations do not yet understand, or cannot understand, the bourgeoisie understands admirably well: One speaker at the demonstration said, "We may belong to different parties, there may be differences between Czechs and Slovaks, but in the question of Revision we stand united."

It is this little thing that the "labor leaders" did not understand in the struggle against Fascism. Therein lies the deep tragedy of the German reformist and Communist parties.

And this lack of understanding does not restrict itself to Germany. A leading member of the social democratic party of the C.S.R., Dr. Markovic, was one of the main speakers at the demonstration. He spoke under the nationalist banner and in line with the heated atmosphere of chauvinism.

Social Democrats Carries Patriotic Banner

What does a social democratic leader seek at such a chauvinistic affair? The official slogan of the social democracy—is it not "War against War"? It is supposed to be not the Versailles front against the Anti-Versailles front, but the international front of the working class against the capitalists on both fronts, is it not? Class war against the patriotic war of the capitalists, is it not? But did Markovic say that? No, he did not. He said something entirely different: "If we are attacked, we will know how to defend ourselves," namely, against Revision. "This is a patriotic capitulation before capitalism, for as long as the latter will exist the working class cannot have any interest in 'attack' or 'defense'."

The working class is neither for nor against Revision. It stands on the international front. This third front the social democratic leaders have entirely forgotten. That is their betrayal. That is the logical continuation from the year 1914. Chauvinism bears its fruit remarkably quickly: the fanatical youth demonstration before the Hungarian consulate, shattered the windows in the Jewish quarter and soon the chauvinistic-Fascist slogans were to be heard: "Kick out the Hungarian Jews"—that surely did not bring any joy even to Dr. Markovic.

Neither Revision nor anti-Revision can be considered as a solution. Both can bring only imperialism. Only revolution can save us from imperialism—war—that means overthrow of the profit-greedy imperialists on both sides of the Danube. Then there will be no chase after commodity markets, no tariff walls, no boundary lines. The peaceful cohabitation of the peoples of Europe can be guaranteed only by the socialist, planned economy.

No Balkanization of Europe, no European dream, no Revision or Counter-Revision—but struggle for the Soviet United States of Europe.

and file miners, not in words, but in deeds. This applies with particular emphasis to the P.M.A., as it does generally to all unions. Conversely, a lack of inner-democracy, a rule of bureaucrats, is an indication of the need of this same bureaucracy to enforce a policy of betrayal which finds resentment apace in the rank and file.

In 1932, the struggles of the Illinois miners resulted in the organization of the Progressive Miners of America. The apparently immediate reason for this development lay in the struggle of the miners for democracy, for a rank and file union. Behind this struggle for democracy (which at that moment rose to its highest pitch through the big steal of the miners ballots on the wage cut) lay the real issue. It was a fight against the policies of betrayal of the Lewis machine, which endeavored to force a wage-cut upon the coal miners.

At its inception, the P.M.A. not only promised democracy in the union, the rights of the rank and file, the rights of minority opinion, inviting also those expelled by Lewis for their militancy, but at the same time sounded a militant tone in its program of struggle for the interests of the miners as against those of the operators. Precisely in the latter sense did the union give much hope for its future. The union pledged itself to spread nationally, to wage just a struggle in the interests of the miners as Lewis had refused and prevented. Any other course would have established no distinction between the two unions. The distinction did exist, however, in that the new union promised to fulfill the desires of the miners and to wage struggle in their behalf.

"Stabilization" of the P.M.A.

Since that time much water has flowed under the bridge. The new union stabilized itself momentarily through the gain of local contracts throughout the state. It was able to make these gains only through a heroic struggle in which the union gave up many martyrs. With this struggle the present solidification of the union would have been impossible. During the period of conflict, when the union was earning the name of the Progressive Miners of America, all forces stood united at least on one question—the maintenance and stabilization of the organization. Everyone recognized that this was impossible without waging a fierce struggle for recognition and against the Lewis Union, which has within its ranks a minority of the miners, and the greatest number of these kept in the UMWA through coercion. It was this stage in the development of the union that pointed to its great future.

Recent months witness a recession in this policy of the P.M.A. The campaign of red baiting testified that something else is brewing. This can be described as a settling process. The early cry of building a national union has now become less sharp and the leadership wants to be respectable as well as respected. It is interested in the "legal" aspects of their existence. It wants peace in the Illinois coal fields and for this it even enters into false negotiations with the Lewis union. It promised two statements to Lewis: one calling for a referendum of the coal miners to ascertain their support of the two unions, the result of this vote deciding which union shall remain in Illinois (this correct proposal was naturally unacceptable to the Lewis machine); the other: that the unions function where they are a majority (a division of territory) declaring that they recognize the UMWA as an organization existing in the interests of the miners, i.e., a miners' organization.

A Glaring Error

This latter statement reveals glaring errors which can react only against the P.M.A. In those areas where the P.M.A. is in the majority, it is so because the miners are compelled to remain in the union by force. In recognizing that the UMWA is a union existing in the interests of the coal miners, an actual betrayal of the interests of the P.M.A. is committed. For what reason, then, one may ask, should the P.M.A. exist? Its wage-scale is the same. If the Lewis union is an organization existing in the interests of the coal miners, then why the organization of a new union? This second statement was a surrender to the Lewis interests, even though it was presented as a concession, a compromise. Such a compromise can only cut the heart out of the new movement. Alongside with this gradually milder tone of the union, its attempts to be a "respectable" organization, to negotiate with Lewis, to put matters in the hands of the "impartial" Governor Horner, comes this red baiting campaign and the attempts to expel a number of Left wing elements from the P.M.A. One of the chief accomplishments of the P.M.A. was its invitation to all expelled UMWA militants, to join the P.M.A. But when after a few months of existence, it in turn, begins an expulsion campaign against these very persons, something is wrong in the union.

There exists a great contradiction in the P.M.A. The contradiction exists between the rank and file and the leadership. The rank and file is militant. It is serious. It is not carried on its virtuous struggle for nothing. It sought to build an organization that would recoil at the mere mention of Lewisism. The leadership, however, which rose during the early struggles, is trying to check this militancy, to become respectable, to insure the existence of the union for at least two years through the contracts signed and is closely treading on false grounds. The leadership is adopting a course that is bringing it closer to class-collaboration. The miners on the contrary, want to continue the splendid struggle they began.

There is a great dissatisfaction in the ranks of the union against this policy of the leadership, which can have only one effect: that of weakening the new union and leading it to collapse. The weathervane, the drive made against the militants in the union and the raising of the red scare. We pointed out above, that for Lewis the destruction of the democracy in the union, the task of the Left wing elements in the P.M.A. Without an organization of its forces, it will be blown to smithereens, and they will see the organization that they brought into existence, dwindle to nothing through the false policies of its leadership and through the heavy assault of all the forces of reaction in the Illinois coal fields who look with glee upon this campaign against the militants in the union.

talism. Within the framework of the capitalist mode of production these contradictions cannot be solved.

The seizure of power of Fascism in Germany has intensified the contradiction of world capitalism and has strengthened reaction throughout the world. The defeat of the German working class is a defeat of the whole world working class. The Industrial Control Bill, as a dictatorial measure over the working class, is part of this reaction and the struggle between the imperialist powers to gain a point of advantage for the struggle for the redistribution of the earth.

Subsidy to Decayed System

The government partnership, thru the emergency law and the Industrial Control Bill, will result in government subsidy to the decayed industries of American capitalism, such as coal and railroads, etc. It is an attempt to uphold a tottering and decayed structure by shifting the burden upon the working class and by eliminating small exploiters. Trusts were opposed in the past but Carrels will now be organized by the government.

The big capitalists intend to eliminate the weak and small concerns in all industries as well as to establish a monopoly price of a group of favored capitalists. The Industrial Control Bill is an attempt to "organize" capitalist competition on a higher plane. It is an attempt to eliminate competition, but instead will lead to a greater anarchy of capitalist production. It will intensify all of the basic contradictions of American and world capitalism. The Industrial Control Bill is an attempt to hold up the failing rate of profit by the reorganization of industries and by beating down of the workers standards to a new low level.

The agrarian crisis has prevented the farmers from paying the debts owed to the bankers. The Roosevelt measures to help the farmers is to help the farmers pay the bankers what they owe. This agrarian measure and the Banking Law, which gives the government unlimited power of inflation, were Hugo Oehler.

necessary steps and parts of the big capitalists' plan that the Industrial Control Bill fits into.

The Industrial Control Bill and its arbitration scheme for labor and capital is an attempt to set up an elaborate class collaboration plan to head off the developing class struggle. It will establish dictatorial power over the American working class. The bill with a government inflation policy will establish a high MONEY wage but a VERY LOW REAL WAGE for the American workers.

It is an attempt to side-step the role and social insurance and in its place, give the equivalent of the role, in the form of a money wage, through public works, which is nothing more nor less than a cloak for forced labor in exchange for relief.

The Europeanization of the American working class is at hand and with it goes the intensification of the class struggle. The Industrial Control Bill is an attempt to hold in check the rising tide of class struggle, and to place the workers in the harness of class collaboration.

Our trade union movement is to be harnessed to the capitalists and their state. Agents of the capitalists, the Lewises and Greens, will be selected to control the labor movement. A strike against the exploiters of labor will be a strike against the government. The struggle of the workers for our class interests will be outlawed.

The June 11, 1933 Gillespie Trade Union Conference, called by the Progressive Trade Union Educational Committee, goes on record as opposed to the Industrial Control Bill and its sugar coated, class collaboration, anti-working class provisions.

The Conference goes on record favoring the calling of a national united front conference of all labor organizations in the United States, to be held in Chicago in the future, to rally the American working class to fight the capitalist offensive, to map out a program of action to protect the workers interests and to rouse our class to action.

The Conference gives the incoming national committee power to act for this united action, for joint action with all working class organizations. (Introduced by delegate, Hugo Oehler.

Danger Signals at London Meet

Behind the Scenes
The United States in the meantime has again risked a crisis in the conference by insisting that the question of stabilizing currency be postponed until American prices had risen to a "satisfactory" level. This meant that only "economic" questions outside of currency could be taken up for a period of weeks or more likely, months. The French threatened to split away, but have remained in. Under American pressure, the British have come out in favor of higher prices and cheap, plentiful credit. America meanwhile keeps the key to monetary policy—to inflate or not to inflate, how and how much to inflate—in its own hands.

Talk and Action—a la American

In the currency committee itself it has stood for a policy of lowering the legal minimum gold reserves, using 20 percent silver to 80 percent gold in such reserves, and limiting the use of gold to international settlements and central banking reserves—in other words, making permanent and international the present situation in the United States whereby a bank is not obliged to pay out gold against paper. The French with their inflated gold standard satellites are fighting this proposal tooth and nail, as it will remove one of their strongest pieces from the chess board—their powerful gold reserve position.

In the economic committee, the American contribution so far has been a proposal for a 10 percent tariff reduction all around—basically withdrawn by the American delegation itself and labelled as simply a "suggestion by the experts." This showed the emphasis of the phrases of the American delegate Litvinoff in his opening speech on the de-bility of lowering tariffs and on the harm done by economic nationalism.

In fact, the whole Roosevelt policy, based on the manipulation through government agencies of American economy on strictly national lines, is in sharp contradiction to the effort to obtain international agreement on currency, tariffs and trade, as was implied in a speech by the president of the world bank, himself an American.

The battle behind the scenes continues, meanwhile, in the face of the palaver about international agreements on tariffs. France passed a law raising customs duties on American products 15 per cent before the conference opened, and a few days ago, before echoes from the speeches before the economic committee had died down, passed another bill raising the tariff on about a hundred products, mostly of German and American origin.

Meanwhile the whole proceedings are being held up while the head of Roosevelt's "brain trust," Moley, arrives—in other words, until America places its fist on the agenda sheet.

Behind the scenes also was the settlement of the question of June 15 payments on the war debts—France paying nothing, England and Italy making small "token" payments, the latter received with diplomatic irony as the "disappointment" which it might cause in certain circles because of its small amount.

Litvinoff at London

From the standpoint of the revolutionary workers, the outstanding development of the London economic conference so far has been Litvinoff's speech, which throws a glaring light on the extent to which the Menshevik degeneration of the Soviet regime has progressed. In the effort to adapt himself as closely as possible to the bourgeois diplomats by whom he was surrounded, the Soviet delegate deliberately blurred the lines between Soviet and bourgeois policy, did not refer once to the interests of the working class, speaking as one diplomat to other diplomats, and tangled himself in hopeless contradictions while making the most impermissible concessions to the bourgeoisie.

Standing on the basis of "socialism in one country," he, according to the Associated Press report, "largely recognized the peaceful coexistence of the two systems—capitalism and socialism." Even for an American Stalinist editor, this was too much to swallow, so the Daily Worker kept this sentence out of its report. The "peaceful coexistence of capitalism and socialism" means the abandonment of the world revolution, nothing less—and not only as an immediate but as a long-term perspective, and to shove it off into the distant future, out of the reach of "practical" politics. Was he trying to fool the diplomats, while keeping his own mental reservations? Or is he fooling the working class instead?

His conception of non-aggression goes far beyond the tariff truce initiated by the United States, he said. "Speaking of a truce acknowledges the existence of a state of war. An armistice means cessation of all fighting, not merely abstention from the beginning of fresh battles. The same should be true of economic warfare."

In other words, he claims to be even more of an economic pacifist than Roosevelt, by the degree that an "armistice" is more peaceful than a "truce." He is therefore in favor of removing the restrictions on international trade, just like his bourgeois colleagues.

A Few Pointed Questions

We must ask a serious question. Is the Soviet monopoly of foreign trade a hindrance to the international movement of goods or is it not? Does Litvinoff (comrade Litvinoff) propose to liquidate the Soviet monopoly of foreign trade, one of the pillars of the dictatorship of the proletariat, as Stalin proposed in 1923, or does he propose to keep it? If he proposes to keep it, why does he not say so? Is it because that would compel him to point out that after all, there is a difference between the Soviet State and bourgeois states? And would not this raise a question in the minds of the conference about the "peaceful coexistence of capitalism and socialism?"

The part of his speech which interested the conference most was his plan for "lengthened credits and normal conditions for Soviet exports," with an offer to buy a billion dollars' worth of additional commodities under these conditions. To raise the demand for "lengthened credits for the Soviet Union" is counter-revolutionary Trotskyism when addressed to the working class, and constitutes grounds for expulsion, as in the case of J. L. Murphy of the British C. P.; but it is perfectly all right as long as it is addressed to the bourgeoisie only.

But what is the purpose of these long-term credits? To relieve a critical situation in the U. S. S. R.? No—no such situation exists, according to the Foreign Commissar. On the contrary, prosperity prevails throughout the Soviet Union and it has not been touched by the world crisis (so that there is a difference after all between capitalism and socialism). The real reason for Litvinoff's proposal, in his own words, as quoted by the New York Times, is: "We merely wish to set this conference along the right which, in our opinion, is most likely to lead to effective results in alleviating the crisis." Clearly the crisis which is to be alleviated is the crisis of capitalism.

When the German social democracy at its Leipzig conference in 1930 proposed itself to the bourgeoisie as the "doctors of sick capitalism," Communists answered correctly that what capitalism needs is not a doctor but an undertaker. Which role is Litvinoff proposing for the Soviet Union?

The Left Opposition has for years been advocating long-term credits to the Soviet Union, and economic collaboration between the Soviet Union and advanced capitalist countries—but always on a revolutionary basis, always pointing out the value of these demands in mobilizing the masses. What Litvinoff says today as the Stalinist line was rejected a year and a half ago by Trotsky as—Stalinist slanders against the Left Opposition!

In What Next?, page 175, we read, "During the first stage of the crisis—more than two years ago—we posed this question (Soviet-German collaboration, B. J. F.) in print. And the Stalinists immediately set up a hue and cry that we believe in the peaceful coexistence of socialism and capitalism, that we want to save capitalism, etc." This was written by comrade Trotsky early in 1932.

However, if Litvinoff really presented the line which we have a right to expect from a Communist appearing in negotiations before bourgeois diplomats, if he talked to them as Trotsky talked to Kuchemann at Brest-Litovsk, or Chicherin to Lloyd George, or Rakovsky to the French concessionaires, and if his correct revolutionary line has been perverted by the bourgeois press, then the Stalinists owe it to the revolutionary movement to denounce the reports given by the Associated Press and the New York Times as distortions and forgeries, and to present an authentic and full report of Litvinoff's speech at the London Conference.

Hugenberg's "Feeler"

Two days after Litvinoff spoke, Hugenberg made an open demand for support for Germany in regaining its African colonies and "opening up territories for settlement and construction of great works of peace." Undoubtedly it is correct to see in this a declaration of intention to seize and exploit the Soviet Union.

Hitler, as comrade Trotsky points out, is playing for the gradual arming of Germany after the failure of disarmament and in the name of the defense of Europe against Bolshevism, against the desire of the German Nationalists for quick "results." He at once repudiated Hugenberg's statement as being purely personal, forced him to return to Berlin, and emphasized his repudiation by forcing the dissolution of the Nationalist "Battle Ring" and the integration of the Stahlhelm into the Nazi movement.

Pravda reacted to the Hugenberg statement with "the first Soviet editorial in denunciation of Hitler's Germany," as the New York Times correspondent remarks. What a degeneration—the smashing of the German proletariat brought forward not a single word of protest from the Soviet Union; only when its elementary, "national" interests were involved did it raise its voice! The editorial in Pravda said, "Hitlerism is being forced by economic and financial difficulties to adopt a policy of military adventure by which Germany hopes to redress her own affairs and re-establish her shattered prestige."

This is precisely what comrade Trotsky said—a year before Hitler took power, in the April 1932 issue of the American liberal magazine, the Forum. The difference is that the Left Opposition foresaw, while the Stalinists ran after the tail-end of events; that we distinguished between the policies of the Nationalists and those of Hitler, and above all, proposed a policy of initiative and preparation for action instead of the "khvoistism," passivity and empty threats of the Stalinists.

In view of the growing danger of war graphically illustrated both by the actions and the failures of the London economic conference, it is necessary to warn the revolutionary workers of the world again, and with all the emphasis in our power, against the dangers which result from the spineless, compromising, capitulationist policies of the Stalinist leadership in the Soviet Union and the Comintern. This leadership, forced by the iron logic of facts to follow out to the bitter practical consequences the fundamentally false and petty-bourgeois theory of "socialism in one country," has lost faith in its own working class and in the world proletariat. It supports itself on the bureaucracy at home, and on diplomacy and negotiations with the bourgeoisie, reactionary, liberal and radical according to circumstances, abroad. Confronted with the ravages of an internal crisis, the dangers of intervention from Hitler and the threat of Japan, with the ominous lack of recognition from the United States, its only answer has been to retreat.

The possibility of a gigantic catastrophe lies before the workers' movement of the world unless its forces are reassembled under the leadership of the Communist International and rearmed with a Marxist policy. As the immediate steps to this end we call upon the workers to demand the reinstatement of the International Left Opposition, within the Communist International, and the immediate convocation of the long-overdue Seventh Congress of the C. I.

—B. J. FIELD.

Workers Must Organize and Fight Against State Capitalist Measures

attack of the industrialists in complying with the Industrial Control Bill. The relation to labor will first be kept in the status quo where ever possible. Where necessary, the industrialists will fulfill the requirements of the law, which, at the most, call for a "safe-and-sound" class collaboration scheme.

The Chicago Tribune, reporting the steel men's conference, says, "The Youngstown steel companies have been forming 'employees councils.' In none of these movements does the word 'union' appear." The industrialists, it is said, are trying to steal a march on the American Federation of Labor, which through President Green recently announced the start of a nation-wide drive to minimize the operators'.

How the Coal Operators Take It

The soft coal operators have fought any attempt or suggestion to change the status quo. In Illinois they will deal with the unions but in the rest of the fields they will deal with the unorganized. The Chicago Tribune quotes a coal operator as follows: "Our job is going to be one of the most difficult. It is comparatively easy for the makers of shoes to get together and add a dollar to the price of shoes. There is no substitute for shoes. But how can you add an arbitrary dollar to the price of a ton of coal. A few million building owners get out a pencil and start figuring how much they can save by using oil, or gas, or electricity." The industrialist conferences are secret but any one who has an ounce of brains can easily see that their secret is, how they can add another dollar on a pair of shoes or a ton of coal. If prices go up thirty percent, the kind hearted capitalists and their government will bent the drums and announce a five or ten percent raise. And the capitalists will pocket the twenty percent difference....

The Industrial Control Bill is a capitalist reform. They drove this bill through without the pressure of the working class, and yet the four of the 17 million unemployed was one of the whips that drove them to make this law. If there had been a working class pressure, under the leadership of social reformers who sit on top to hold in check this pressure, the bill would have been to a far greater degree sugar coated with phrases about labor and labor rights.

The difference between reforms and "social" reforms is the difference between the absence of working class pressure altogether and working class pressure misdirected by the misleaders and agents of the capitalists in our ranks. Without the pressure of the working class, the Industrial Control Bill, the capitalists can drive through their form of State capitalism without the service of the social reformers to keep the restless working class in check.

How the Labor "Leaders" React

The labor leaders are attempting to jump on the band wagon and help the capitalists put over their Industrial Control Law—of course, with paid jobs, the same as in the war period. The Right wing of the Progressive Miners are competing with Lewis for the job of shackling the miners to the new slavery. Percy took a special trip to Washington for this purpose. The Communists, the only ones capable of pointing out the meaning of the Industrial Control Bill, and of rallying the class to action against the capitalist offensive are bound hand and foot and gagged by the Stalinist bureaucracy, who do not measure up to the task. (See the article on the Gillespie Conference, elsewhere in this issue).

The "planned economy" of the

Exclude L.O. at Anti-Fascist Meet

caused the Comintern bureaucracy to work so diligently to keep the delegates of the International Left Opposition away from its halls.

It feared the concrete proposals of the Left Opposition for the organization of the European Anti-Fascist front from organization, beginning with the problem of Austria and proceeding into a wider plane. For the Stalinist bureaucracy is afraid of its own shadow. It has lost all actual faith in working class action. It is interested only in maintaining its own dwindling and undermined prestige. And for that purpose the united front masquerade a la Barbusse is sufficient for it.

But the last word has not yet been said. The Left Opposition will not allow the Stalinist organizers of defeat to cover up their already overblown crimes with new crimes. The Left Opposition will continue to expose mercilessly the shameful maneuver at Paris and its Stalinist initiators. It will work tirelessly to make the truth known to the workers of the world and to organize genuine, effective united front action that meets the needs of the real situation. —S. G.

As we go to press, we have at hand a dispatch from Paris, confirming the scandalous exclusion of the International Left Opposition and rendering a full account of the proceedings. The article will be published in the next issue of The Militant.—Ed.

capitalists will make the future of the workers under the "new deal" worse than the past. The "Century of Progress" witnessed the further centralization and concentration of wealth and capital in the hands of fewer and fewer capitalists while the vast majority have been driven to deeper levels of misery and degradation.

The working class battle against the capitalist offensive organized by the Industrial Control Bill will have to be fought in the sphere of unemployment relief, the struggle for wages, hours, and the unionization of the workers into class struggle unions. To do this, the working class must be told what the "planned economy" means. The Communists must present a Marxist analysis, organize the class, especially to head off the action of the Greens, Wells and Lewises, who desire to utilize the State capitalist measures for their class collaboration schemes.

The Workers' Answer: Class Struggle Organization

It is not difficult to understand that a law which gives the capitalist and workers "equality" on paper means nothing in reality, except giving the strongest organized force the right to do what it pleases. In this case the capitalists are well organized and entrenched. In addition it is they who have made the laws of the "game" which we must play. Our lack of pressure, due to the lack of any worthwhile, powerful, organized industrial union as well as to a blunderbuss leadership within the Communist ranks (that of the Stalinists) gives the capitalists the overwhelming odds in deciding the whole question.

There is only one way the working class can answer the capitalists and their Industrial Control Laws: The organization of powerful industrial unions of class struggle, capable of bringing working class pressure upon the capitalist system. Upon such a foundation, the American working class can build a movement that will become powerful enough to abolish capitalism.

We must oppose the Industrial Control Law; present a correct analysis of the Industrial Control Law; agitate and propagate to rally the class; organize a powerful Left wing in the A. F. L.; unite all the Left wing forces nationally as the T. U. L., the P. T. U. C., the C. I. A., etc. for common action; amalgamate the craft unions, such as the 21 railroad union, etc.

We must answer the capitalist drive with a powerful united front drive of the workers against the capitalist offensive.

Hitler Clashes with Hugenberg

His remarks Minor snarled "get away from here, your time is up."

Then Minor and following him, Alexander started harranguing those present in a fashion to make a Holy Roller preacher blush with envy. No answers to our arguments. No comradely discussion. Instead—vituperation, slander and hysteria. Minor almost outside himself in trying to create a lynch spirit in the audience. But Minor's demagoguery and vituperation was answered subtly by the workers present. When the appeal came for workers in the audience to join the party—not a single worker responded. The chairman hastily adjourned the meeting. —M. G.

August 4, 1914 and May 17, 1933

a possibility that in time to come not even a penny would be offered for their most obliging "toleration" was inconceivable. And not only the social democratic apparatus, but also the bureaucracy of the Stalinist faction, dominating the Comintern, arrived at the same conclusion:

"Even in the case the Nazis are taken into the government there will be no question of the bourgeoisie not desiring to get along without the cooperation of the social democracy in the solidification of the fascist dictatorship." —Die International, January 1932.)

The thought rings very absurd today. The fact remains, however, that the Stalinist bureaucracy lent support to the illusions and wish-thinking of the sister social democratic bureaucracy. And all of this could not fail but have an influence on a great section of the social democratic workers. The unexpected became a fact: exactly a year after the famous Stalinist prophecy of January 1932, Hitler actually repudiated the "cooperation" of the social democracy in the carrying out of the fascist dictatorship.

"Germany Is Not Italy"

A damnable and blighting catch phrase ran through the ranks of the German proletariat, wandering through all the organizations of the working class. They consoled each other with it. It was thought up and set in circulation by frightened, helpless bureaucrats, at their wits' end. "Germany is not Italy," "Germany is not Italy,"—in pompous and heroic speeches and innumerable newspaper articles, the incantation was thrown again and again at the masses. "Germany is not Italy." This mystical rhetoric, not good enough to hypnotize rabbits, was considered sufficiently potent to put to sleep the best organized working class of the capitalist world. "Germany is not Italy," blabbered the degenerate social democratic bureaucrats on the windows of their offices. "Germany is not Italy" echoed in the high places of the Stalinist Comintern, in the Communist Party of Germany, in all other sections of the C. I.

The Twelfth Plenum has... shown that there is not—and there cannot be—such a thing as a so-called "classical" Fascism, and that all theories derived from the history of Italian Fascism, regarding the necessity of first striking down the working class, are bloodless abstractions. (Communist International, January 10, 1933, page 19.)

Didn't the Stalinists give unaltered heuchman's service to the Social Democracy in that way? Did that not amount to actually facilitating Hitler's accession to power? The Left Opposition raised its voice in warning:

"The coming of the German Nazis to power would mean, first of all, the destruction of the power of the German proletariat, the annihilation of its organizations, the eradication of its belief in itself and in its future. In accordance with the greater maturity and acuteness of the social contradictions prevalent in Germany, the bolshewk work of the Italian Fascism will probably appear as a pale, almost immune, experiment, in comparison with the work of the German National Socialists." (Trotsky, Shall Fascism Really Be Victorious?, Nov. 1931.)

The bureaucrats, left without any plausible arguments, maligned and persecuted and attempted to hide their panicky helplessness behind the phrase: "Germany is not Italy." This they still chanted when the boots of the Nazi storm troopers were already trampling in the ground the most active proletarian forces of Germany. And even today the bureaucracy, which events have already proved bankrupt, cannot separate itself from the slogan grown dear to its heart. They hope, and say so, that the economic crisis will by itself finish off Hitler.

Socialist Hopes For Mercy Shattered

Hitler came to power, and there was not even the slightest talk regarding cooperation with the Social Democrats. All the secret hopes of the treacherous bureaucracy vanished. The theories, derived therefrom, also vanished. The first blow of Fascism was meant for the revolutionary proletariat, as embodied in C. P. G. But the accusation leveled against the S. P. G. on the occasion of the Reichstag fire already suggested that the Socialists would be the next victims. The Welles and Breitscheldts tried to win a reprieve. They moved away from the Marxism that they never belonged to. They "tolerated" the bloody deeds perpetrated by the Fascists on the social democratic workers and the members of the free trade unions. Weis, too, protested (though he knew better) against the so-called exaggerations of German excesses abroad. He even went so far as to resign his post in the administrative circle of the Second International. True as it was absurd, —the S. P. G. hoped for mercy; it hoped to be granted a sort of role as his Nazi Majesty's most obedient opposition. But Fascism, which had thrived on social democratic toleration, never thought of tolerating the S. P. G. in its turn.

The First of May came. Zeor-giebel, who on his way was quite ready to murder 35 workers, was kicked out to the devil, and Hitler arranged the miserable comedy of the "National Holiday." Hardly had Leipzig returned from marching behind the Swastika banner when he was called back to be incarcerated in the famous "sick-house." The free trade unions became Fascist. A week later, the S. P. G., too, was done away with.

"Fascism, nourished by the Social Democracy, will be obliged to break the head of the Social Democracy in order to arrive at power." (Trotsky, November 1929.)

Where were now the speculations of the social democratic bureaucracy? Where were the fancy theories of Stalinism?

The odor of the decay of the beleaguered social democracy contaminated the air. The vote for Hitler at the recent "great statement on foreign affairs" was—temporarily—the last link in the chain of treason. It was the consequence and crowning of the high 20 year old policy of coalition and toleration. This crime threatened to pull down the entire Second International.

The pure instinct of self-preservation has led the leading spirits of the Second International to move away from the latest acts in Germany. But they are moving away only from one section of the social democratic fraction. They are not moving away from the policy, the natural result of which was the vote for Hitler.

On May 18, 1933, the bureau of the Labor and Socialist International assembled in Paris under the chairmanship of Vandervelde for a "thorough consideration of the most recent events in Germany". It drafted the following resolution to be presented in the Reichstag:

"The Labor-Socialist International is convinced that the consent of a number of the social democratic deputies of the German Reichstag to a resolution expressing unreserved solidarity with the recent declaration of the German government, does not express the true convictions of the German working class. It declares that the support of that declaration contradicts the principles of the Labor-Socialist International...."

In a late issue of the Vienna Arbeiter Zeitung, Oda Oldberg "examines" editorially the last Reichstag vote of the German social democracy and asks the following questions:

"Do these people really believe that the German workers will understand this attitude, that they will be able to make out this pattern of lies and facts in which formal justice and cunning injustice are so cleverly intertwined? The workers will not understand; the sacrifice has been in vain. The workers will consider themselves betrayed.... With Hitler no pact should have ever been attempted." This is actually said: "they will consider themselves betrayed." Here is the true face of the Second International. They—the workers—will only "consider" themselves betrayed. Haven't they been betrayed? Oldberg and the Arbeiter Zeitung are silent on this count.

Leon Blum, shedding some light on the history of the Reichstag vote, declares:

"The question of participation of the social democratic delegates in the last session of the Reichstag was the theme of the conference of the newly elected party presidium. This conference expressed itself unanimously against the participation of the social democratic delegates in the Reichstag vote. There was for the social democratic delegates only one attitude possible—and that dictated by the conscience of the Socialists International—to declare the Hitler comedy null and void by their absence,—to smash the Reichstag comedy as the ironic and miserable parody that the German workers refuse to participate in....

"I do not care whether these delegates have placed themselves outside of the German social democratic party, but I do declare that by their attitude they have broken the last faith with the spirit and solidarity of the International of Socialism."

That sounds radical, but it is only Leon Blum, who throws out his chest now and then and speaks of the "International of Socialism."

Le Peuple, the central organ of the Belgian Social Democracy goes a step further:

"Finally there appeared at the Reichstag session a greatly reduced part of the social democratic fraction.... and completed the sad capitulation before Hitler's terror and demagoguery."

"Completed" the capitulation, says Le Peuple. "Completed", however, was what had already long before been begun. It was—and is—the line of the entire Second International which the Reichstag seapagoes "completed" with such consistency on May 17, 1933.

In the meanwhile, Stampoer went abroad, and there appeared in the social democratic press an article of his entitled "Do Not Strike Them!" Not even he dares to defend the shameful treachery of the last remnant of the once proud social democratic Reichstag fraction. He tries to explain by alluding to such influences as the "compulsion of conscience," the fear of physical terms, "the consciousness of responsibility to the workers" who were thus to be protected against further "terrorism." How in the role of the social democracy shows itself in complete clarity. It did its heuchman's service against the working class. It is not even taken aback by the most gruesome crimes. And then it calls all of that "service to the people". This service was Hitler's most fertile ground.

IV.

"The workers will consider themselves betrayed", writes Oldberg. They have been betrayed. Betrayed for decades, and not merely by the last Reichstag vote, which was merely the crowning of the betrayal.

The S. P. G. Is Dead

The S. P. G. is no more. Their past "work" has had the good effect of making itself superfluous. The S. P. G. has finished its work. Its members are leaderless. For the degenerated bureaucracy shrinks from illegal work, being, indeed, completely unsuited for it. Members and party functionaries who want to do such work are frowned on. The bureaucrats die, as they have lived, as cynical scoundrels. An S. P. G. leader in Leipzig, from whom the party members demanded the issue of information material in regards to the crisis, replied to them: "Clever, aren't you? But we don't care to go to jail. If you want to publish something attend to it yourselves."

Only very rarely can a more courageous word be heard. In Bremen, the S. P. G. exhorted: "Remain true to the idea of Socialism." Too late for the leaders to think of loyalty to Socialism. At any rate, it is a misque case, which, however, can restore nothing and hold back nothing. The rank and file of the former S. P. G. are without leaders. A strong wave of depression and a wave of ruckery will not fail to sweep the masses. The best elements, however, will look for new ways. To stand by them is our task. We are sure that the greater section of the social democratic workers will help in the creation of the new Communist party. In this task the Left Opposition will stand in the front line.

Workers Slave for Pennies in Penna. Sweat Shops

Paul Comly French, writing in the Nation of May 31, gives an at most unbelievable account of conditions in factories in Pennsylvania: hours of labor of from 55 to 90 a week; wages as low as 3 cents an hour; girls in their early teens forced into sexual relations with their bosses, superintendents and foremen to keep their jobs. There is no limit to which capitalist exploiters will not drive their starved and stunted child slaves.

In the earlier days of capitalism, under the banner of "freedom and equality," children were chained to machines so that orderly production would continue. In 1893, as capitalism welters in its decaying stage, under the banner of "rugged individualism" and the "New Deal," girls just emerging from childhood, who are working 55 hours a week for 3 cents an hour, are dragged to New York at night by their masters to give up their half starved bodies to prospective buyers of the shirts their sweated labor created.

At the session of the Pinchot investigation committee on sweat shops, the following revealing testimony, taken from the Nation article, was made by the bourgeois of the borough of Northampton, where a child-labor mill is located:

"If I had my way," he told the Governor's commission, "I'd give no food orders to unemployed persons who urged factory workers to strike." And his wife who handles unemployment relief in Northampton, has even more amazing ideas: "I don't believe the strikers should be entitled to any unemployment relief," she testified before the commission, "because they don't have souls."

"In Gottlieb's Sewing Factory at York the usual wage is $3 or $4 a week; girls in Bernstein's factory at York reported a payment of $2.00 for two weeks' work—an average of three cents an hour. At the York Suit Co. button sewers receive from $3 to $4 a week for fifty hours; York tobacco workers said they received $2.50 for a week's work totaling fifty hours, while workers in a second cigar factory in this rich Lancaster Co. agricultural section said their wages averaged $1.50 for fifty-four hours. A silk mill in York charged girls $10 for "teaching them how to become operators." Pressers at the Lehigh Valley Shirt Co. in Allentown receive $4 a week as against $14 paid for the same work two years ago. At the Adkins Shirt Co. in Allentown only three girls in the place were over fourteen; their pay averaged from $1.30 to $2 a week, while one girl, with seven years' experience, earned the magnificent experience, earn-week. One boy in an Allentown shop earned ten cents a week for a ten-week period. . . ."

STALINISTS BREAK UP LEAGUE MEETING IN N. Y.
On Wednesday night, June 28, the Communist League of America (Opposition) held a meeting at Pitkin and Bristol Streets where about two to three hundred workers, including a number of party members and Y. C. L.ers, assembled to listen to the point of view of the Left Opposition. When the last speaker had concluded his remarks he asked for questions from the workers. Up piped a party member, J. M., and demanded nothing short of the platform for as long as he wanted. It was explained to him that it was our platform and our meeting.

The party members then set up a yelling and hooting that would undoubtedly have brought the police had not the speaker from the platform promised to grant him the three minutes that many from the audience urge that he get. He was asked if he would confine his remarks to three minutes and he promised that he would. When he got the platform he immediately reversed his promise to speak for the time granted him and set about telling the workers gathered there that he was going to speak for as long as the workers (read: party members) demanded: "whether for three minutes or one hour."

This was too much for even some of his own followers. One worker declared: "You will speak over my dead body and I am a party member." He was asked to leave the platform and a general melee began. Cries of shame were heard throughout the audience. Many workers were frankly disgusted with the party and Y. C. L. members' tactics.

The meeting was then resumed. Because of the shouting on the part of the party members it was impossible to conduct an orderly meeting with the announcement that we were not going to be driven away and would return to this corner. Our comrades struck up the Internationale which, to the shame of the workers present, the party members refused to sing, and left in a body. —M. GLEBE.

Return to Narrow Basis at N. Y. Mooney "United Front" Confab

New York, N. Y.—The great promise for the broadening of the united front to free Tom Mooney at the recent National Chicago Mooney Congress was given a deplorable setback by the narrow and overwhelmingly party-packed conference held last Sunday at Irving Plaza in New York. Not only were the delegates for the greater part from the C. P. and its auxiliaries, but the atmosphere of the conference harked back to the old "third period" days when any criticism was met with a hysterical howling from the party followers.

There is a great danger, if the indications at the conference mean anything, that the party will give up its recently adopted turn on the united front and reverse to its ultimatum "united front from below" policy.

The Left Opposition delegates were refused the right to address the conference on the ground that preference must be given to trade union delegates. That this was merely a pretext to prevent the Opposition's voice being heard at the conference was plainly evident by the bureaucratic antics of Robert Minor who carefully sifted the speakers' list before anyone was permitted to get the floor. Minor, who was introduced as the impartial representative of the "Tom Mooney Molders' Defense Committee" and gave the key-note speech was tireless in his efforts to make what was called as a united front conference into a C. P. convention.

When comrade M. Goldman, L. O. delegate, made a motion that representatives from trade unions and political organizations be given preference on the speakers' list, Minor suavely and demagogically made an appeal that the motion be voted down and that all delegates be given equal opportunity to speak. How much interest Minor had that all delegates have an equal opportunity to speak was plainly to be seen when in the late hours of the conference he introduced a motion that the last speakers be three trade union delegates, and spoke against the amendment of the L. O. delegate; that a representative of the Left Opposition who had not yet been included succeeded in getting the floor amongst the last few speakers.

Despite Minor and the bureaucratic procedure of the conference the delegate of the Left Opposition succeeded in getting the floor when the resolution to be adopted at the conference came up and read a statement. Comrade Goldman, speaking for the L. O., upon being given the floor for a couple of minutes, made the following statement: "The delegates of the Left Opposition accept the draft resolution for the N. Y. Free Tom Mooney Conference and pledge themselves to carry out all the provisions contained therein. We protest however against the undemocratic procedure of the chairman in excluding our representatives from the opportunity of addressing this conference. We state categorically that unless the conference follows democratic procedure the fight to free Tom Mooney is in danger and a united front of working class organizations which Tom Mooney asked for is irreparably harmed."

The Textile Code Shows Real Face of the 'New Deal'

The past week has seen the publication of the first few proposed industrial codes drawn up under the National Industrial Recovery Act. The most important one advanced is that by the textile industry. The code as proposed exposes in all its viciousness the present program. Where Roosevelt spoke of a maximum 30 hour working week, the manufacturers propose a 40 hour week. Where Roosevelt spoke of a minimum wage, these shameless gentry translate this into the terms of the inflated dollar, and quote ten dollars for the south and eleven dollars for the north.

Protests against this brazen despicable proposal were heard from even the most reactionary of labor leaders. All those labor leaders who for years have done nothing to better the conditions of the most exploited section of our industrial population, the textile worker, have today decided to attempt to rebuild their lost prestige in officially protesting the miserable proposals. It is thus that we find Thomas F. McLaughlin of the A. F. of L. proposing that instead of ten dollars the minimum wage be set at fourteen, and instead of the forty hour week, the maximum number of hours be set at thirty-five. Today, with the more than 17 million unemployed, with the dollar rapidly falling in value, the proposals of the official A. F. of L. can be looked upon as nothing but an attempt to forestall a real effective movement to resist this starvation program.

Roosevelt Program Long-Range Plan to Stabilize U.S. Capitalism On the Backs of the Workers

Situation of American Imperialism in World Economy Forces «New Deal» Demagogues to Reverse Historic Policy - at Expense of Agriculture and the Proletariat. Program Disguised to Enlist Support of Toiling Masses.

Congress has adjourned, leaving in Roosevelt's hands the most far-reaching authority which any American president has ever had in peacetime. How he proposes to use it is becoming increasingly clear—the consolidation of capital into cartels, the beating down of wage standards, the course toward inflation, the aggressive assertion of nationalistic policies at the risk of disrupting the economic conference (allegedly based on international cooperation).

Why is American capitalism, which for so long has raised the slogan, "Take the government out of business" now in need of the Roosevelt program, which does the exact opposite? Why, particularly, is the policy of government intervention in business carried further and further the more evidence accumulates of a temporary and limited upturn in business? Is it not a paradox to see a doctor recommending his efforts the more signs of convalescence his patient shows? The answer is that the doctor's efforts are not directed to the immediate symptoms which already show some improvement, but to an inner cancer which threatens the very existence of the system. It is not a question of overcoming the immediate crisis, which had already begun to show signs of slackening a year ago, but of preparing for a long period of violent shocks and disturbances; of economic, social and political upheavals with which the "normal" forces of capitalist recovery are insufficient to cope, but which on the contrary, demand the utmost concentration and mobilization of the economic and political power of the bourgeoisie.

A valuable key is furnished by the famous sentence in the President's inaugural address in which he likened the present emergency to a state of war. The facts themselves clearly show how unlikely it is that he was talking about the immediate banking crisis, or even about the cyclical crisis of business as a whole. The banking crisis began to improve rapidly from the second half of March on; over $300,000,000 in gold came back to the banks, Federal reserve notes in circulation declined by $150,000,000, and interest rates declined with increasing rapidity. What the Government Accomplished

General business, following the sharp slump caused by the banking developments of the month between Feb. 18 (the Michigan moratorium) and March 15 (reopening of the New York Stock Exchange), resumed the upward trend which had begun as far back as July of last year and had flattened out in the fall, to begin again in the early weeks of the present year. Carloadings, electric power consumption, automobile sales, steel production, and a host of similar indices showed the scope of this improvement. The basis for it is to be found in the establishment of a low level of production costs through the stabilization of commodity prices at a low level; the extensive reductions in wages, leading to an improvement in profit margins; and in the re-accumulation of a substantial fund of liquid capital seeking investment, as the result of far-reaching liquidation and low interest rates. The direct intervention of the government was effective in bringing about recovery, at this stage, only by counteracting through prompt action, to the reopening of the banks. Since then it began to steer a course toward inflation, which accelerated but did not create the tendency to increased activity.

The emergency with which the Roosevelt legislation is concerned goes further and deeper, and looks forward to a period of years. This can be seen by the scope of the measures themselves, and of the government apparatus which must be provided to make them effective. It involves, in short, the long-term future of American business; that is, an attempt to readjust American economic life to a new set of conditions apart from the "natural" and "spontaneous" recovery which is taking place before our eyes.

Every previous crisis has closed a similar recovery, which has then passed on into the stage of stabilization or definite prosperity and then into a boom, marked by new high records in production and trade. Sometimes the driving force has been the opening of new territory, or new markets; sometimes high crops, or foreign wars which have stimulated American exports; sometimes the growth of new industries.

None of these factors making for peaceful stabilization and prosperity are even in sight today. On the contrary, the outlook is that the whole post-crisis period will be marked by severe shocks and violent readjustments, both within American economy and in its relations to other countries.

The Long Range Perspective of U. S. Capitalism

When America was changed from the course of the World War from a debtor to a creditor nation, a tremendous readjustment was needed in every single phase of the national economy. A debtor nation is one which has not fully grown up economically; it imports capital, exports raw materials and foodstuffs, needs a large export surplus with which to pay its debts, has relatively small industry and an imperfectly developed or dependent banking system, a shortage of labor and high wages. Exactly the opposite is true of the economically mature, capital exporting (imperialist) creditor nation. America even before the war, while still a debtor nation, had begun to partake of some of the characteristics of the creditor nation especially in its high state of industrial development.

Since the war, however, its whole economic structure has been shot through with anachronisms and contradictions. Its banking system remained a contradictory two-story affair, on top a few score banks of world importance but with few or no branches at home, and below them, 30,000 country and neighborhood banks, were steadily decimated down to 20,000, by failures in good times and bad. Agriculture, through rapidly giving way to industry, remained the most important single phase of economic life, providing a huge export surplus annually, contrary to the food deficits of every other important industrial power. Industry itself, while rapidly increasing in size and concentration, had been exporting only 10-11 per cent of its output, a much smaller proportion than any other economically advanced power. The huge export surpluses continued, while returns from capital exports were beginning to come in and complicate the transfer of international payments, which the other industrial powers have solved by accepting annually more imports than they (Continued on Page 4)

The Paris Anti-Fascist Congress ... an Anti-Trotskyite Slug Fest

Empty Parade is a Complete Failure

Paris.—The specter of "Trotskyism" haunted the organizers of the "Empty parade" (l'Empty parade) which gave the congress thousands of men, optimistic speeches, brutal sergeants-at-arms were nothing else but expressions of Stalinist impotence.

The Congress Utilized by French Imperialism
Better yet is that if this congress was not under government protection it played the game of the foreign policy of the Daladier government. By means of an alibi of a letter from the police department Daladier took all the precautions of foreign policy by his dealings with the organizers of the congress, he knew how to use the congress as a "national" reserve.

Soviet Workers Excluded from the "European" Congress
What is more eloquent on this point was the absence, from this European Congress of any Soviet worker's delegation. That demonstrates, once again, how low this parade stood in the estimation of U. S. S. R. government circles and the desire of these circles not to break faith with the Hitler Government and Mr. Daladier in any way at all.

The Marxist Wing Excluded from the Congress—The Preparation
Roubaige, Courdeau's lieutenant, the party's confidence man, maneuvered through the medium of several tricks of the organization committee so as to serve as bait for the socialist "rank and file".

We have already revealed how, in the Parisian district, the Oppositionists after being methodically slugged were systematically thrown out of the district "congress". This was only the expression, on a district scale, of a strained international system. The date of the Congress approached; the stitches of the bureaucratic lining drew closer, and more, it appeared that the Organization Committee desired to systematically eliminate the sections of the Opposition and the Oppositionists from the Congress; in fact, every delegation had to receive the stamp of its national leadership, that is, the Stalinists.

In face of all of these facts, the International Secretariat of the Left Opposition sent a delegation to openly pose the question of our admission to the Anti-Fascist Congress. This delegation received an evasive reply. On Saturday, June 3, on the eve of the Congress an official answer was sent us. We publish the letter of the Organization Committee below.

The Explanations of the Organization Bureau

"TO THE INTERNATIONAL SECRETARIAT OF THE LEFT OPPOSITION OF THE C. I.

"In reply to your letter of May 23, we answer the following: "The European anti-Fascist workers Congress is a mass congress, to which the largest sections of the toiling masses have given their adherence and have elected, through the prosecution of a common and active anti-Fascist struggle, representatives of the masses of all countries. The groups connected with you do not represent any masses and we know nothing of their participation in the anti-Fascist struggle and in the strengthening of the anti-Fascist front, in connection with the European anti-Fascist Congress.

"The appeal of the organization bureau of February 26 for the convocation of the Congress was addressed to all workers' political and trade union organizations inviting them to adhere to the Congress and to send delegates to it. Participation in the congress presupposes the acceptance of the platform of common anti-Fascist struggle presented in the appeal of the organization bureau.

"We have no communication on the subject of your acceptance of the platform of the Congress and of your adherence on this basis. On the contrary, Trotsky, your International Secretariat, and the groups connected with you have conducted an infamous campaign against the Congress. (See Unser Wort, organ of your German section). You can no longer ignore the fact that your German group in Paris has made a decision expressly against the Congress and for the boycott of the latter. In your struggle against the Workers Anti-Fascist Congress, that is, against the united front of millions of men for the decisive struggle against the advance of Fascism and for the overthrow of the murderous Fascist dictatorship, the counter-revolutionary Trotskyist group finds itself in a fitting front with the leaders of the 2nd International.

"This is our answer to your request.

"Organization Bureau of the Convocation of the European Workers Anti-Fascist Congress."
Needless to say, we expected such a maneuver; they had already rejected "political organizations" as well as others, with the exception of rank and file organizations, at Amsterdam. All the delegates of the International Opposition who were present in Paris were at the for the saving of the lives of the against Hayward Patterson one of framed-up Negro boys, the chief of the nine Scottsboro defendants, was set aside on June 22nd by Judge Horton.

This is the second reprieve granted to Patterson, the first having been obtained some time ago through a decision of the United States Supreme Court.

In his statement of opinion accompanying the order for a new trial Judge Horton merely repeated what the defense has been saying from the first. "The testimony of the prosecutrix (Victoria Price) in this case is not only uncorroborated but it also bears on its face indications of improbability and is contradicted by other evidence, and in addition thereto, the evidence greatly preponderates in favor of the defendant."

The change in the point of view of Judge Horton, who but on last Palm Sunday sentenced the convicted youth to death, was hardly the result of "preponderance of evidence". The frame-up evidence had in no whit changed since that day the sentence of death was read to Hayward Patterson. The change was not one in the "preponderance of evidence" but rather in the tearing to pieces of the crude frame-up by the united efforts of tens of thousands of Negro and white workers in the struggle for the freedom of the boys.

Some time delegates of workers organizations and, as such, had the right to enter the Congress. But there also the bureaucrats were watchful. A note appeared in l'Humanite demanding that those wanting to receive his credentials had to appear at the Grange aux Belles (Red Trade Union headquarters).

The Left Oppositionists, at this time, were in possession of credentials of the following organizations. These organizations, for material reasons, were not able to multiply the number of delegates nationally contrary to the Stalinists who multiplied their delegates for each local group.

Stalinists Expel 3 L. O. Youth

New York, N. Y.—On June 18, Joe Elliott, Sam Shabel and George Ray were expelled from the Y. C. L. controlled organization, the Student Forum. Their expulsion, based on the flimsiest and most transparent charges of inactivity, comes as a result of the feeling of alarm among the Stalinists and the growth of influence of the ideas of the Left Opposition among the young workers and students of the locality.

In particular, the Stalinists have become worried over the class on the "History and Principles of the Left Opposition", organized under the auspices of the N. Y. Spartacus Youth Club. This class, led by George Ray, began with an attendance of 18 and has now risen to 30. Joe Ross, president of the Student Forum, attended one session of the class with the aim of "exposing" the Trotskyists. Unfortunately for himself, he succeeded in exposing only his own ignorance.

The expulsions of the three comrades in the Student Forum is only part of the expulsion campaign inaugurated by the Stalinists in the East New York and Brownsville sections. Joe Elliott and M. Layton were expelled from the American Youth Club. Elliott made an application to the Student Forum. The Stalinists wanted to refuse him admission on the grounds that he had been expelled from the American Youth Club. Their proposal was defeated by a vote of 19 to 18. Since then the Y. C. L. (Continued on Page 4) ers have been joining the Forum en masse.

From the Brownsville Youth Club, Morris Shapiro, a member of that organization for seven years, and one of its founders, has been expelled for Trotskyism.

S. Casar and H. Conroe have been expelled from the Y. C. L., also for Trotskyism. Neither of these comrades has endorsed the program of the Left Opposition, but have been studying it.

In the Student Forum new expulsions have been put on the order of business. At the meeting of June 25 a motion was introduced by a Y. C. L.er to expel Sam Gordon, B. Casar and B. Lerner for circulating a petition protesting the expulsion of the three "Trotskyists".

20 members signed their names to the petition. The motion was postponed to the next meeting because some entertainment had to be prepared for the evening. However, this was no obstacle to passing a motion barring the 3 expelled "Trotskyists" from appearing in the Forum headquarters.

The chairman very democratically allowed two speakers on the motion, one for and one against, each having one minute apiece.

The sum total of all these bureaucratic expulsions is that more and more young workers and students are interesting themselves in learning what actually is the program of the Left Opposition. —GEORGE RAY.

Scottsboro Decision Reversed

The verdict of guilty brought in against Hayward Patterson one of framed-up Negro boys, the chief of the nine Scottsboro defendants, was set aside on June 22nd by Judge Horton.

This is the second reprieve granted to Patterson, the first having been obtained some time ago through a decision of the United States Supreme Court.

Furniture Union Accepts Left Wing Proposals

"The correctly understood task of the Communist party does not consist solely of gaining influence over the trade unions, such as they are, but in winning, through the trade unions, an influence over the majority of the working class. This is possible only if the methods employed by the party in the trade unions correspond to the nature and the tasks of the latter. . . . If the party buys its influence in the trade unions only at the price of a narrowing down and a factionalizing on the latter, converting them into auxiliaries of the party for momentary aims and preventing them from becoming genuine mass organizations, the relation between the party and the class is wrong. . . . Out of this springs the policy of combinations behind the scenes' of hushing up, of adaptation to the ideas and slogans of others, and finally the complete passage to the positions of opportunism."—Leon Trotsky.

American industry is beginning to stir into open class struggle. Uppermost in the mind of the working class is the burning question: How can these miserable depression wages meet the rising cost of living. Spontaneous, elemental strikes and protests break out with increasing frequency from unexpected quarters and in a surprising manner. What distresses the bosses and annoys the trade union bureaucrats is that this upsurge does not wait for the unions to act, nor does it wait for the "busy season," or for the "better moment," or for the thousand and one excuses of the conservative labor "strategists" for delay. It bursts out for wage increases; it bangs its fist, even in anticipation of the "season"; it gives the bosses a foretaste of what is to follow in the "season."

The furniture industry is no exception to the trend of the day. On the contrary it strikingly illustrates how determined, militant action, in most cases without union leadership, can wrest conditions and wage increases from the bosses by sporadic strikes and stoppages.

Of the three to four thousand upholsterers in greater New York, barely three hundred are organized into both unions: The Furniture Workers Industrial Union and Local 76 of the Upholsterers International, of which the latter, though smaller in actual number, has signed agreements with three or four shops. Local 76, in the manner of all A. F. of L. unions, is based on the "job trust," that is, the control of certain shops through agreement with the employer which allows the latter to use the union label on his goods and limits the membership to little more than those working in these shops. This gentlemen's agreement between the union and the boss, while it maintains wages and conditions in the union shops above the general level of the unorganized industry, and offers protection in the form of a strike fund and other considerations; nevertheless, it quite effectively creates a barrier between the unorganized mass, to whom the "union cannot give jobs." This condition stimulates the development of reactionary policy, machine control ignoring of the unorganized and the stifling of the rank and file in the union.

The Left Wing in the Trade
The Furniture Workers Industrial Union was born out of the old Left wing of Local 76 under the leadership of the T. U. C. L. Under the hysterical lash of the Stalinist "third period" policy, it was not difficult to break off (or have expelled) a substantial group of the union who together with a number of rank and file workers who had lost their confidence in the reactionary A. F. of L. union formed the Left wing union. In the period of its existence it has advocated the principle of one union for the entire industry and has stressed the shop as the basic unit of the union. It has championed the democratic rights of the rank and file and the idea of an international revolutionary movement of labor. On the other hand, it has succumbed to the adventurist practice of the united front from below and the theory of "social Fascism," which has produced within the union the atmosphere, and without, the policy, of the revolutionary sect.

The discontent and unrest among the furniture workers of New York has had a marked effect on both unions. Suddenly Local 76 announces an organization drive. The Industrial Union intensifies its efforts. Local 76 makes some headway; the P. W. U. leads some small strikes and stoppages. But each, naturally, must undermine the basis of the other union in order to proceed. And they are both met with stony indifference and cynicism on the part of the furniture workers who say: Two houses divided against each other cannot stand. A plague on both your houses.

Realizing the burning need for the unification of the industry, the Left wing elements in both unions have come forward with the demand for trade union unity on the basis of a fighting policy against the boss upholsterers in the coming season. In the Industrial Union, we have fought for close to six months to put the question of the unity of the unions on the agenda of the union. Our proposals were ridiculed and rejected. "No united front with the social Fascist leaders", was the demagogic cry, "only with the rank and file!" And so the Stalinist leadership in the Industrial Union staved off the responsibility of approaching the A. F. of L. organization.

But so vital is the issue among the rank and file of the union that it could not be postponed for long. On May 8, after ordering the Left wing proposals stricken from the minutes and without much confidence in the outcome of the negotiations, the Stalinist leadership of the union sent a unity proposal to Local 76. Why was it necessary to conceal our policy from the membership by expunging it from the record and then resurrect it as though it were their own? Unquestionably because it was "Trotskyist contraband!" And second, because it didn't jibe with the party line. . . .

In our next article, we will consider the account of the fight for unity of the furniture workers together with the Left wing program for its achievement.

SPARTACUS CLUB LECTURES

The Spartacus Youth Club will hold the following discussions at their meetings.

July 6: The Student Question—the discussion leader will be comrade Mamie Garrett.

July 13: History of the Marxist Youth Movements, and the Draft Thesis of the Plenum of the Y. C. L. Meetings are at 8:15 Thursday nights at 126 East 16th St.

On Sunday, July 2, there will be a talk to Forest Park in Queens. Meet at 126 East 16th St. at 9:30.

The Columbus Meet and Muste's Labor Party

Current history is harshly proving the Marxist postulate that there is no middle course between the dictatorship of the capitalists and the dictatorship of the proletariat. The American workers must eventually choose the path of Communism and build their own Soviet United States of America or else endure a period of barbarism. As revolutionary Marxists we can go into the united front with any and all groups in a struggle for immediate, concrete issues and at the same time not give up our cease to propagate the above idea.

History has proved that no great social problem will be solved by parliamentary votes alone; advanced workers know that by elections and trade union activity alone it is impossible to permanently raise the standard of living of the working class or put an end to economic crises, unemployment, etc. As revolutionary Marxists the Communists can go into the unions, the unemployed organizations, the fraternal groups, etc.; we can unite in action with any and all working class groups in an effort to win immediate demands, and, at the same time, retain the above position and explain to the workers why we are trying to organize them around a revolutionary program.

At the July 4th Columbus Convention of Unemployed, called by the CPUSA through the leadership of the Ohio Unemployed League, the Musteites hope to organize a "mass labor-front party," or a "united mass party of workers and dirt farmers." It is the duty of every revolutionary worker, and particularly the Communists, to patiently explain the role of the "labor party" to all workers and to persuade them to actively oppose its formation. (In this respect we might advise the Stalinist Central Committee that its faithful followers are patiently "waiting for the party's line and instructions" and are, in the meantime, hesitant in condemning Muste's Labor Party for fear the C. C. might support it.)

However, should our efforts fail to win the support of the workers and they, in turn, pledge their support to a "labor party," then our task is not to push-pool it from without but to "revolutionize it from within." That is, if, in order to keep contact with a good element of the working class, we are forced into a "labor party," then we must organize ourselves inside as a fraction for the purpose of convincing the workers of the insufficiency and inevitable treacherous impotence of such a party. We must use the "labor party" as an arena in which we shall tactfully agitate for a Communist party. . . . of course, this is a hard job, but then Lenin taught us by example that we should "not drag the labor movement along line of least resistance" He taught us to avoid the "easy," opportunist road and to "combat spontaneity" by "diverting" the labor movement from its spontaneous trade unionist, "labor party" course into the channels of revolutionary preparation, organization and activity.

CORRECTION

The passage in the Pocketbook workers article last week which reads: "The workers know that they can have no faith in Shipplacoff, Wolfnsky and Co." should have read "The workers know that they can have no faith in the present 'Fraternal Club' administration which is the heir and protector of the Shipplacoffs and the Wolfnskys."

ON THE WORKERS' FRONT

Militant Strikes on West Coast

Los Angeles.—The city of Los Angeles has witnessed, and is witnessing, the beginning of a wave of strikes as the workers are commencing to think that it is as well to starve fighting as to starve working. About six weeks ago, the Cleaners and Dyers struck. This union is affiliated to the American Federation of Labor. A strike of upholsterers is now going on.

The two most important strikes, however, are those of the agricultural workers and of the milliners who are in the Left wing Needle Trades Workers Industrial Union. The Mexican agricultural workers are a super-exploited section of the Southwestern proletariat. These workers are generally migratory or semi-migratory. Entire families work in the fields, from the little children of six and seven to the adults. The wages paid range from six cents an hour for seven years olds to eight cents an hour for twelve year olds and thirteen cents an hour for adults. Payments for work is highly speculative, as the Mexican laborer, under constant threat of deportation, is very reluctant about going to the legal channels to collect his wages. The ranchers knew this and have been quick to take advantage of the Mexican agricultural proletariat.

Beginning as a spontaneous struggle the strikers in this field have now reached the number of 6,000. Arrests of pickets are a daily occurrence but in spite of this the strikers' morale is still high.

A curious phenomenon in this strike is the attitude of the Mexican government. Ex-president Calles has sent the strikers $750 and President Rodriguez has sent them $1,000. The explanation for this most probably is that in order to succeed in present-day Mexican politics with the radicalized workers and peasants one has to be "socialist" or "labor" or "agrarian."

Milliners in Militant Strike
Another strike now going on is that of the milliners led by the Needle Trades Workers Industrial Union. About four or five weeks ago, Golden Bros., the second largest shop in the city attempted to celebrate the "New Deal" in a fitting fashion. They introduced a piece-work, speed-up system. The workers, amongst whom were a nucleus of Left wingers, stopped work without going down into the street and brought the Golden Bros. to their knees.

The victory at Golden Bros. became the talk and inspiration of the millinery workers who are most desperately in need of militant organization. The union is growing daily. It has increased its membership ten-fold at least in the last month, since the triumphant stoppage at Golden Bros.

The millinery trade has a large representation of Communists and sympathizers. The new split within the millinery workers also had a thawing effect upon the Communists and Left wingers. Long silent, they have once more begun agitating. The next fruits of their agitation has been a strike at Lubes flat Works, where forty workers walked out demanding the 44-hour week, (they were working 48 hours) division of work, recognition of a shop committee and the cessation of wage cutting.

A picket line was thrown around Lubes. This line was reinforced with girls from other shops, particularly from Golden Bros. in a demonstration of solidarity. The "Red Squad" did not succeed in intimidating the girls and men on strike. In forty-eight hours, the bosses at Lubes surrendered to all the demands of the workers.

If the millinery market was as bright with hope after the first victory at Golden's, the condition of the workers' minds after the second brilliant victory can only be left to the imagination. The workers were inspired, but the bosses' chief emotion was one of fear and alarm.

Mr. Sam Golden is the vice-president of the Millinery Ass'n, the bosses' organization. In an evidently planned attack, the bosses of the Golden Bros. shop began to lay the ground work of again attempting to introduce the piece-work system. The workers who are nervously alert demanded of the Golden Bros., the giving up of these plans. When the Messrs. Golden refused, the workers walked out to the number of 70 out of 90 employed. Of the 20 remaining, most of them were relatives. This was about a week ago.

The first day of the strike witnessed the arrest of two pickets, comrade Elsie Meyers and Helen Costello. This did not in any way frighten the strikers. Picketing kept right on in spite of the almost unbelievably brutality of the most despicable collection of human filth which bears the title of "Red Squad". Thursday night six more pickets were arrested. They are still in jail as charge after charge is being placed against them making bail impossible to secure. The original strikers, however, are out nearly one hundred per cent.

Strike meetings, held under the leadership of the chairman of the strike committee, comrade Sam Meyers, an active Left Oppositionist, are as enthusiastic now as on the first day of the strike. The workers are giving themselves for a long time struggle. The bosses are doing likewise.

The Chamber of Commerce presented Mr. Golden with a $5,000 check to be used in keeping Los Angeles the "white spot" of the country.

However, like a pack of wolves, the other manufacturers are snatching the Golden Bros.' orders away as deliveries are not made. Mr. Golden's bank credit is none too high. Victory is possible for the strikers provided the leadership of the union can formulate and apply correct policies.

The need at the moment is a mass picket line. This picket line should bear the character of a united front. The issue is elementary and appeals to the proletarian instincts of every worker of every type of labor organization. Will the leadership of the union make this appeal to every progressive labor organization or will they remain their old position of "united front-from below" only? Or what is still worse, will they give lip service to the idea of a genuine united front and sabotage it in action?

The strike can be won provided a correct policy is followed. The L. O. in Los Angeles will attempt to point out this correct policy inside of the union and in the struggle, itself.

This strike wave particularly in the N. T. W. I. U., the only T. U. C. L. group of anywhere near a bonafide character in Los Angeles, has caught the party unprepared. The long paralyzed by the ultra-Leftism of the C. I., the worker-Communists are re-learning the art of leadership in the every day struggles of the workers. Once liberated from the effects of the "Third Period" they are becoming skillful Communist organizers and not parroting sectarians. In the class struggle itself, the correctness of the views of the Left Opposition are being shown. The worker-Communist, after these struggles, will not be the easy prey for a pen-pushing, "infallible" bureaucrat.

The activities of the L. O. in the agricultural fields, in the Needle Trades workers, in the unemployed organizations are putting the Left Opposition on the map. Our influence is growing rapidly, and while our membership is growing in an extremely slow pace disproportionate with the growth of our influence, organizationally too, we can mark some progress. —C. C.

Bosses Lockout Pocketbook Workers

BULLETIN
As we go to press we learn that the leadership of the Pocketbook Workers' Union were forced by the pressure of the workers in the Union to call a general strike in the trade in New York.

In the past issue of The Militant we described the present situation in the Pocketbook Workers' Union. Now we will show in brief the development that took place for the last few days.

Since last week, the Industrial Council of the Leather Goods Employers Association took the offensive and locked out 2000 workers from their shops. The employers are demanding open shops. The union was forced to answer the lockout with a strike against the association shops only.

The "Fraternal Club" administration did not carry out the decision of the membership to call a general strike in the industry. A strike in the Association shops will give the bosses a chance to make their samples in the independent shops. This will prolong the struggle of the workers in the Association shops. The progressives and the Leather Workers Society who are the leaders in the general strike committee are just as responsible as the administration for not calling a general strike in the whole industry.

Furthermore, at the last meeting of the general strike committee when election of all important committees to lead the strike took place, the Mattins, the David Myers, the Drenowitzes voted against the Left wing to be represented in the important committees. They again united with the "Fraternal Club" against the rank and file. This demonstrates that the administration and their alliance are not interested in a struggle against the employers. They are more interested in the fat plums (for them) of the Industrial Recovery Bill, the way it was explained by our manager Stein at the Rand School meeting last Monday. The Left wing must be on guard, mobilize its forces, explain to the workers that our leaders together with the cliques are not interested to fight the bosses, but rather patch up an agreement that may be worse than the present agreement.

It will be of interest for the Pocketbook Workers and for readers of The Militant to know to what a deplorable situation the present leadership brought the Pocketbook Workers. We have a manufacturer by the name of Morris White. This employer was and is today one of the largest manufacturers in the industry. Morris White, as many other employers, gambled at Wall Street and invested in other speculations. He lost the money he made from the sweat and blood of his workers during the Wall Street crash. After the crash, Morris White declared himself bankrupt, and closed his factory. The workers walked the streets and starved with their families. When the workers had been starved out, Morris White opened his shop again. He signed an agreement with the union and threw out some 60 per cent of the workers from the shop. This was hailed as a victory by the administration.

At the same time, or before yet, Morris White opened another shop out of town in Bridgeport, Conn. If we would have even an honest, conservative administration, the union would have sent out an organizer or a committee from time to time and organize or make an attempt to organize the Bridgeport shop. The present administration did not get in touch with the workers of the Bridgeport shop. The result was that Morris White decided to make up his money he lost gambling in Wall Street as quick as possible, naturally at the expense of the workers as his manager Valinsky taught him. The philanthropist Morris White saw to it that his workers in the N. Y. shop should not make more than $10 to $15 a week. Workers who protested were not given any work at all. In Bridgeport he paid his workers from $1 to $8 a week. In N. Y. shop he made samples, in Bridgeport he made the work of the N. Y. shop and the workers in the N. Y. shop went around idle.

No matter how many times the union officials to take a stand against Morris White but it fell on deaf ears. Morris White gave such treatment to his workers in N. Y. and in Bridgeport that the non-union workers in Bridgeport revolted two weeks ago and went out in strike without the knowledge of the union. According to information, even the Chamber of Commerce urged the workers not to go back to work till employer would grant a raise in wages. The employer did grant a raise of a dollar or two a week. Under the influence of the Chamber of Commerce—left without union guidance—the workers went back to work without union conditions and without recognition of the union.

At the same time, a committee of the N. Y. shop went to Bridgeport to investigate what was taking place there. When Morris White saw the committee he arrested the members and tried to frame the committee men. But he failed in his efforts. The committee was freed. When the committee returned to N. Y., a shop meeting was called. At this meeting the workers forced the union to take a stand and it was decided to call a strike against Morris White's shops.

What does this signify? Had the union been in touch with the workers of Bridgeport, both shops would have struck together, and victory would have been assured against Morris White. This would have been a death blow to these methods and a warning against other employers, especially against the Industrial Council who demanded open shops, and refused to renew the agreement with the union. Our "Fraternal Club" administration have acted the other way around. They have not utilized the discontent of the workers, they have not been in touch with the workers in Bridgeport, and lost the best opportunity to organize the workers. The workers of the Morris White shop in N. Y. are waging a militant struggle, but the situation in Bridgeport is not so rosy due to the negligence of the administration to be on the spot in time and make the necessary preparations.

This shows the workers cannot have any illusions that this leadership can lead the workers to victory. On the contrary, they will lead them to disaster and defeat.

The Teachers Union and the Fight for Union Democracy

It is no accident that in the period of the "salary attack", from September, 1932 to the present date, the Left wing grew in size and influence, increased in boldness and aggressiveness and pressed the attack more sharply against the union administration. In sounding the alarm in time and conducting a persistent agitation for the union to energetically resist the attack on the teachers' salaries the Left wing was only doing its duty and serving the interests of the teachers and the union. That is why it won the sympathy of a number of teachers and increased its ranks.

The reply of the administration to this campaign of the Left wing was an attempt to silence it by expulsions. In this the administration was continuing the policy which it had adopted against the Left wing in 1931. In that year it proposed the expulsion of the "Progressive Group." This was not realized. In June 1932, it attempted to expel the entire Rank and File group. By September of that year the administration changed its plan and proposed to expel only the leading members of the Rank and File. To this list it added a leading member of the "Progressive Group." The total number was eighteen. By October this number was reduced to twelve. By the time this proposal reached the membership of the union the number slated for expulsion was reduced to six.

The steady retreat of the administration reflected the pressure of the Left wing and the union membership which the Left wing successfully aroused against these reactionary proposals. The expulsion proceedings, which were begun in June 1932 reached the membership for action April 29, 1933. The sentiment against expulsion was so marked by this time that the administration changed its plans in the meeting and proposed suspension. This was defeated—a victory for the Left wing!

Disloyalty

At the height of its expulsion campaign, the administration resorted to a disloyal act. Upon the request of Lefkowitz, Bogun was summoned to appear at a hearing before O'Shea to answer charges which involved his possible disloyalty from the school system? At the hearing, Lefkowitz, president of the union testified against Bogun! These were acts of treachery. The union exists for the purpose of defending the teachers against abuses by the B. of E. It cannot permit the B. of E. to intervene in its internal affairs. And it cannot tolerate in its ranks, be they rank and file or leaders, informers to the B. of E. against its members.

The expulsion campaign was accompanied by an undercover campaign of incitement of the conservative, and even reactionary, prejudices of a large number of the union membership against radical labor and Communism. This was the counterpart in the union of the same campaign conducted by the B. of E. in the system generally. It is unquestionable that the present expulsion proceedings from the system by the B. of E. which involves the outstanding militants of the Left wing, is, in large part, the fruit of the expulsion campaign from the union waged by the union administration. For this, too, the union administration must assume its share of responsibility.

Democratic Rights Violated

The expulsion campaign was also accompanied by the most flagrant violations of the democratic rights of the union membership. Meetings which manifested sympathy with Left wing proposals and which threatened to carry them, were arbitrarily adjourned by the administration on technical pretexts. Motions, resolutions, etc., presented and supported by the administration were railroaded through. Minority points of view were ruled out of order, or denied the right of expression. Contrary to the charge of the administration, the friction and disorder at the union meetings, must be attributed, not to the Left wing minority, but to the arbitrary practices of the administration, which sought mechanically to retain its hold over the membership, often in direct contradiction to the will of the membership itself, in short, by its persistent refusal to recognize, in practice, the right of minorities to exist and function as organized groups, an essential condition of trade union democracy, the administration has demonstrated its reactionary character.

The fight between the administration and the Left wing has been a tense and heated one. If the issues involved have not been made as clear to the union membership as they should have been, due to false policies of the Left wing on many questions and the division in its ranks, this served only to make the fight more heated and to produce a situation in the union which threatened to paralyze it even included the possibility of a split. The responsibility for this situation lies, principally, on the shoulders of the administration.

The Special Grievance Committee
But the administration tried to put the responsibility on the Left wing. The Special Grievance Committee which was elected to hear the administration's charges against Left wing leaders and report on them, also took up the situation in the union and proposed a solution for it. The report is the "supreme" effort of the administration in its fight against the Left wing. Four of the five members of the Grievance Committee were among those who preferred the charges!

Over this flagrantly bureaucratic set-up the administration tried to draw the veil of respectability. It nominated and elected as the fifth member of the Committee—John Dewey, noted liberal, father of the League for Independent Political Action and instrumentalist, Dewey, to whom the draft of the report is attributed did his job well. The report is a mountain of confusion. It asserts several times that the difference between the Left wing and the administration involves fundamental questions of union policy: "The union is faced not with a matter of personal controversy, but with differences of policy that are fundamental to its existence." "(The) main cause (of the conflict in the union) is (the) existence of a conception (on the part of the Left wing) as to the proper functions and objectives of the union." (page 4.)

The Delegate Assembly

Notwithstanding, the report carefully refrains from analysis of the fundamental questions of policy involved. It deals only with "secondary" questions. Its thesis is that the light over the fundamental questions produced an intolerable situation in the union which threatened its continued existence. For this situation, like the administration, it holds the Left wing responsible. On this motivation, principally, it made several proposals which help put the union in the pocket of the administration. The most important changes the structure of the union. "1. The creation of an assembly whose delegates will be elected to represent the members in their respective schools. This assembly will have the powers—deliberative and voting—now exercised at business meetings."

This effects a radical change in the structure of the union. Point 2 of the Committee's proposals disturbs this structural change in an outrageously bureaucratic manner. "Business meetings of the membership to discuss, deliberate, and suggest to the Assembly but not to commit the union to any policy". (Our emphasis). By this distorted version of the shop delegate system the reactionary administration is aiming to shut off minority expression and deepen and further conservative the organization.

A fight over fundamental questions of policy cannot be solved mechanically nor by administrative measures. The recourse of the administration to these methods says, on the one hand, that it cannot match its policies against the Left wing and on this basis defeat it. On the other hand this proposal and other resolutions introduced by the administration giving the Executive Board sole power, to suspend and expel, the outlawing of opposition groups, etc., which are aimed ostensibly at the Left wing are, in reality, blows directed against the democratic rights of the union membership.

If it is not defeated the administration may succeed in stilling, not only the opposition, but the collective initiative of the union membership. This will be a long step forward toward the destruction of the union.

The Left wing must adapt itself to the new situation and work to penetrate the Assembly. There and in the school it must carry on the fight against the administration for trade union democracy and the democratic reform of the Delegate Assembly.

Discussion of the German Tasks

The draft resolution (unfortunately undated) clears up some differences (real and imaginary, that is, based on misunderstandings), but at the same time left others untouched. The task of the present criticism consists in defining as exactly as possible the real character of the differences today.

1. The resolution ascertains right at the beginning that "the collapse of the C. P. G. has deprived the slogan of its reform of all content", in other words, that the C. P. G. cannot be regenerated. Needless to say this declaration, which signifies the renunciation of the position that we all held up to March 5, bears a tremendous significance for all of our activity.

Paragraph 3 of the resolution says: "The development is in the direction of a new party". This thesis completes the preceding one and thus restricts extremely the sphere of differences. The leading comrades of the German section recognize that the Stalinist party in Germany is politically liquidated and that the German Communist Party will reconstitute itself as a new party, outside of the Stalinist organization.

2. But let us quote more extensively from paragraph 3: "Although the development is in the direction of a new party, the slogan of the creation of the latter would be premature and false." The whole sense of this sentence lies in the content that one gives the term "slogan". It may be interpreted as both an open proclamation of our new position with regard to the official party as well as an appeal for the immediate creation of a new party with the existing elements. Insofar as the second interpretation is concerned, it would be the most ridiculous sort of adventurism. Among ourselves, no one has made such a proposal. If at the opening of the discussion, such misunderstandings could arise, the last few weeks have created absolute clarity on this score. It is not a matter for us of decreeing bureaucratically the creation of a new party, but of proclaiming openly our position towards the old party as well as our new perspective for work. It would be impossible to diminish or to mask the significance of this turn. Our course is one of propaganda for a new party and preparation for it. It is necessary to speak out clearly and openly about this change. Are we agreed on this? The draft resolution does not offer the necessary clarity.

3. After a correct point of departure the resolution then falls into a number of contradictions, masks its fundamental declarations and does not give any practical directives. The slogan of the "new party", says the resolution, will repel all critical or semi-critical Communists. Why? Obviously because they still believe in the reform of the old party. The devoted but shortsighted revolutionists, who at the cost of great sacrifices will attempt to reestablish the Stalinist party in illegality will naturally show themselves to be hostile to our affirmation that the "perspective of the reform of the C. P. G. no longer bears any content" and that "the development is in the direction of a new party". But it is precisely on these two theses that we find agreement with the German leadership. What shall we do about it? Shall we keep these ideas to ourselves without expressing them out loud in order not to repel from us the partisans of reform? Such a position would be altogether unworthy of Marxists and I do not doubt that the German comrades do not have this in mind. Under the blows of experience the utopians of reform will become convinced that we are correct. The more firmly and the more swiftly we shall establish our position, the greater will be our political authority.

4. The draft resolution poses the question of the creation of cadres. In itself this slogan is absolutely irreproachable. It is only necessary to reply: for what purpose, the cadres? For the reform of the old party or for the construction of the new one? If under such conditions, we take the road of diplomatic silence, the Stalinists will demand an answer just the same of us and we shall appear before the rank and file Communists like those augurs who have two doctrines, one for themselves and one for the uninitiated. It is clear that the authors of the resolution cannot want and do not want such a duplicity.

5. In the draft resolution as well as in other documents the idea is often repeated that the perspective of a new party is correct, but that the advanced workers are not prepared "psychologically". If it's a matter of creating a new party immediately, then the workers are not prepared not only "psychologically", but also politically and theoretically. The necessary cadres are lacking and the existing cadres have no masses. It is impossible to understand the reference to "psychology" otherwise than as follows: our own partisans and even our sympathizers and semi-sympathizers are not prepared "psychologically" for the sharp change of perspectives. The authors of the resolution confuse, quite obviously, two questions: the preparation of the proletarian vanguard for the creation of a new Communist party and the preparation of our own organization for a courageous and decisive change of our own orientation in the question of the old and the new party.

A Reply to the N. C. of the German Opposition

Here we are not concerned with anything but this second task. It results not from any "psychology", that is to say, from the state of mind of various layers of the proletarian vanguard, but from the whole of the objective conditions: from the victory of Fascism and the collapse of the policy as well as the organization of the Stalinists. The state of mind of the workers can yet change—especially in the sense of an ever clearer understanding of this historic fact. But the political attitude (perspective) of the Left Opposition should not have as its point of departure the fluctuating sentiments of the heart, but the objective changes in the situation.

6. To interpret the slogan of the new party as a mechanical unification with the elements of decomposition of the old party (Brandenburg, S. A. P., Leninbund) would not only be an absurdity but a simple mockery of our entire past. With regard to one group or another, we can only speak of taking some steps together, steps dictated by the situation. So, for instance, at the anti-Fascist congress we should seek an understanding with the Socialists group, the S. A. P. (German Socialist Labor Party), etc., against the bloc of Munzenberg with Barbusse and the Hindu bourgeoisie. There is not the slightest reason for confusing tactical understandings of this order with the question of the new party. Only one thing can be said: skillful tactical agreements, on the basis of a correct strategic line, can accelerate the process of the formation of cadres for the Communist party.

7. In the German documents, the slogan of the "new party" is counterposed with the slogan of a "new Zimmerwald". It is absolutely impossible to understand this counter-posing of things. Zimmerwald represented a temporary bloc of Marxists and Centrists. The former marched under the slogan of the Third International; the latter under the slogan of the reform of the Second International. There were, to be sure, some participants who avoided answering the question: for the T. I. or the I. I. International? by hiding their hesitation under the banner of Zimmerwald "in general".

The record proved to be an episode, while the slogan of the Third International has determined the revolutionary policy of the whole new epoch. At the present, the questions are the same. The record, let us say, with the S. A. P., can become an episode (much less important than that of Zimmerwald) on the road to a new party; but these are two different questions.

8. By the way, how is the question of the S. A. P. posed? In the struggle for their own preservation, the leaders of the S. A. P. without giving an answer to any of the programmatic questions, disassociated themselves from the Left Opposition, alleging that we still nurtured illusions about the C. P. G. This fundamental argumentation has been eliminated since, by the march of events. Addressing ourselves to the S. A. P. we say: "After March 5, we are also concerned with the creation of a new party. But a party is created on the basis of a program. What is your program?" It is necessary for us to be able to utilize the advantage of our new position. If the leaders of the S. A. P. is not, obviously, the only now in the process of elaborating their program, we can offer them quite openly our participation in the program discussion and propose even the creation of common theoretical discussion organ, naturally preserving our entire independence of organization as well as our political journal. The question of the S. A. P. is not, obviously, the decisive question. Neither do we want to substitute it for other questions, but only to place it side by side with them, as a serious partial question.

I will sum up: the discussion has already brought this result: it has cleared up a number of obvious misunderstandings and has thus restricted the sphere of the difference. Nevertheless, before getting a clear and distinct reply from the leading German comrades to the questions posed above it would be premature to say that the differences have been overcome. We must recognize, not only formally, the perspective of a new party, but we must draw from this perspective the necessary practical conclusions and fight in common agreement for them.

crossed arms, like the ancient Christians in the circus. We shall be ready, fists clenched, certain that the future belongs to us.

The violent repression being prepared for us will also be met in a violent form by the workers, who closing the ranks of the proletarian revolution will know how to put force and violence at the service of society.

For the bourgeoisie can no longer continue as the guide of human destiny. Under its direction humanity degenerates and rots. It is now the turn of the proletariat to take in its hands the reins of power in order to make possible the progress of civilization under the historic perspective of a socialist organization of economy, destroying without pity all that which stands in the way of the success of such an organization.

Referring to democracy, Trotsky, one of the most beloved leaders of the world proletariat, said: "There is no hope of conquering power peacefully as long as the bourgeoisie retains the instruments of domination. Triply crazy is the hope of attaining power by the simultaneous indication and trenches for itself, by the road of parliamentary democracy."

But this does not at all mean that we Communists should forego the opportunities, offered to us by the bourgeoisie itself, to make use of the national tribune in behalf of the revolutionary proletariat. "Battle must be given to bourgeoisie in its own terrain of democracy, thus tearing from the masses the illusion that the bourgeois parties can solve the problems of democracy."

In the measure that the foundation contradictions of the capitalist system become more acute, the bourgeoisie will abandon all liberal democracy and will resort to open government by force, thus hoping to postpone a bit longer the crumbling of the present social structure. All governments, all systems, about to fall, resort to brutal measures in order to retard the fall. However, no repressions, no massacres, can succeed to hold back the proletariat in its revolutionary mission.

Impelled forward historically, the proletariat will have to sweep aside the outworn forms of bourgeois society, in order to create on its ruins a society without classes without exploiters or exploited. Through the dictatorship of the proletariat, it will construct the socialist society. A beginning has already been made in the Soviet Union.

The social panorama is becoming more definite every day. Everywhere, on all continents, amidst wars, dictatorships and diplomatic comedies, capitalist society is crumbling. As soldiers of the revolutionary army we Communists members of the parliament refuse to hide our ideas, but will continue to shout them and to defend them today in the tribune of this parliament, tomorrow possibly in your prisons, in exile or in front of the machine guns of the same White Guard, the legal existence of which the Government and the majority of this Parliament recognize and even justify—for what purpose? For the purpose—so cynically made plain in the famous recruiting slogan of the Guard: "To shoot down the riff-raff!"

The war came and as its most immediate consequence, the Habsburg empire collapsed. As to Austro-Marxism, it lost the ground underneath its feet. But it did not notice this. It believed that its period of bloom had only begun. That was only natural. The domination of capitalism was heavily shaken and the bourgeoisie could not even think of rehabilitating itself by its own power. And so it transmitted the task of reconstructing economy—this is how it came to be called instead of: reestablishing the capitalist regime—to the social democracy.

And the latter went about this work with the greatest of enthusiasm, for according to its view the "reconstruction of economy" was the prerequisite and beginning of "socialization". And had not democracy anything else but the automatic generator of socialization? Things were quite simple: if capitalism developed, the working class grew, and side by side with the working class grew, and the social democracy would grow. Ultimately it would have to get the majority in the house of parliament, and then, no obstacle would any longer stand in the way of socialization. Society would thus grow into socialism, without revolution, without blood-shed, without a dictatorship and without a reign of terror.

The Dream is Fulfilled, But... But one fine day the cup overflowed. The bourgeoisie parties discovered that they could now get along even without the social democrats and took leave of their coalition brethren. But that did not rouse the social democrats from their democratic intoxication. The unfriendly attitude of the bourgeoisie parties only went to prove to them the correctness of the theory that the social democratic camp there arose a contest of calculation as to the chances of the party for the conquest of parliament.

While the latter wallowed in the delights of this socialization-mathematics, the bourgeois parties accomplished a less romantic but much more effective task. They cleaned up all those conquests of the revolution which the socialists praised as irrevocable. One after the other of these conquests came under the knife, so that a short time ago a madame social democrat voiced the complaint in the National Assembly: "From the commonwealth state, which we were supposed to be building up, nothing has remained any longer".

The bourgeoisie parties were, however, of a different opinion. They believed that there was still a great deal of "revolutionary garbage" that had to be cleaned up and that this work could not be done at all by democratic means, or at least, not as fast as they would like. Fascism raised its head and today about to establish its own domination.

The Rise of Fascism, Unnoticed... The oldest Fascist associations, the Heimwehr, arose as early as the days of the overthrow. Originally they were only to be border guards (therefore their name, Heimwehr equals home guards). But the reactionaries recognized in them, with their unfailing intuition, the possibility of playing a role as self-defense organizations against the "internal enemy".

"The social democrats naturally did not recognize this. As good patriots they even handed out arms to the Heimwehr. And when the Communists brought attention to the "white guard danger", the social democrats, at that time on their honeymoon with the coalition, put them off with a jest: they were saving white mice.... White Guards? Something like that could exist in backward Russia, but not in a highly civilized democratic republic; this was all the more so, because the democratic wing of the Christian Socialists, which was at that time still strong, did not have the slightest inclination for the adventure of a civil war.

"Heimwehren? What for?", said Ernst Hanzer, "I can get everything done that is necessary by agreement with Renner" (leader of the social democracy). And that was god's own truth. Everything necessary for them could be got done in collusion with Renner. That was the pride of the social democrats and this pride allowed them to ignore the Heimwehren.

Of course, this could not go on for ever, because the Heimwehren soon began to show very distinct signs of life. Here and there, they went about assassinating one worker, then another.

The Incident of July 15, 1927

After every one of these murders the Arbeiterzeitung would write: "This should happen again, then.... What was to happen, then?" was shown on July 15, 1927. On this day, when the Vienna workers, outnumbered over the acquittal of several Fascist labor assassins, put the Palace of Justice on fire, the social democrats thought of nothing better to do than to propose the formation of a new coalition to the Christian Socialists!

And along this style they have continued to carry on the struggle against Fascism to this very day. The frightful aggravation of the crisis brought ever new forces to the side of Fascism. Side by side with the Heimwehren there arose National Socialism (the Hitler Brown Shirts). The unification of the workers' enemies kept on making rapid strides at progress in spite of squabbles within their own camp. Their plans became constantly more distinct. But the social democratic party persisted in complete inactivity.

It is not even doing anything now, after Dollfuss, half encouraged and half terrified by the events in Germany, has gone about creating these advantages for the bourgeoisie which a Fascist regime has to offer to it, while at the same time protecting it from the irksome consequences which such a regime brings with it for the ruling classes.

Even Dollfuss Can Put One Over...

When Dollfuss cast aside the parliament and announced a new constitution on the basis of the Empowering Act of Wartime Economy, intending thereby to clean up the rest of the "revolutionary garbage", they had no other resistance to offer him than their democratic outcry. Austro-Marxism stands there just as helplessly today before the advent of Fascism as the theoreticians and practitioners of reformism did before the advent of the war. It starts out with the assumption that the normal condition for capitalism is prosperity and that through increasing prosperity the class antagonisms will be straightened out by the collaboration of the classes, leading up to a perfected socialism.

As to phenomena which appear to contradict this assumption—it does not know even how to begin to tackle them. To the question as to what can be done about the crisis and its offspring—Fascism—they have as little an answer as they have to the question: how socialism will be realized in case the earth should collide with some other heavenly body.... Austro-Marxism one will hear, is not astronomy, but economics and politics. It concerns itself, in spite of the arsenal of the Republican Schutzbund (the social democratic defense organization) which Dollfuss is so feverishly searching for, not with shooting irons and other weapons of destruction, but with elections and parliamentary negotiations. Austro-Marxism is democratic and if the others do not stick to the democratic rules of the game, then it falls into that same condition as that which Napoleon always defeated him, called out despondently: "How can one conduct war against a man who doesn't stick to the rules of military science?"

What can be done against Dollfuss when, going against all human and divine justice, he simply thrusts his nose at the whole democracy, the most democratic of all constitutions included? In that case only one thing is left: submission. And in actuality, the Arbeiterzeitung has repeatedly declared that its party realizes that after the overturn in Germany, a good many things will have to change also in Austria and that it is prepared to negotiate with Dollfuss about the new constitution.

That means only this: the social democracy does not object if the democracy is beaten to death and interred, so long as, in consideration of propriety, the democratic ceremonial is retained. Naturally, the Arbeiterzeitung brings not only such declarations but also others, contrary to these. It threatens, mocks, wails, hatches the most ridiculous plans, vacillates between hope and despair, just as befits such a coalition of headlessness, into which that terrible Dollfuss has cast Austro-Marxism.

What does the social democracy still hope for? Naturally, it has no hope in its own powers, but—in the intervention of the foreign countries and in the quarrels within the Fascist camp. It does not see in the dispute between the Heimwehren and Nazis a war of unification, it does not see that it resembles a lovers' quarrel which ends in a warm embrace! It does not see at all any more, it does not understand the world, and more it is incapable of acting and that is why it will go along the road of debasement and devitalization to the bitter end, the German social democracy. The Austrian workers can expect nothing from the Exemplary Party of the Second International except disgrace and defeat.

A View of the Labor Scene in the British Isles Today

Edinburgh, Scotland.—British capitalism is still in the throes of the crisis but a temporary boom in the building trades and a slight improvement in certain luxury trades have been responsible for a reduction in the number of the unemployed. The capitalist press has seized upon this pretext in order to announce a "British trade revival" and the usual cry of "Prosperity Coming" has again been trotted out. So far as the majority of the wage workers are concerned, the position remains the same.

Although relatively better off than many wage earners in Central Europe, the British worker is beginning to feel the strain of unemployment, while thousands of unemployed men and women have long since given up hope of ever working again. Especially in the case of the heavy industries such as steel, iron and coal and on the Clyde side on the west of Scotland many famous factories and shipyards are standing derelict or being used as rough-house dance-halls, gambling shazalons or scrap-iron stores. This was once the proud home of British shipbuilding, engineering and iron-working capital. The objective conditions are certainly favorable for a great advance on the part of the British working class movement, but unfortunately never was there greater chaos and confusion in the ranks of labor.

The Labour Party still holds the majority of politically thinking workers within its ranks but its policy continues to be a welter of everything under the sun and still is based on class collaboration. It therefore serves as a smokescreen for British capitalism and by the skillful use of "Left" phrases its leaders draw away from the Communist party thousands of healthy recruits. The many small sects such as the I. L. P., the S. P. G. B. and the anti-Parliamentary groups have been hammering at the "Reformist Labour Party and Trade Unions" for about thirty years but with little to show for their work.

After thirteen years, the Communist party is still isolated from the main strata of the working class and has completely failed to gain a foothold in the factories and workshops while the trade unions are still in the safe-keeping of the reformist bureaucracy who are conducting a policy of peace-at-any-price and brazenly selling the workers over the collective wage-bargaining counter.

Divorced from the employed, the C. P. makes great endeavors among the unemployed and has been successful in staging several big unemployed demonstrations and hunger marches. The last attempt was a Scottish hunger march and on Sunday June 11, about 1000 poverty-stricken unemployed men and women marched into Edinburgh in order to demand an interview with Sir Godfrey Collins, Secretary of State for Scotland and in order to discuss their demands.

Some of their demands were: 1. The abolition of the means test. 2. That children of unemployed and adult dependents be granted extra relief subsidies. 3. That rent be reduced 25 per cent. 4. That relief work be provided at trade union wages and conditions. 5. That social service schemes be repudiated. Sir Godfrey was not in Edinburgh and made it known that he had no intention of seeing the hunger marchers. No accommodations were available for the marchers to sleep; but they declared that they would stay until Sir Godfrey climbed down from his high horse. The position resolved itself into a duel between the Edinburgh magistrates and the marchers' leaders among whom were Harry McShane and Aileen Ferguson of the C. P. and John MacGovern and Heenan of the I. L. P.

The marchers at first obtained hails to sleep in, then they were refused them and on Monday night that week they slept out in Prince Street, the main boulevard of the Scottish capital. By Wednesday their funds were getting low but they managed to threaten and cajole the magistrates into paying the marchers their fares back to the various parts of Scotland from whence they came. So the hunger march ended. It created great excitement and undoubtedly gave the Edinburgh authorities many a fright, but it failed in its main objective because of the sectarian nature of its make-up.

The members of the C. P. and National Unemployed Workers Movement, the party controlled unemployed organization were there to a man, but the large mass of the unemployed and employed treated the affair as "none of their business". As a consequence, a whole march savored more of a stage-managed stunt than of a real attempt to strike a blow on the part of the masses. All the recent marches and demonstrations have been of this nature and until the C. P. strikes a sound line, stunts will continue to be the order of the day.

Despite the fact that with each passing year thousands of sympathetic workers are turning their backs on the C. P. in disgust, the leadership still continues to whoop about imaginary victories—if not in Britain, then in Russia—but gradually the real situation is beginning to burn itself into the minds of many sections of the rank and file and with the recent German debacle and subsequent crazy united front antics of the Comintern, the Dollfuss and Co. are skating on thin ice.

Roosevelt Long-Range Program

export. Wages in many fields remained high in comparison with Europe, although the shortage of labor has disappeared as witnessed by the restrictions on immigration. The situation confronting American economy gives little reason to think that through the peaceful operation of natural and spontaneous forces, the present crisis will, like all previous ones, go on through a phase of stabilization and prosperity to a boom which will again set new high records.

The recovery which now seems to be under way is essentially a breathing-spell in a long, hard and painful process of readjustment, marked by internal shocks and disturbances, and abroad by increasingly sharp conflict of interests with the older powers in the effort to find a bigger place in the world markets.

The driving force of American industrial expansion supplies the motive power; the machinery readjusts itself by displacing agriculture and raw material production with the increasing production of manufactured products, small scattered industry and banking by powerful aggregates of capital and large-scale branch banking, production directed to the extent of 90 percent toward the home market by an increasing proportion of exports, and isolationism by a life-and-death interest in world affairs.

Roosevelt Contribution to Capitalist Technique
Roosevelt's contribution to capitalism's technique for getting out of the crisis appears to lie, first, in the recognition that natural and spontaneous recovery is not enough to assure, as heretofore, the transition back to "normal" prosperity after the crisis, inasmuch as his most energetic actions are taken precisely in the face of such a recovery, and to take effect over a period of years.

Second, he proposes to treat this coming period evidently on the basis of an emergency comparable to a state of war. That implies a mobilization of the full powers of the state, the coordination under Federal control of economic activities such as railroading, the encouragement to banks to consolidate and unify operations under Federal (or Federal Reserve) control, the unification of whole branches of industry in all important respects except actual ownership through trade associations, the concentration of all holdings of gold under the control of the government, etc.

This feature of concentration and coordination is one of the most marked characteristics of the Roosevelt policies. Its result must be to shorten the period of readjustment and to combine as much as possible of its burdens with those of the cyclical (1929-1933) crisis.

The currency policy of the government, the much-mooted question of inflation, must be regarded as part of a general mobilization of control in the hands of the Federal government on a "war-like" basis. In its most extreme form, it becomes a policy of "managed currency," thus fully integrating finance and banking into the system of government controls.

The Mobilization of Public Opinion
Third, corresponding to the concentration and mobilization of industry, transportation and finance, is the mobilization of "public opinion," comparable to that of wartime except that the element of compulsion is lacking. This accounts for much of the demagoguery in the President's official statements and in his legislation. The incident of the reception of several hundred aggressive bonus petitioners at Fort Hunt, where they were allowed to wear themselves out in inaction and finally split, a part joining the restoration camps, is especially illuminating, not only in contrast with the methods used by Mr. Hoover last year in dealing with the "Bonus Expeditionary Force," but also in the light of the substantial reductions in expenditures for veterans carried through by the Roosevelt administration.

Similarly, the farmer, feeling the increasing pressure of the crisis on top of the general crisis of American farming, has been politically restless for years. By concessions such as the promise of inflation and the agricultural relief bill, it is proposed to win his sympathy or at least acquiescence in the whole program, while at the same time carrying out the work of reducing the production of American farms to as large an extent as possible with the consent of the farmer himself. The only alternative policy would have been to let him be starved and forced out of the farms by the naked operation of economic forces.

Similarly, in face of the real attacks on its standards and organizations, the support of the working class is sought through the appeal to employers to increase wages voluntarily; through the announced intention of including binding agreements on wages and working conditions among the subjects on which trade associations are to agree, through the friendly attitude toward minimum wage legislation, and the Black bill for the thirty-hour week. All this in the face of the $1 a day forced labor, the 10 per cent wage cut for the railroad workers, the anti-labor provisions of the Industrial Recovery Bill, etc.

A Period of Drastic Readjustments
So long as American business looked forward to automatic recovery and new high records of prosperity after every crisis, the Harding-Coolidge-Hoover policy of minimum intervention of government in economic life was a natural corollary.

Under present conditions we see American economy, to provide an outlet for its rapidly growing productive forces in a cramped world, readjusting itself by closing small banks and businesses and enlarging big ones, expanding its production of manufactured goods at the expense of its production of foods and raw materials, reaching out more and more for export markets as its home markets diminish, and above all, throwing the main burdens of these readjustments on to the working class. This means that the next period is one of drastic and painful readjustments internally, and of sharpening conflict of interests internationally.

The Roosevelt program is not to stem or reverse these tendencies, nor, as in the old days of unalloyed optimism, to let them work themselves out blindly. On the contrary, it not only accepts the existing trends of American economy, but put itself at their head to give them leadership and support during the critical period to come. Through mobilizing and concentrating economic control, with a corresponding mobilization of demagogic propaganda, it attempts to hasten the necessary domestic readjustments and present a solid front against the outside world in the struggle for international markets, and against the working class, the farmers, and broad sections of the petty bourgeoisie at home.

Stalinism Weakens the U.S.S.R.

I.
The revisionist conception of Socialism in One Country and the policies flowing from it have not only helped to lay the political foundation for a cyclical revival of capitalism but also have aided in creating a danger for the Workers' Fatherland far greater than active support of revolutions outside of Russia could have done. Stalinism with its theory of the "united front from below," together with the social democrats, has helped to lead the German working class to defeat. It has helped to destroy the second strongest Communist party of the world. At the same time its impotence has been instrumental in creating a condition the workers fear.

With the rise of Hitler to power not only has the revolutionary movement had a set-back but we are beginning to witness an alignment of social forces favorable to a capitalist attack on the Soviet Union itself. In spite of the so-called "non-aggression pacts" between the USSR and other nations, particularly France and Poland, the contradictions between the imperialist world and an isolated workers' state are developing toward the point of explosion.

If the Workers Triumphed
Had the German working class defeated Hitler, thereby taking a step toward social revolution, the influence of their success would have spread. Workers throughout the world would have been heartened and the objective revolutionary factors created by the present world crisis might have been matched by a growth of subjective factors now lagging behind. A political crisis for capitalism, as well as its economic crisis, might have developed.

History is replete with examples of revolutionary movements in one country leading to progressive reforms in other parts of the world. As comrade Trotsky pointed out in Whither England? the great French Revolution served as a powerful stimulus to the growth of the labor movement and democratic tendencies in England; the July Revolution of 1830 in France was largely responsible for the first English Election Reform Bill in 1832; the revolutionary movement of Chartism contributed to a reduction of the English working-day in 1844-47 and to the abolition of the Corn Laws in 1846; the influence of the Russian Revolution in 1905 helped to raise the Labor Party to the position of an important fraction in the English Parliament, while the Russian Revolution of 1917 was to a large extent responsible for the new Election Reforms of 1918.

In short, an examination of history leads us to the conclusion that a triumph of the workers in Germany would have strengthened the international working class in general.

Defeats Bring Reaction
But with the rise of German Fascism the reverse is true. Both the German workers and the international working class movement have suffered a tremendous defeat. Just as the defeat of the great French Revolution led to the restoration of the Bourbons in France and the Corn Laws in England, the defeat of 1848 dealt a blow to the English working class, and the "defeat" of the German workers in 1923 gave American capital the opportunity to begin with the realization of its plans for the (momentarily, peaceful) subjugation of Europe," so today, a subjugation of reaction is beginning to set in.

a series of advances of the imperialist world and an isolated workers' state are developing toward the point of explosion. The existence of the Soviet Union still remains a threat to the capitalist world. Its territory is needed by the imperialists during the present period of their decay and it is the one power all of them wish to destroy. But now political conditions for intervention have shifted in their favor. The Soviet Union's first line of defense (the possibility of effective workers' resistance in other countries and particularly in Germany) has been temporarily weakened.

calling for labor representation being turned to precisely what they were intended for—the formation of company unions. Even the American Federation of Labor is not acceptable to our industrial magnates, unless it is needed to head off a real class conscious union. Particularly the steel and coal industries have been active in the formation of these company unions. The New York Times reports of "numerous instances of coercion to force the workers into the company unions. In some parts of Kentucky, workers have been evicted from company houses for refusal to sign company union rolls." This practice will within the next few weeks probably assume national proportions.

These are the first few signs of the trend of the future developments. Many workers undoubtedly believed that the Roosevelt program will lead the country back to "prosperity." Their disillusionment will be both soon, sharp and complete. The working class cannot expect aid from the Roosevelt administration; this hard master of events will make only too clear. To secure a living wage, to secure a thirty hour week, no conference board will suffice. For this the American working class must be organized into powerful industrial unions that will learn and know how to fight for better conditions.

Narrow Down N.Y. Free Tom Mooney Meet of the delegates present but was subjected to the usual barrage of abuse on the part of Minor, Alexander and other party leaders. Even those staunch upholders of democratic principles, the Mustelies, who complained so loudly when they were refused the right to distribute their paper at the recent united front National Youth Day, refused to fight for the elementary right of every working class organization to a voice in a united front conference. The conclusions to be drawn from the actions of the C. P. L. A. delegate, a certain Larry Cohen, who not only was given the opportunity to speak but was elected to the executive committee, is that they are in full agreement with the Stalinist clique policy of an exclusive Free Tom Mooney movement.

An executive committee of 25, arbitrarily selected by the executive of the previous conference, was elected without any consideration of the organizations represented at the present conference. Again upon an appeal by Minor, the conference voted down a motion by the L. O. delegate to include in the executive representatives of the political organizations in the conference.

So effectively did the steam-roller work that even a non-partisan representative, the one from the L. D. who was nominated from the floor and received an equal vote with the other nominees was declared not elected by the chairman for the simple reason that the delegate spoke up for the right of the Left Opposition and all political organizations to a voice at a united front conference!

There were 314 delegates present at the conference representing 74 organizations. Out of the entire delegation 34 came from trade unions. Of the non-party delegates present there was only the C. P. L. A., the Fellowship of Reconciliation, the Lovestonites, the Federated Press, the Weisbord group and the Communist League of America (Left Opposition). The trend of the conference was for work in the A. F. L. locals, socialist locals and opponent fraternal organization locals. The organizational secretary, "Brother" Begun, even stressed penetration of the Knights of Pythias, the Moose, Elks, the American Legion and the boy scouts. These organizations are to send delegates to future Mooney conferences.

The conference, though adopting the principle of the united front of all working class organizations, departed in actuality from this principle and set itself the task of winning the local organizations and disregarding entirely the central bodies.

It is necessary at this time to issue a warning to the Left wing workers who for years have been in the thick of the struggle to free Tom Mooney from the capitalist jail which has held him since 1917; that unless a real united front of all workers organizations is forged, Tom Mooney will not be released. The Left Opposition, as its statements and actions have shown, stands for such a policy of united action, a policy which, through a correct application of the united front, will force the S. P. leaders and the A. F. L. labor fakery to answer before their following and the whole working class, if they will obstruct the unity with the Left wing and Communists in order to force the capitalist jailers to free Tom Mooney.

THE EUROPEAN ANTI-FASCIST CONGRESS . . . AN ANTI-TROTSKYIST SLUG FEST OF THE STALINISTS

"Let these Gentlemen Hold the Congress in Peace!"
-- Say the Police to the L. O. Protest Delegation

Labor (Gilly miners); Delegation from a meeting of 500.

Greece.—Greek section of the Left Opposition; General Federation of Wounded War Victims; Union of War Veterans; Union of Widows and Orphans; Woodworkers Trade Union of Athens; Barbers Trade Union of Athens; Bakers Trade Union of Athens.

Hungary.—Hungarian section of the Left Opposition; Hungarian language group of building workers; Factory meeting of building workers of the Paris district.

France.—French section of the Left Opposition; Amsterdam Committee, Charente-Inférieure (Orléans); Public meeting in Lille, Red Aid (Chavigny section); Railroad workers; Several meetings in the Paris district; Workers meeting at Montigny-Gohelle; Indo-Chinese group of the Paris district; Trade union section, Committee for the Defense of Humanity, and various other sections of the Red Aid and workers meetings.

The sum of these credentials represented about one hundred delegates. We repeat, we limited the number of delegates from the provinces and from abroad for material reasons.

According to prattle of the Stalinists, the Oppositionists "represented no one"; but one of the organizations represented by us, the General Federation of Disabled War Victims of Athens consists of SIXTY THOUSAND MEMBERS!

Bureaucratic Sifting
All the credentials of Oppositionist organizations were automatically rejected.

The comrades who appeared with regular credentials officially stamped by workers organizations passed through the sifter of the national leadership; all those recognized as "Trotskyists" were subject to the following maneuver: Their credentials was demanded from them in order to issue a delegates card against it; they were requested to wait a minute, then they the bureaucrats cynically refused a card and retained the credential! Then, more diplomatically, they requested them (the delegates) to return and upon returning, since they no longer had a credential nor a card, they refused them admission into the Grange aux Belles Hall! That did not happen without protest but the sergeants-at-arms brutally squelched the protests. In a word, they systematically robbed the credentials from the members of the Opposition.

Bureaucratic Measures Breed Arbitrariness

Besides this, many of the scenes were comical: A delegate from an anti-Fascist committee was deprived of his credential and sent back to his district because they suspected him to be a Trotskyite. One of our comrades having previously presented a credential from Charente (the same place), the suspected "Trotskyite" was "liquidated" the real "Trotskyite" protesting by this bullabuloo secured a delegates card.

Another case is no less comical: A delegate from a Spanish trade union was recognized by a bureaucrat from his country and refused a card; accidentally, they returned his credential. A Swiss comrade whose credential had been rejected from Switzerland appeared with the Spanish credential. The Spanish Stalinist did not know him, he secured his admission card to the Congress!

However, they discreetly distributed credentials to members of the Young Communist League and the party; notwithstanding, that caused many surprises to the Stalinist apparatus.

The Congress Begins

The detailed instructions given to the sergeants-at-arms were directed at us. The organizers succeeded in creating a sentiment of violent reaction against any revolutionary intervention: the pretended struggle against the Young Patriots was only a means of striking at us. The management committee was organized with several guards and a corps under the leadership of a "specialist."

The sergeant-at-arms was baffled from the very first day, and not knowing whom to suspect, he bullied everyone: "And that one, isn't he a Trotskyist?" In this way a member of the party was violently thrown out because he didn't have his membership card on his person! The slogan was to hound the Trotskyists. A special squad was assigned to that task. The squad was completely put off the scent when they learned that a plain clothes detective was in the hall. "Take him out quietly! No provocations!" "Get him to go out!" "Outside" on the sidewalk, two young workers who listened very attentively to "a Trotskyite" much to the chagrin of the sergeant-at-arms, were thrown into the street under the fallacious pretext that they weren't delegates.

Two Regimes, the Detectives and the "Trotskyites": Example of the Press Cards

Two detectives of the North-African police, Gaudin's agents, well known to the Algerian workers, presented themselves to the organization committee. Press cards. Invitation. Admit the hearers of the cards. "Come in, gentlemen, this way, gentlemen!" And the dicks passed the zealous sergeant-at-arms.

Saraceno, former editor-in-chief of Unita, the central organ of the Italian Communist Party, possessing a regular press card, entered the Congress.

Led away into the cellar by the agents of the "political control" to the "special Italian committee" comrade Saraceno was forced to surrender his right to enter. Before allowing him to leave, the Stalinist "nazis" (twenty against one) threw themselves on our comrade striking him with their feet and their fists. Our comrade had his glasses broken and was bruised on his left temple by the bureaucrats.

Welcome to the Delegates

Comrade Altan was unable to obtain his delegates card at Grange aux Belles and appeared at the Pleyel Hall on the first day of the Congress. They wrested his credential from him, drew him to a corner, violently slugged him and then threw him into the street. Since he protested and a crowd had already gathered about him, the sergeant-at-arms spoke to him in this tone: "You really want to enter! Oh well, come in!" Altan once again entered the Pleyel Hall. Many delegates were commenting on the incident. Beaugrand reassured them, saying: "We will check up on his credential and then give him access to the hall." They drew Altan into a small retreat, closed the door to the retreat. A member of the 13th Section of the Red Aid, Beaugrand, and Rouffange insulted him and slugged him, shouting to the disturbed comrades who were massed behind the door: "You see how they examine his credential, they are dealing with him in a comradely way". But in subdued tones they told Altan that he would remain sequestered until the conclusion of the Congress and they beat him brutally. Altan's cries drew the attention of numerous delegates who energetically insisted that they let him go.

To the delegates that protested they declared that Altan was a police agent that they found in the hall. We have told above just how they received the police agents.

First Day in the Hall of the "Congress"

The packed hall at the first session bore the aspect of a mass meeting rather than a Congress; no real discussion.

The delegates grouped according to languages had to obey national discipline, to make known the number of delegates desiring the floor. An Italian comrade requested the floor. The individual responsible for the group came to see him and demanded that he submit the outline of his speech.

The evening session was marked by a violent incident. A Belgian comrade, Vereken, handed in his name at the very beginning of the session and, unable to get the floor, made a point of order; they saw him from the platform, pulled him out of the hall, and kept him in the cellar. When several comrades protested against the violence committed, they were themselves violently dragged from the hall, their delegates' cards were demanded and taken from them and they were thrown out. Other delegates who protested against this violence were threatened with expulsion if they did not keep quiet.

The same afternoon two members of the Unitary Trade Unions, a railroad worker and a metal worker, were expelled from the hall. The sergeant-at-arms thought they had a "doubtful attitude".

The first day of the discussion, after the hollow and official optimism of the reports which contained neither analysis nor general perspectives, was devoted to anti-Trotskyist speeches of the usual type, and a theatrical scene in the course of which the Belgian delegate on the platform ripped the Hitlerite flag. The session concluded with collective singing.

The Parade Ends

Upon their entry into the corridor, two delegates, Ohlin of Montigny and Devreyer, were simply thrown out of the hall because they were recognized as Trotskyists. Their credentials were torn up!

On the opening of this session comrade George Vitoris delegate from the General Federation of Disabled Veterans of the Imperialist War of Greece submitted a written request to the presidium demanding the floor. The chairman wrote back that each delegate who wanted the floor had to get it through an intermediary, the leader of his "national" section, who was always a Stalinist. Thus the floor was denied to any Oppositionist delegate.

The Left Opposition refused to submit to this anti-proletarian and bureaucratic decision. That is why on Monday morning at the moment when the chairman announced that Bergery, petty bourgeois radical, would take the floor, comrade Vitoris stood up and addressing himself to the Congress, shouted out: "Comrades, in the name of 60,000 disabled Greek War veterans I protest against the exclusion of the Left Opposition. I demand the floor in its name. Long live the Communist International of Lenin and Trotsky! Long live the proletarian revolution! Down with Fascism! Long live Trotsky! Free Rakovsky!"

Bands of bureaucratic dunkeys coming from all parts of the hall threw themselves on him with savage bestiality, dragging him by the hair and beating him with their hands and feet. Comrade Marie Dimitriedes, delegate of the War Widows and Orphans of Greece; comrade Paget, delegate of the section of the Red Aid of Chavigny (Menthé-et-Moselle); an Indo-

Chinese comrade, delegate of the Red Aid of Paris; comrade L., were savagely slugged for having protested with comrade Vitoris.

Our comrades struggled with the bureaucrats to retain their places. The Stalinists hurled themselves upon them but a great number of delegates, particularly the English delegation, indignant at the brutality, protested energetically. It was only with considerable effort that the bureaucrats were able, despite the protests, to throw our comrades out of the hall.

But their anti-Trotskyist action did not stop at that. Once again led to the cellar of the theater, our comrades were searched and questioned in typical police manner and sequestered there under the guard of twenty "sergeant-at-arms" for more than two hours.

Among the bureaucrats Vaillant-Couturier, Comrade Vitoris protested to him and demanded that our imprisoned comrades be freed immediately. Vaillant-Couturier smiled ironically and turned his back.

It was only after the arrest by the police of the Left Opposition group, who came to the Congress to protest the treatment accorded our delegates, that our comrades were freed in the afternoon, although in a very bad condition.

During this time the radical bourgeois deputy, Bergery, continued his speech.

Obliged to free our comrades by the pressure of the comrades from the outside, Beaugrand demanded that our comrades sign a declaration stating that they were not Trotskyists. Our comrades responded by saying that since they were beaten they would not sign such a declaration.

In the Future We Will Speak to You with a Revolver

In the meantime a German comrade was violently dragged from his seat and led away with violence into another corner of the cellar. He was told: "No discussion with you, give us your identification papers, your passport." They took all his personal papers besides, and returning two hours later, they said: "In the future we will speak to you with a revolver." All his personal letters were kept. Comrade Paget protested in the hall when he saw our comrades rounded up. He was immediately ejected into the street.

Young Socialists Protest

A girl comrade, member of the Socialist Youth and of the Youth Anti-Fascist Committee, outraged by the proceedings against our comrades, when the brutalities against them began anew, protested vigorously on the floor. She too, was immediately made "harmless" by the anti-Trotskyist squad and finally reached the street with a bloody nose. The other Socialist Youth comrades left the meeting protesting with her. In discussing with the young Socialist comrades, our delegates made clear to them that these Stalinist maneuvers had nothing in common with a genuine united front.

Some of our comrades were still under guard at that time. A group from our headquarters came down to get them out. They demanded their immediate liberation of the squad leaders. A loud argument ensued in the hallway. Cops passing by interfered and reproached our comrades for not letting "these gentlemen hold their congress in peace."

The intervention of the group from our headquarters was, however, effective. Our comrades were immediately afterward released.

Bergery Prepares the Break

The opponents of the united front from organization to organization soon found themselves in an uncomfortable position with their combinations. The Pleyel Congress emphasized how the already miserable results of the Amsterdam horse-deals have sunk to even greater depths. Not only wasn't any advance achieved but an obvious retreat is also being prepared by elements foreign to the party to break away from Amsterdam.

Bergery is prepared to take an important part of the Amsterdam delegates under his influence. Bergery does this with ease. He publicly advertises his support of Amsterdam. He cements his positions which will permit him to slam the door with greater advantage accusing the Communists of unimportance.

Bergery already has an undertaking, the "Common Front", which groups most of the independent personalities of Amsterdam on a platform which is on the same level as Amsterdam.

Many conferences have been held between the party and Bergery in the corridors and behind the scenes. Doriot represented the party at the initial meeting of the "Common Front".

The situation is serious. The party is trying and will still try many compromises. All that, of course, is happening without any party. Bergery's speech paved the way for his eventual break. From the Communist point of view Doriot's reply was no less odious. It shows just where "the sympathies of the Political Bureau" rest.

Last Day of the Parade

After much petty discussion, one of our comrades, representing the Belgian Knights of Labor (the Gilly miners), requested the floor. The leader of the Belgian delegation stated that he could have the floor but only on the condition that he first submit to him the outline of his speech. Our comrade answered that his point of view was that of the Left Opposition. This was enough to gag him.

Most important in this last session was the intervention of comrade Aulas from the Unitary Federation of Teachers. Aulas demonstrated the responsibility that the R. I. L. U. bore in the German catastrophe and in the failure to call a genuine Congress. He was continually interrupted by the bureaucrats and when he placed the criminal policy of the German Communist Party in its proper light his voice was drowned by a hue and cry from the howling pack.

The chairman proposed that this delegate from a red trade union be ruled out of order. In spite of a great number of votes against this bureaucratic decision Aulas was forced to leave the platform and the hall.

Unanimity at Any Cost

At the conclusion of the discussion the chairman made a long appeal proposing that the delegates show their agreement with the resolution presented by a demonstrative acclamation. He put the resolution to a vote and a half dozen hands were raised against it. Stupefied, the chairman believed, at the time, that the German delegates who had voted against it had not understood the resolution. He had the resolution translated and again they voted demonstratively against it. One of them explained his position by shouting out: "Long live Trotsky!"

Then a German delegate from Frankfurt stood up and said: "When I came to this Congress I was not a Left Oppositionist. But by your slanders against the Left Oppositionists who, in every case work as revolutionaries along with us in Germany, you have driven me closer to them and I vote against your resolution of confusion."

The organizers of the Congress who wanted a unanimous vote at any cost were thrown into confusion. They surrounded the French and Belgian delegates who had voted against the resolution. The chairman made a new ballyhoo appeal for unanimity. The Left Oppositionists who protested were thrown out of the hall. But even after they were ejected new hands were raised against the resolution. Nevertheless this did not prevent the organizers from declaring that the vote was unanimous.

Results of the Masquerade
The Congress has succeeded in neither in improving the relation of the party to the masses, nor in sinking its roots among them nor in raising the fighting power of the party and the masses. The Congress was a party gathering and its results are already apparent.

The problem of Fascism and the struggle of the workers against it remains before the international working class. The Pleyel parade has not only not solved any of these problems but has augmented the confusion. The Left Opposition through its struggle against the criminal Stalinist policy alone can solve these problems.

Austrian Fascism and the Party Meet C. I. Impotence Veils Itself with Parliamentary Cretinism

The strength of Marxism lies in its ability to recognize reality. In the mouth of a Marxist, "parliamentary cretinism" is not an insult but the characteristic of a political system which substitutes for social reality, juridical and moral constructions, a ritual of decorative phrases. The strength of Bolshevism consisted therein, that in Lenin's person it applied the materialistic method of analysis with the greatest theoretical honesty—not permitting any optimistic neglect to speak out what is, not permitting any consoling illusions—to all the problems of our epoch.

In the fundamental questions of revolutionary policy—in the method of this policy—Stalinism signifies not only a negation of Leninism, but also the worst caricature of it. We can see this anew at the present time in the question of the fate of Austria. The proscription of the Communist party which has not called forth any protest on the part of the Austrian workers, should have, it seems, forced the Moscow organizers of international defeats of the proletariat to reflect on the sad results of their previous works. If the legal Austrian C. P., possessing its own press, showed itself to be unable in the least to offer any resistance whatsoever to the purely police repressions of Austrian Bonapartism, how will it oppose the attacks of the Fascist bands? However, the Moscow Pravda sees in the very suppression of the Austrian section of the C. I., which took place unresisted, a "victory," or, at least, the immediate introduction to victory. "The Anti-Fascist movement in Austria is growing every day" (1)—writes Pravda of May 28th. "Despite the sabotage of the leaders of the Austrian Social Democracy broad preparations are being made in all countries for the European Anti-Fascist Congress" (our emphasis—L. T.). In precisely the same manner the Anti-Fascist movement "grew every day in Germany" only to disappear suddenly on the 30th of March, no one knows where. These people not only have learned nothing but they always cut their optimism in the same pattern. They are not revolutionists, but priests who repeat this or that formula, made up of consoling lies, at the bedside of the dying.

However, precisely in what is the anti-Fascist movement manifested? And why does it pass over the proscription of the Austrian C. P. in silence? It was very busy, this movement "which is growing every day," with other more important tasks: the preparation of the Barbusse Congress in Paris. This is an example of parliamentary cretinism which should open the eyes of the most backward workers! It is wrong to think that a parliament is necessary for parliamentary cretinism; in general shaded rostrums are sufficient, forums removed from the arena of struggle from which false speeches can be made, barren formulas paraded, and twenty-four hour "alliances" concluded with journalists, pacifists, outraged radicals, tenors, and baritones.

Naturally it is foolish to believe that there are "broad preparations in every country" for the Paris masquerade, beaten down by unemployment, the police, the Fascist bands, the betrayal of the social democracy, and the impotence of the C. P., the Austrian proletariat is hardly interested in the lyricism of Barbusse, in the rhetoric of Bersery, and in the petty machinations of Aluenzenberg. In what manner can the international meeting in Paris change anything in the Austrian situation which not in ten years, nor in five, but this very day is moving towards the complete suppression of the proletariat? Isn't it clear that by speaking in its boastful tone on the Paris Congress, Pravda completely reveals its real significance: to sidetrack attention from reality to fiction, from the conquest of the masses to the parliamentary game, from the irreconcilable clash of the classes to collaboration with the "free-lancers," from the streets of Vienna to a luxurious hall in a rich quarter of Paris, from civil war to an exercise in empty rhetoric. In other words: from the methods of Bolshevism to parliamentary cretinism.

Nazis' Labor Front in Action Workers Get Big Wage Cuts; Look for Leadership

Berlin, Germany.—Hitler issued a decree shortly after he had taken over power—until September 30, 1933, no wage scales could be changed against the interests of the workers. (The government ordered—the NSBO (Nazi shop organization) is not allowed to depose shop councils or discharge workers in any shop on its own authority. Only the police chief, having jurisdiction, can take such action. The national leader of the "Labor Front" issued the following decree after the occupation of the German General Trade Union Federation—No employer shall dare to take advantage of the momentary confusion caused by the taking over by force of large organizations, to change the wages and schedules of the workers. He will be regarded as an enemy to the state and held responsible.)

Big words. The adherents of Hitler in the shops pointed triumphantly to these decrees before the others, who actively or passively reject Fascism. And in spite of, or even because of the barbarous persecution of the class-conscious workers, the latter are still the great majority. Now, after the intoxication of victory, there followed very quickly the headache of the morning after. Now in all the shops the so-called "equalization" is being carried through with the sharpest emphasis by the leaders of the Hitler party. But what does "equalization" mean? Radical reductions in wages! Profits? Here they are:

How the Fascist Technique Works
At the beginning of May, in a Berlin shop, the Free Trade Union shop councilors were "equalized," i. e., dismissed. In their place was put a commissarial shop councilor who had had nothing to do with the shop. The "equalization" itself is carried on as follows: an S. A. storm division occupies the shop, the men are compelled to take part in the organization ceremony of the NSBO, the so-called reporter uncovers some monstrous nonsense, promises paradise and threatens, "Whoever does not immediately enter the NSBO will be regarded as an enemy to the state and arrested." That's all. The Nazi press says, "Again the NSBO was able, after long, patient, comradely clarification to smash the last bulwark of Marxism. The men received the report of our excellent party comrade X. Y. with enthusiasm, and spontaneously entered the NSBO, all except a few unteachable, and them too we shall convince in the course of time of the great ideas of Adolf Hitler. Heil Hitler!"

Eight days later, in the middle of the work, a shop meeting of the NSBO was suddenly called. The Nazi leader, an old foreman, known to be the worst hanger-on in the company, opened the meeting after first throwing out the non-members, i. e., the class-conscious workers. The commissarial shop councilor (a Nazi leader) took the floor. "The firm faces bankruptcy, it has been operating at a loss for months. Either the men will have to take a wage cut, or the firm will close up and move out of town, where it has been promised free land and also capital, if it establishes a shop there." A commission is chosen to negotiate with the firm as to the amount of the wage cut.

This commission, which, naturally in accordance with the customs of the Hitler regime, has nothing to say, came back with a wage cut. The office employees' salaries were cut 33.12 percent. The workers' wages 25 percent. The office employees accepted this dication. With the workers it was more difficult. Two meetings broke up. The ordinary proletarians understood splendidly how to take away the force of all the objections of the (Nazi) district leadership. Only when the commissarial shop councilor dictatorially ordered the discharge of two fellow-workers who had taken a prominent part in the defense against the wage

Lay Basis for Real Federation of Jobless in Ohio

The main accomplishment of the Mahoning Valley Workers' United Front Conference was the endorsement of the Federation of Unemployed Workers League of America and the calling of another conference on July 16 for the purpose of organizing a local federation. This proposal, which was made by Newby of the Left Opposition, was accepted unanimously by the conference of 65 delegates who represented 30 organizations with approximately 5,000 supporters. The local federation will, of course, be allied with the national federation; it will probably be called The Federation of Unemployed Workers Organizations of Mahoning and Trumbull Counties.

Because the conference failed to rally the support of any of the A. F. of L. locals and was therefore composed of representatives of C. P.-influenced fraternal, defense and unemployed organizations, on the one hand, and sections of the Ohio Unemployed League and various labor groups on the other, it was decided to limit the conference, for the most part, to the problems of the unemployed. The lack of time also made such a limitation advisable. But it was agreed that the broader problems of the working class should be brought forward for action in the newly formed federation. However, the usual resolutions in regard to social and unemployment insurance, immediate relief, evictions, endorsement of relief march, struggles to free Mooney and the Scottsboro Boys, etc., were adopted. The conference also hopes to make an attempt to influence the state and national conventions called by the Ohio Unemployed League.

The conference was sabotaged by the A. F. of L., the Socialists, and the Musketiers. (Perkins of the C. P. L. A. sat in as an observer but did not submit a credential or take any part in the discussion, etc.) The L. O., however, played a very active part in spite of its small forces. The proposal for the Preliminary Conference came from an Oppositionist who was chosen to be on the Call Committee. The conference was opened by a member of the L. O. who also acted successfully as an authorized representative of the national office of the Federation of Unemployed Workers League of America. Furthermore, the Communist League of America was the only organization to submit in its own name, a written set of proposals for this particular conference a copy of these proposals was given to every delegate. Newby of the L. O., was chosen to continue with the other Call Committee members to serve on the enlarged committee which is to prepare the Federation Conference.

A GERMAN OPPOSITIONIST CONDEMNED TO 5 YEARS
BY THE FASCISTS
R., Germany.—(In the Sunday of the Reichstag elections, there was a clash between S. A. troops and workers over a red flag that had been hoisted on one of the house-tops. The police arrested arbitrarily two comrades, R. Riess and Erich Neumann and turned them over to the Fascist Special Court. There was no evidence that could be presented against them, especially not against the latter. The court simply "assumed" that he was guilty and sentenced him accordingly.)

Comrade Erich Neumann is a veteran of the labor movement and has enjoyed special prestige in his home town. As an upright and honest functionary he realized the weaknesses and shortcomings of the labor movement and did his bit to fight against them. For this reason he also faced expulsion from the party in the course of the last year for "counter-revolutionary" fractional work. But since the whole party section stood solidly behind him, the bureaucracy had to refrain from expulsion. Today, the "counter-revolutionary" is one of the first victims of the Fascist Special Court.

THE SOCIAL DEMOCRATIC PARTY OF GERMANY
DECOMPOSES
In Karlsruhe the Vorwaerts has reappeared as a social democratic weekly. Wels and Stampfer are publishing it with the aid of the Second International. But the German party takes a negative attitude against the emigrants. The new leadership, under Westphal and Kuehnster, holds on to the sub-mission tactic; side by side there is a strong current for a reform from top to bottom, and further, a current for the creation of a new Independent Socialist Party. But this much is certain: Wels and Stampfer, the tendency of the "New Vorwaerts", are completely isolated. We shall return to these developments later.

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE COMMUNIST PARTY, U. S. A.

To the District Comm.,
Dist. 2, C. P. U. S. A.

Dear Comrades:

On Wednesday, June 28, an open-air meeting of the N. Y. Branch of the Communist League of America (Opposition), at Pitkin and Bristol Streets was broken up by members of the party and the Y. C. L.

Breaking up street meetings of opponent working class organizations is not a working class or Communist practice. It has been condemned by every responsible working class organization. It has been condemned by the Communist International and the Communist Party of the U. S. It can result only in discrediting the people and the movement which practice it. Such tactics will repel workers who are moving towards Communism. Moreover it plays into the hands of the police who are looking for pretexts to break up workers' open-air meetings.

We call upon all party and Y. C. L. members and all workers generally to put a stop to this anti-working class practice. We call upon the District Committee of the C. P. to take the necessary steps to see that the members of the party and Y. C. L. conduct themselves as workers and Communists at workers meetings.

Comradely,
NEW YORK BRANCH, COMMUNIST LEAGUE OF AMERICA (OPPOSITION).

C. P. Expels A. Goldman Prominent I. L. D. Attorney Answers Party Charges

The Daily Worker recently reported the expulsion of Albert Goldman, long standing party member and leading counsel of the International Labor Defense in Chicago, from the official party ranks. A whole series of charges were filed against him. In a statement issued by comrade Goldman and reprinted below, the expelled comrade discusses the merit of these charges on the basis of fact and his own view of the expulsion. Comrade Goldman has held a public meeting on the whole affair in Chicago, an account of which is given below.—Ed.

Chicago, Ill.—Three hundred party members and sympathizers attended a meeting on June 28, called by comrade Albert Goldman, on his expulsion from the Communist party. The expulsion of comrade Goldman, who has been a party member for many years and whose activity in the courts of Chicago on behalf of the revolutionary workers is the talk of the movement, caused a surprise and resentment, unexpected by the local Stalinist bureaucrats.

The subject of the meeting "Criticism by Expulsion" was an extremely timely one. Comrade Goldman traced the origin of his conflict with the party leadership on the question of the united front and on other fundamental questions relating to the revolutionary strategy and tactics of the Communists. His attempts to iron out these differences within the confines of the party were rendered impossible because of the stranglehold held by the bureaucrats maintain. Goldman pointed out that in every dispute he had with the party, his position was distorted and violated, simply because he was never given the opportunity to make his point of view public so that the membership could understand it.

This bureaucratic control of the party and the lack of inner democracy or discussion, Goldman pointed out, was not a local phenomenon, but arose directly out of the conditions in the Russian party and can be traced back to the struggle against Trotsky and the Left Opposition, over the fundamental questions of the revolution. Goldman showed that his attempts to invoke a discussion on the question of the united front in general, and specifically on the defect in the party leadership, that exists by retaining the rank and file in a state of ignorance and blind obedience. The speech had a profound effect upon these present and a lively discussion ensued. In the discussion comrades Poindexter and Becker spoke, together for forty minutes, on the party position. The speeches were a defense of the party bureaucracy. Extremely tragic was their view on Germany—where they indignantly refuse to

America Cracks Whip at London. Ruthless Policy Splits Confab

Lays Down Law to Rivals -- Hands Off the U. S.
'Domestic' Problems First, 'International' Questions Later. Roosevelt Ends 'Stabilization' Plans.

The current crisis in the London economic conference, brought on by Roosevelt's sharp note attacking the attempt to stabilize the American dollar in the international exchange market, has brought out openly and sharply the fundamental contradiction of the whole conference: the contradiction between the national organization of the power of the bourgeoisie and its international interests. Of all the imperialist powers represented at the conference, the United States is taking the most aggressive measures to concentrate all power in the hands of a small inner circle of the topmost levels of the bourgeoisie, and to interlock the apparatus of the national government with this concentrated capitalist power. Therefore it was only natural that the contradiction between the national and the international organization of the dictatorship of the bourgeoisie should find its sharpest expression in the activities of precisely the American delegation at the conference. That is also why the American delegation, which showed superficially such vacillations and uncertainties in its proposals to the conference, was precisely the only which came out with a clear-cut statement on any subject—and that statement was "No" to a project of international collaboration in the stabilization of the foreign exchanges.

Least of all countries is the government of the United States willing to give up even temporarily, even in part, any of its rapidly increasing control over the processes of readjustment within its national economy. Roosevelt's statement was quite explicit, that "The sound internal economic system of a nation is a greater factor in its well-being than the price of its currency in changing terms of the currencies of other nations." When he goes on to add, "Restoration of world trade is an important partner, both in the means and in the result," he shows clearly that this internal mobilization and concentration of control is directed toward domination of world markets by greater power in international struggle, not by international agreement.

The later statement of the American delegation, amplifying the note struck by Roosevelt, that "We are interested in American commodity prices; what is to be the value of the dollar in terms of foreign currencies is not and cannot be our immediate concern," reinforces the hypocrisy and deception of the Roosevelt statement.

What they say is "First let us carry through our policy in America, then we shall come to an agreement with the rest of the world"; what they mean is, "We want to carry through our policy in America without interference from the rest of the world so that

THE STATEMENT OF COMRADE GOLDMAN

Even a cursory analysis of the statement of district eight with reference to my expulsion shows that the main reason for the expulsion is my view on the united front tactic, especially as applied in the Chicago united front action of the unemployed workers in October, 1932; my opinion of the tactics of the German Communist Party in the struggle against Fascism; and my criticism of the method of the calling of the Free Town Mooney Congress.

My violation of discipline at the Mooney Congress, the factor that led to my expulsion, is really incidental. (Continued on Page 4)

Archbishop Benjamin 'Blesses' USSR FSU Leaders Thank Wrangel Priest

New York, N. Y.—On Friday evening, June 30, a long haired and long bearded Russian priest Archbishop Benjamin, wearing a cassock with a big cross on his chest appeared at the New York Labor Temple on 14th Street and delivered an anti-Soviet propaganda speech, pure and simple. His secretary, appearing in the same attire, translated the speech into English. A White Guard meeting you think? Not at all. You are mistaken.

Paradoxical as it may seem, this meeting was arranged by the "Friends of the Soviet Union". The F. S. U. actually invited an enemy of the Soviet Union to deliver from its platform a speech that was nothing but a slander against the working class government from beginning to end. The Archbishop admitted having been arrested by the Bolsheviks in 1920 and having fled with the counter-revolutionary army of General Wrangel.

For all of this he received thanks and hand-shakings from Dr. LeRoy, who acted as chairman of the meeting, and B. Friedman, district secretary of the F. S. U., both of them members of the C. P.

The auditorium was filled with a mixed audience, mostly workers, a number of whom were party members and sympathizers. The meeting was advertised in the party press and through posters in the Workers Center. There were a number of White Guards present as was demonstrated by the applause given whenever the speaker emphasized the strength of the church over the Soviet Government. Here are some of the remarks made by the Wrangelite priest:

"There are a hundred million Christians in the Soviet Union. Ten million very courageously proclaimed their Christianity.

"Faith is growing in the Soviet Union due to suffering....

"The Greek Orthodox Church has a great future in the Soviet Union....

"We shouldn't oppose the Soviet Union with reaction, hatred, and violence since its existence is the will of God.... (1).

Later on he pointed out, "that Hitler's government is also due to the will of God." And further, he summed up with an appeal: "If you could do anything to relieve the Church from suffering, please do so. If the church continues to suffer it is God's will." And so on ad nauseum.

The report of the N. Y. Times on the next day quotes: "The religious zeal of the Russian people is growing daily. Suffering is the best cure for a declining Christianity."

Now let the workers judge for themselves whether these words are pro or anti-Soviet propaganda. The workers looked at each other in confusion, shrugging their shoulders, not knowing what all this meant. What added to the confusion and disgust was the chairman's remarks

Pocketbook Strikers Win Demands from Morris White Co. in Struggle

New York, N. Y.—The strike of 4,000 pocketbook workers is the best answer to the demand for open shops of the Industrial Council of Leather Goods Employers Association. In the first week of the strike 25 non-union shops were stopped from work. The response of the workers is excellent. The strikers are picketing the shops daily. What is necessary now is mass picketing and mass demonstrations in the market to spread the strike to the rest of the scab shops.

In the last issue of The Militant we wrote an analysis of the conditions in the Morris White shops where the workers are forced to a starvation level. Today we can show that through the militancy of the workers in the Morris White shop in N. Y., this boss was forced to settle with the union and concede to the union demands:

- (1) 40 hour week;
- (2) No hour week and readjustments;
- (3) One week trial period and the minimum wage scale enforced;
- (4) Unboulization of the Bridgeport shop;
- (5) 44 hours for the Bridgeport workers instead of the 49 hours they worked previously;
- (6) A raise in wages for the workers, etc.

The agreement has not been signed as yet. Morris White employs 250 workers in N. Y. and 150 workers in Bridgeport, Conn. Criticism should be made of the union officials for their failure to state specifically exactly how they intend to have the workers of Bridgeport labor under the same conditions as the workers in N. Y. The danger is that the conditions of the Bridgeport workers will not be raised to the level of the conditions in N. Y. The workers in both cities will be seriously affected if such a situation develops.

Another such firm is Rosnick Bros., which has a so-called union shop in N. Y. and two shops out of town, in Holyoke and Springfield, Mass. Settlements with these shops and conditions different from those in N. Y. will result in un-dermining the conditions of the workers in this city. Then the employers will play the same dirty game against the workers in N. Y. and out of town.

We warn the workers of these shops to see to it in time so that settlements of out of town shops will be made on the same basis as those in N. Y. The workers of the shops should have no illusions that the present leadership will enforce the agreement. They must be on guard to insure the enforcement of the new agreement.

Our "Fraternal Club" administration is more interested in the Industrial Recovery Bill than they are in the enforcement of the agreements for better working conditions. Pocketbook workers, on guard!

AMONG THE YOUTH

Break United Front at Chicago Anti-Fascist Meet

Chicago, Ill.—The Chicago Stalinists, like those of all other cities, following the appearance of the Communist Manifesto, appealing for national united fronts with social-democratic organizations for the purpose of aiding the victims of German Fascism, issued a call for a local united front. We shall deal here with the "vest pocket" nature of this united front nor of its tendencies to dissolve itself into a permanent organization. This body, in line with its work, planned a demonstration to be held in Chicago on June 24th.

Some weeks later, through the initiative of the "Arbeiter Ring Mittel-Schule" a United Front Anti-Fascist Youth Conference was held. (A real united front). Throughout the conference the representatives of the Spartacus Youth Club, who constituted the Left wing of the conference, waged a relentless struggle against the bloc of the Stalinists with the Right wing in an effort to establish the right of organizational independence, etc. As in every struggle, the Stalinists vacillated from one position to another. The S. Y. C. carried forth a consistent battle and in spite of our uncompromising position against the Right and Center wings of the conference, won the respect of every delegate present. For this we received an adequate reward.

Spartacus Speaker Chosen By Conference

The Youth Conference had agreed to support the demonstration of the adult conference. For this the adults promised us a speaker at the demonstration. The Stalinists at the Youth Conference who, we must remember, supported originally the Right wing on every important political question, expected as a reward for this that the Right wing would support their nominations and motions on all organizational questions. For speaker 2 nominations were made—Morris Fine of the Y. C. L. and Nathan Gould of the Spartacus Youth Club. To the great surprise of the Stalinists the latter was supported by every delegate but the Stalinists and was elected speaker.

A motion was promptly introduced which provided that we attempt to have two speakers and that the second speaker be Fine. Accordingly it was agreed upon that, if two speakers of different organizations in the Youth U. F. should speak, they be permitted to represent their respective organization from the platform.

From the outset the Stalinists broke the United Front. First they revised a leaflet that had been accepted by the publicity committee, without consulting any member of the committee. Second, they attempted to prevent our comrades from selling the Young Spartacus at the demonstration. At the same time they sold Young Workers, Labor Defenders, etc. Third, Y. C. L. members demanded that we leave the demonstration and promised to beat us if we didn't. Of the other and most important breaches we shall speak later.

Stalinist Disruption

To the Stalinist chairman they announced that there was to be only one youth speaker and he was not to be, as the conference decided, comrade Gould, but comrade Fine. After a long argument the chairman agreed to permit Gould to speak, but announced also that Fine would speak. Further, against all decisions of the conference, they placed upon the box George Smirkin of the Y. P. S. L., an organization within the Youth U. F. conference. This conference had made no nomination of Smirkin, nor was he picked by a conference emergency committee (there was none). But without anyone knowing why or wherefore, Smirkin was placed upon the box. This fact, plus the fact that Fine was scheduled to speak, gave Gould the opportunity to speak as a Left Oppositionist.

The thought of an Oppositionist speaking at this "strictly" Stalinist affair, to almost 5,000 workers, most of whom were C. P. members or sympathizers, threw terror into the hearts of the bureaucrats. John Williamson in his frenzy saw himself before the control commission charged with "Trotter Liberalism". The workers listened silently to the first few sentences of the speech. When Williamson was convinced of the Oppositionist nature of the speech he lost control and proceeded to shout like a hysterical woman.

Fearing the criticism he proceeded to work up a lynch spirit. "Counter-revolutionary!" he shouted. "Out with the Trotskyists!" "He can't attack our party!" "Enemy of the Working Class!" "Stop him!" "Throw the renegades off!" Etc. Thus he carried forth the historical tradition of Stalinism.

body after this outrageous affair. Following them were scores of workers who protested the Stalinist violation of the united front. Stalinism fears more than anything the criticism of the Left Opposition. Germany is their vulnerable spot.

Neither than allow the L. O. to speak the truth they will smash the demonstration, smash the united front, smash the Left Opposition, annihilate the speaker.

That is the explanation for the program spirit whipped up against us, but more than that it is the explanation for the Stalinist tenacious grip upon the united front from below; an explanation of its non-aggression pact.

It is not because they desire to win the Socialist leaders over to the united front that the Stalinists enter to them on the question of organizational independence and the non-aggression pact. It is the hounding fear of criticism; fear of exposure by the other organizations in the united front. Hence the non-aggression pact; no criticism of organizations in the united front. Short opportunism, but a splendid assurance for bureaucrats.

—MAXIMILLIAN.

A Resolution of the Int'l Left Opposition

Declaration of the International Left Opposition (Bolshevik-Leninists) to the Youth Conference at Paris

The workers of the world stand at a turning point. After a series of victories of imperialist reaction, particularly Fascism, the proletariat will yet have to pass through years of hard tests and difficult struggle. The continuity of the revolutionary movement can be assured only on the condition that new phalanxes of convinced and tested fighters emerge from the younger generation.

The social democracy, as its flight before Hitler very clearly shows, is able to educate lackeys, but not fighters. The young workers have nothing to learn from the school of this party. The school of Marx and Lenin, alone, shows them the way to break through the imperialist and Fascist hell into Socialist society.

Although we appeal to the workers to rally around the banner of the Communist International we deem it necessary to clearly point out that the revision of the tenets of Communism and the bureaucratic degeneration of the regime powerfully fetters the influence of the C. I. on the young workers and renders their correct revolutionary education difficult.

The revision of the doctrine has found its worst expression in the theory of "socialism in one country" which undermines proletarian internationalism and covers up all sorts of petty bourgeois, reactionary, imperialist and nationalist tendencies in the workers ranks.

The International Left Opposition (Bolshevik-Leninists), in a series of programmatic documents, on the basis of the experience of the last two years, has denounced the fatal distortions introduced into the theory and practice of Communism by bureaucratic Centralism. It is necessary, here, at a youth conference to strenuously protest against the bureaucratic regime instituted in the party which stifles the internal life of the Communist vanguard and closes the road to an independent development of the youth.

Blind obedience is a virtue in a soldier of a capitalist army but not in a proletarian fighter. Revolutionary discipline is founded on collective thought and collective will. A supporter of the theory of scientific Communism does not believe anything on word. He judges everything by reason and by experience. The youth cannot accept Marxism on command, it should assimilate it for itself through an independent effort of thought. This is precisely why the youth should not only have the opportunity to educate itself but to make mistakes in order to rise through its own errors to the Communist conception. Bureaucratic and factional discipline has crumbled to dust at the moment of danger. Revolutionary discipline does not exclude but demands the right of checking and criticism. Only thus can an indestructible revolutionary soldiery be created.

The young worker needs leadership from the party. But this leadership should not be by command. Where coercion is substituted at each step for persuasion all living breath leaves from the organization and with it the living people.

Not only must we resist but mercilessly destroy the use of repression, slander and physical methods in the struggle of the different groupings and factions inside the workers movement. These invidious methods have nothing in common with the arsenal of Communist education and put into circulation during the last ten years by the Stalinist bureaucracy have poisoned the atmosphere of the proletarian vanguard, particularly in the youth, and isolated the organizations from the broad working masses. Here also we must purify the revolutionary doctrines from Stalinism to drain the internal regime in order to set the Communist International back on the path of Marx and Lenin.

Lessons of the Leninist United Front Tactic

THE UNITED ACTION OF THE WORKING CLASS

The confusion within the ranks of the working class on the question of the United Front is primarily due to the present leadership of the Second and Third International. All leaders who fear a test in action, leaders who fear a comparison of policies, leaders who retain control of their organizations by bureaucratic methods—and those who are the direct agents of the capitalist class within our ranks—fear the united front of the working class. The pressure of the masses through the united front places a heavy burden upon all misleaders and non-Marxian leaders. That leadership which has a correct policy and uses a little common horse-sense will be favored to the highest degree by united action of the working class.

For these reasons, many organizations are systematically kept out of united front action or are mis-educated purposely by leaders who cannot stand the test. Those leaders who fear the test demand either a non-aggression pact (social democrats) or leadership of the movement conceded in advance (Stalinism), where the workers are told to join the united front under Communist leadership. Other forms used by these misleaders and non-Marxian leaders are the united front from below, or the united front of leaders alone, or the united front of leaders in negotiation behind closed doors. All such "united fronts" are false, are a denial in substance though not in name, in order to cover up and to avoid the test in action which flows from the Leninist united front.

The two most powerful working class organizations in the world, the social democrats and the Stalinists have been miseducating the reformist and revolutionary working class on the question of the united front. Likewise, the reactionary A. F. L. leadership fear this powerful working class weapon. The most criminal of all in miseducating the working class, are the Stalinists. Why—because we expect nothing else but confusion, opportunism and miseducation from the socialist and reactionary labor leaders; such leaders join united action only after mass pressure forces them into the united front; such leaders openly oppose revolutionary Marxism as practiced in the Russian revolution by the Bolsheviks under the leadership of Lenin and Trotsky.

But those who claim to abide by the decisions of the Communist International, as the Stalinists do, and who in reality have systematically revised Marxism, must be exposed for what they are worth, all the more so because they have usurped the October Revolution and have under their influence the greatest number of revolutionists (that must be won over back to internationalism) to Marxism.

If we consider two periods of the history of the errors of Stalinism on the question of the united front, which by no means was the most harmful error, but which flowed from more basic deviations from revolutionary Marxism, we can realize how great is the confusion contributed to by Stalinism. On outstanding example, in the first stage of the blunders, was the united front with leaders, in the British General Strike and in the Chinese Revolution. In these struggles the Stalinists and their bedfellows, the Right wingers, threw overboard all the lessons and experiences of the Russian Revolution. They violated the A. B. C. of how to make a united front and to set the masses in motion and how to break a united front when the allies begin to break and openly betray the movement. After a series of such blunders and errors, the defeat of the Chinese revolution had the sobering effect of waking them up. But to wake up and to find the correct path—are two different things and the first without the latter will only lead to new mistakes. After burning their fingers badly while playing around with the leaders, the non-Marxian Stalinists swung to the other extreme, to "correct" the error without admitting the error, and thereby, the notorious "Third Period".

The opportunist Right zig-zag of the united front—from above—had the full support of the Right wing but the Stalinists' ultra-Left zig-zag—to the united front from below—was not consistent with the Right wing opportunist line of policy and the united front with leaders. Whereas, the British General Strike and the Chinese Revolution were the outstanding examples of the Right-Center (Bureaucratic) mistakes on the united front from above with leaders, the victory of Fascism in Germany is the crowning defeat and expression of the "united front from below".

As Trotsky says, Stalinism will go down in history as the leader of defeats. The wrong concept of the united front as well as the defeat is the result of a more basic revisionism of Marxism by Stalinism. Throughout this whole period the International Left Opposition has carried on a fight against the Stalinists and social democrats and other political currents and their position on the united front and since then, history has confirmed the correctness of our position on this tactical and strategic question as well as on more fundamental questions of Marxism.

A Delegate's View of the I. W. O. Convention

Bethlehem, Pa.—Over two years ago, on the initiative of the Left wing in the Workers' Circle, the International Workers' Order was organized. Simultaneously a call was sent out to the Hungarian, Slovak and Russian sick-benefit organizations for amalgamation. Each of these fraternal bodies approved the amalgamation proposal in special conventions.

A committee on constitution and by-laws was appointed by the central bodies for the entire amalgamated organization. The results of their labors along with the necessary changes made by the language sections, central and constitution committees were sent to the various branches only two weeks before the convention! Most of the branches called special meetings for the purpose of discussing the constitution and by-laws. The changes made or the approval granted by these branches were again sent to the central committee.

But to our great surprise we found, that in the Slovak workers' convention, for instance, a constitution committee of 3 was appointed, consisting of three functionaries and two rank and file delegates by the central executive committee of the Slovak section. This was reported to the convention and, of course, "approved"—through the use of steam roller methods.

This committee also made some changes so that the delegates now had four different drafts in their hands. Confusion resulted much to the joy of the bureaucrats.

The Chicago Convention. The convention of the language sections lasted for two days. Four days were spent in the joint sessions of all the delegates. More than 647 delegates participated in these joint sessions, making it more of a mass meeting than a convention. The most bureaucratic methods were used to jam through all the plans of the functionaries.

If absolutist, autocratic centralism is to be used anywhere it will certainly be in the I. W. O. The constitution gives the central committee all the privileges and the rights and the rank and file all the work and duties, without any rights!

Yet, for all its shortcomings, the I. W. O. is a workers' organization and has to be dealt with as such. This cannot be done in the abstract but by joining its ranks, actively participating in all of its activities; by struggle within it, its mistakes can be corrected.

No doubt, all sorts of names and epithets will be hurled at us by the Stalinist bureaucrats. But when we consider that there are about 1 million organized under the direct influence and control of the agents of the bourgeoisie, the reformists and nationalists, we can see how necessary it is to approach them with timely issues and recruit large numbers of them into the I. W. O. The timely issue now is social insurance and old age pensions. This is a political reform, it is true, but it will serve to unify the workers on a class basis.

The I. W. O. must be made a mass organization, a recruiting station for the non-class conscious elements, a reservoir of revolutionary support, a source of class education.

The I. W. O. can and will fulfill these requirements provided the rank and file is able to control its leaders. This duty falls heavily upon the Jewish workers, who drew from the Workers' Circle as a revolt against its reactionary leaders and bureaucracy. It is their duty and the duty of all the members not to permit the newly formed I. W. O. to be degraded and corrupted by any bureaucracy. The joint session of the convention decided to issue a manifesto addressed to the workers in the various fraternal orders. Various resolutions were adopted among them one on social insurance and old age pensions.

The most important feature of the I. W. O. is its class character and proletarian composition. It is one of the tasks of the Left Opposition to see to it that this organization becomes an effective instrument of support for the working class movement generally. —C. O.

COL. ROBINSON 1918 AND 1933

Stalin is most unfortunate in his interviews. Since the international scandal resulting from the publication of his talks with Mr. Campbell, the American giant-farm advisor to the Soviets, he has chosen his interviewers, very carefully. He was closeted with Colonel Raymond Robins for an hour and a half. Although the Colonel had promised not to reveal the nature of the discussion, he did let loose the following illuminating remarks:

"In 1918 I saw the first May Day celebration after the Bolshevik revolution—out at Khodinka field—on the personal invitation of Leon Trotsky. Fifteen hundred tattered soldiers of the Red Army, a few thousand 'Red Guards' of the armed proletariat and an inchoate throng of workers streamed past the reviewing stand."

"This year, after fifteen years, I watched in Red Square a parade of 15,000 picked troops of the Red Army with perfect discipline, equipment and every new device of mechanized warfare...."

"That first May Day all the stress of all the speeches and slogans was on the world revolution—All together for world revolution and proletarian brotherhood."

"This year there was not one banner or one word of international revolution. It was 'Collectivization! Every collective farm Bolshevik, every collective peasant prosperous! Industrialization! ... to win, you must gain technique'...."

"In 1918 they thought in terms of world revolution; in 1933, in terms of their own effort."—Reported by Walter Duranty in the New York Times of June 18, 1933.

The Two Sides of USSR Recognition by the U. S.

The recognition of the Soviet Union by the United States, with long term credits and trade relations is a desirable step and would be a most favorable condition to offset the difficulties and contradictions confronting the Soviet Union, primarily due to the wrong policies of recognition by the United States have been increased due to the difficulties pressing down upon American imperialism. America is by no means intending to change her stripes. It has become profitable for American capitalism to recognize the Soviet Union and unless some new developments upset the present relationship, it probably will.

Diplomatic and trade relations with capitalist nations by a workers' government are born of realistic necessity and constitute for it a temporary concession. It should not be explained to the workers as a peaceful co-existing of two systems, as Litvinoff does.

Likewise, the treaty with Fascist Germany and the latest moves in regard to the Chinese Eastern Railroad can only be understood if one realizes that they are necessary steps due to the mistakes of Stalinism and are a sign of weakness and not a sign of strength or the "victory of socialism".

With recognition, America will attempt to use her experts and agents inside of the Soviet Union to undermine the workers' government and to establish relations with the enemies and Thermidorian element. At the same time America, will be forced to help Germany find a way out, in order to save the billions invested there. Germany is already moving in the direction of attack on the Soviet Union, as the path of least resistance.

Imperialist recognition of the Soviet Union carries with it the danger of counter-revolutionary activity within the Soviet Union. Such action is to be expected. Our policy must be to overcome these contradictions carried with recognition by imperialism. It will be extremely difficult to overcome these difficulties with the policies of Stalinism. The Left Opposition must say this frankly. The Left Opposition, while understanding and approving the forced concessions such as the treaties with 'Fascist Germany, etc., must at the same time warn the world proletariat that these concessions cannot be overcome if the policy of Stalinism continues. The criminal policy of Stalinism in the Soviet Union and the C. I. must be replaced with a return to Marxism; the theory of socialism in one country and all that flows from it throughout the world Communist parties must be replaced with the Marxian theory of the Permanent Revolution.

Millinery Strike Progress in Los Angeles

In the last issue of The Militant there appeared a report on the militant strike now in progress in one of the millinery shops in Los Angeles, Cal. We publish below a press release issued by the Strike Committee on July 1, 1933:

STRIKE BULLETIN

STRIKE ON THE THIRD WEEK FINDS WORKERS OF GOLDEN BROTHERS MILLINERY SHOP DETERMINED TO CONTINUE UNTIL SUCCESSFUL TERMINATION

Los Angeles.—In spite of the brutal terror displayed by the infamous Red Squad against the workers of Golden Brothers Millinery Shop who are the third week on strike for:

1. Recognition of a Shop Committee and Shop Chairman.
2. That Golden Brothers take responsibility for the new shop and all agreements with the shop committee include the new shop.
3. That Golden Brothers obey the minimum wage law for women.
4. Equal division of work.
5. No wage cuts and no piece-work.

The strikers are just as determined now as they were on the first day of the strike to continue until a victorious settlement.

Examples of the extreme brutality of the Red Squad and the bosses of the Golden Brothers Millinery Shop have been shown by the arrests, frame-up charges and the high bails imposed upon the arrested strikers.

The Strike Committee and the Needle Trades Industrial Union appeal to all workers and sympathizers to give moral and financial support to the strikers.

Bring or mail all strike contributions to the headquarters of the Needle Trades Industrial Union, 155 S. Main St.

Is the Recovery Act a Fascist Measure

The dictatorial power embodied within the Industrial Control Bill which is now a law has been called by many, including the Stalinists, a Fascist measure. The Stalinists are well known to mislabel everything they take hold of. In Germany the Stalinists called the Brüning government, the Von Papen government, the Von Schleicher government—Fascist dictatorships. And thereby, they helped to disarm the German workers when real Fascism did arrive.

The Industrial Control Bill is not a Fascist measure. Every capitalist government is a dictatorship and just because transitional steps from the democratic form to the dictatorial form are taking place as a reflection of the further concentration and centralization of capital, that in itself is no proof of Fascism or of steps toward Fascism. The concentration and centralization of capital carries with it the centralization of government. Dictatorial measures are only one of the features of Fascism.

The common features between the Industrial Control Law and some of the measures of Italian Fascism lie in the fact that both contain forms of state capitalism. These common features can also be compared to some of the measures in Germany after 1918 when the social democracy introduced State capitalist forms.

As long as there is no serious working class pressure, as long as the working class of America do not threaten the capitalist rule, there will be no danger of governmental and state changes to Fascism. The Stalinist talk about the Hoover commission's Fascist measures and the Fascist measures of today will only disarm the workers to the real danger confronting the working class. We cannot replace the Marxian analysis of the Industrial Control Bill or any other capitalist measure by giving these measures high sounding names. In America the real Fascist danger, if one wants to talk about it at present, lies outside of the governmental structure and in the embryonic Fascist organizations. They will grow with the increased pressure of the working class against capitalism, unless the Communists know how to oppose them effectively.

The best help that Stalinism could render capitalism at this stage is to continue mislabeling as social Fascism and Fascist movements for which they have no understanding and as a substitute for a Marxian analysis. —H. O.

Boston, Mass.—On June 20th, the Socialist Party of Boston called a "united front conference" to help the Jewish bakers who have been out on strike for the last three months. The call was sent to all Right wing organizations; it was also in the press. However, Left wing organizations sent their delegates as well.

The conference was called to order by Arkin, the manager of the Boston Forward, who made a speech explaining the purpose of the conference. Then he proceeded to elect a credentials committee. This started a protest from the floor. Someone declared that it was proper to turn the conference over to the delegates, who would themselves elect a chairman and all the conference committees. Arkin agreed to this, but he insisted upon appointing a credentials committee first, in order to see who were the legally seated delegates so that they can elect a legal chairman. His reason for this procedure was obvious; he was preparing to oust the Left wing delegates. More protests from the floor saying that Arkin himself had not been legally elected to the chair.

Only Right Wing Seated

But Arkin insisted upon remaining chairman and made a suggestion to appoint a credentials committee. Many of the delegates who did not understand Arkin's reason for wanting to appoint rather than elect a credentials committee, voted for his suggestion and it was carried by a slim majority. Arkin proceeded to appoint his men with such rapidity that it was clear that his machine was well-oiled. The credentials committee went out to check up. It did not take them long for they knew in advance whom to seat.

In the meantime, Arkin called upon one of the bakers' committee to talk. The bakers made a strong appeal to everyone to help in the strike and to save the union. Criticism can be leveled against the bakers' union, which allowed the strike to drag out so long without themselves calling a conference for help. I won't go into details on this matter now. When he ended his speech, the credentials committee reported; recommending that all the Right wing organizations be seated, leaving out the Left wing. It said that there was another section to the report which would be given later, after all the conference committees had been elected. Again protests from all parts of the hall, demanding the full report of the credentials committee. Schlossberg, a delegate from the Workers' Circle and a sympathizer of the Left Opposition, asked for the floor to say a few words and to make a motion. Arkin insisted that he make the motion first and then speak. Schlossberg finally consented; and after making his motion that the full report be heard, he began to say a few words in favor of his motion. Arkin stopped him, declaring that he was not a seated delegate as yet and therefore could not speak. Other delegates insisted upon the full report, but Arkin, now and only becoming very democratic, hammered away on the table and insisted that a chairman must first be elected by the seated delegates. Protest was of no avail; a chairman was elected.

Ford Real United Front

Many of the seated delegates did not vote in protest of the procedure. Pineberg of the I. L. G. W. U. was elected and ruling with his hammer went over to the election of the other committees. The delegates again protested and after two hours of fighting with the Forward wing, succeeded in getting the full report of the credentials committee. It was found that the excluded organizations were of the Left wing: The Mothers League, Left wing schools, I. W. O. and Freiheit Gesangs Verein. Delegates who were seated protested against this exclusion. They pointed out that the united action was the main thing that could help win the main thing that the support of all organizations was necessary; and that this action was a hindrance. They also demanded that a baker get up to say whether he was in favor of splitting the conference. This was not granted for fear that the bakers would ask all the organizations to participate.

When it was seen that the play was for the devil; that nothing could be gained; that the conference looked like a madhouse with attempted fist fights; that it was already 10:45, many of the seated delegates walked out in solidarity with the ousted Left wing, making statements of protest. Amongst them were the delegates of Workers' Circle, I. L. G. W. U. and others.

Such is the united front of the Socialist party to help in the class struggle. It is now the duty of the Left wing to call a real united front conference to which it will invite the Socialist party and its organizations and show the working class how united action can be achieved to help the bakers.

On "The Fourth of August"

When people cannot answer basic arguments they hide behind secondary ones. The Brandlerites as well as the Stalinists, are clinging with their nails at the composition of the 5th of March 1933. If we leave aside the outbursts of moral indignation or mere insults, the objections reduce themselves to the following: (a) In 1914 the social democracy went over to the government of Wilhelm II; the Stalinist bureaucracy has not even given the slightest indication of going over to the Hitler government; (b) The C. P. continues to work, to publish, in a word, to struggle; it would be a mistake to "underestimate" its forces; the social democracy did not die after the 4th of August, it continued to exist, and even came to power.

No historical comparison retains its validity if it does not confine itself to certain legitimate limits. We are very well aware that the Stalinist C. P. G. is distinguishable from the pre-war social democracy, and that the 5th of March—as much by its character as by its results—is distinguishable from the 4th of August. We simply want to say by our comparison: in the same way that the party of Bebel finally terminated its progressive mission on the threshold of the war, so the C. P. G. has finally terminated its revolutionary role on the threshold of the Fascist dictatorship. To complicate this analogy by considerations which have no bearing on the questions means to show oneself incapable of concrete historical reasoning, that is, of dialectic thinking.

Lenin compared the peace of Brest-Litovsk with the peace of Tilsit. It is not difficult to make objections to this comparison by serving up dozens of elementary truisms: for Prussia it was a question of national independence; for the Soviets it was a question of safeguarding a new social regime where the peace was signed by the monarchy, here by the party of the proletariat, etc., etc. But all these respectable commonplaces do not tell us anything about the essence of the question which interests us. We were forced to sign the peace of Brest-Litovsk in order not to completely succumb before the enemy but to reassemble our forces for freedom: it is in this sense that one can speak of a peace of "Tilsit".

The same Stalinists and Brandlerites rose up against the analogy between the pre-Fascist regime in Germany ("presidential" cabinets) and Bonapartism. They enumerated dozens of features in which the Papen-Schleicher regime differed from classical Bonapartism and always ignored this fundamental characteristic which makes them similar: the preservation of the equilibrium between the two irreconcilable camps. There is nothing worse than that pseudo-Marxist thought which, full of conceits, stops just there where the question first begins. The analogy with Bonapartism, quite concrete, precisely defined, not only clarifies anew the role of the last Glottli cabinet maneuvering between the Fascists and the Socialists, but also throws a burning light on the present transitional regime in Austria. Now one can already openly speak of the profound, logical necessity of the period of "Bonapartism" transition between parliamentarism and Fascism. The example of Austria demonstrates the enormous importance which an exact delimitation between Bonapartism and Fascism has (or more exactly, should have) for the aims of practical politics, but formalistic thought, instead of a social analysis, gives an enumeration of ready-to-hand criteria, abandons an analogy very concrete and rich in content for pale platitudes, which do not teach us anything. It is punished for this in every new historic situation like the ox in the Russian fable who always finds himself before a new door.

"The social democracy did not die after the 4th of August". Do the quibblers mean to say that the slogan of a new party, proclaimed after the 4th of August was false? Obviously they do not, but that is precisely the question. The social democracy continued to exist after the Fourth of August, but only as the democratic labor party of the imperialist bourgeoisie. Its historical function had changed. It was that very thing which justified the birth of the Third International.

Do they want to tell us that the C. P. G., despite the catastrophe which has finished it off forever in the minds of the proletariat as the revolutionary party, will nevertheless continue to exist as a mass organization? We think that nothing justifies such a hypothesis: it rests on an abstract and formal analogy with the fate of reformism. The old Social Democracy united within its ranks elements of revolutionary realism with those of opportunist practice. The 4th of August finally cleansed it from the revolutionary tendencies and determined its transformation into a conservative democratic party. The Communist party posed a revolutionary task to itself and to the masses, which it always put forth and emphasized in a bitter struggle against the social democracy. It is precisely in this task that the Communist party proved bankrupt in the decisive test. It will not be regenerated as a revolutionary party. Can it continue to exist under another form, with other political functions? If it can, it will not be as a mass organization of the German proletariat, but as the purest type of an agency of the Stalinist bureaucracy.

Tha Limits of Historical Analogy. A Reply to Some Objections

No other political place remains for it.

Already on the morrow of the 5th of March one could have and should have formulated this prognosis on the basis of an understanding of the catastrophe in connection with the policy that had caused it. The only objection with any value at all in those days could be: perhaps the party will save everything, if, under the influence of the terrible defeat, it clearly and sharply changes its policy and its regime, to begin with, by openly and honestly admitting its own mistakes. On our part we believed even at that time, on the basis of all that has happened, that it was impossible to expect a miracle of a critical awakening; but even if that had happened it would not have saved the Communist party as an organization; there are political crimes which are unpardonable. But it is fruitless, today, to conjuncture on this theme. The test has already taken place in reality. There can be no question of a political awakening of the official party any longer. On the contrary, the last sparks of critical thought have been stifled. Nothing gives a better picture of the collapse of the CPG than the fact that on the morrow of the great catastrophe, instead of making a theoretical clarification of the events, it has exerted every effort to sweep away all the traces of it, by all sorts of insinuation, calumny, incitement and persecution.

In the guise of an objection, the example of 1923 might be cited, where the party also failed but did not collapse. We do not deny the importance and the lesson of this example: it is only necessary to draw the correct deductions from it.

British Group Leaves I. L. P. Statement Supports L. O.

EDITOR'S NOTE—The statement below was issued by comrades belonging to the Left Opposition fraction of the British Independent Labor Party. It was submitted to all delegates of the Bradford convention of the ILP, which in the Militant several weeks ago.

TO ALL COMRADES OF THE I.L.P.

At the Eastern ILP Conference, those comrades who have been striving toward a correct revolutionary policy will fight for the adoption of that policy by the ILP as a whole, but, whether they succeed or not, the question of our relations with the C.P. must be squarely faced. The British section of the C.I. is the only existing revolutionary party in this country. The undersigned members of the ILP believe that the place of revolutionary workers is inside the Communist Party. Recognizing that the present policy of the C.P. requires drastic changes, and appreciating fully the weaknesses of its tactics, we maintain that criticism of the C.P. is no legitimate excuse for staying outside.

The ILP, a Social-Democratic body, product of a past era, has its very economic basis from it. Therefore, correctly to criticize the ILP is to leave it, as a Party no longer able to play a progressive role. But the need, the economic basis for the C.I. is merely to attack its subjective policies, but never to challenge the fundamental basis of its existence. The R.P.C. (Revolutionary Policy Committee) accepts the fundamental basis of the C.I., and since new parties are the product of major political events, and cannot be created at the will of individuals, to pose the question of a new party outside both the C.P. and the ILP is a waste of precious time. The R.P.C. cannot build a substitute for the C.I.

But Marxists cannot, and should not, accept the programme and policy of any party without full and open discussion in the light of current events.

We, having discussed certain aspects of the C.P. policy, have concluded that there are certain weaknesses requiring immediate and adequate attention and discussion:

1. THE THEORY OF SOCIALISM IN ONE COUNTRY: This theory, advocated since 1925, and stating that socialism can be established in Russia independently of the rest of the world, is a travesty of the Marxist conception of world economy, and has led to a completely contradictory attitude towards revolutionary developments in other countries, leading alternately to criminal reformist opportunism on the one hand, and blind, panicky adventurism on the other. This, a complete denial of Lenin's policy, weakens the struggle for world revolution, and is the main source of incorrect C.I. policies.

2. THE UNITED FRONT FROM BELOW: This policy, abandoned now at the eleventh hour, has meant in actual practice, no united front at all and its consequences can most clearly be seen in Germany. The change of front on the part of the C.I., although belated, is welcome, and must be supported, but the fact that the change is made without admission of previous error—in fact, with a denial of a change—suggests a possible reaction, with further disastrous consequences.

3. THE AMSTERDAM ANTI-WAR CONGRESS: An example of the incorrect United Front from the top—with individuals, leaders, pacifists, clergymen, etc., but not with the Social-Democratic organizations themselves. A hotch-pot in which the C.P. is submerged, and takes no independent line.

4. DETERMINATION OF POLICY: Within the C.I. and the British C.P., all internal party democracy has been abolished. Policies and decisions come from the top, discussion being confined to their execution. The World Congress of the C.I., supposed to be held every 2 years, has not met since 1923, while during the last 3 years there has been only one C.P.G.B. congress, and that preceded by expulsions and suppression of effective criticism. Correctness is taken for granted, and those daring to question the policy of the centre are slandered and expelled. This is incompatible with the training of revolutionary leadership, and prepares the way for defections and confusions at times of crisis.

On the above points, we cannot accept the policy of the C.P. Nevertheless realizing that it is the only revolutionary party, we intend to enter it, to work as Communists, at the same time seeking, by every legitimate means, to change these points in its policy which we consider wrong.

We appeal to all revolutionary workers in the ILP to adopt the same position. Any comrades wishing to associate themselves with the attitude as stated above should write to the address appended.

Browder Criticises John Reed - - for Trotskyism

We quote from one of Browder's masterpieces appearing in the April Communist page 361. Browder told the John Reed Club to read "Ten Days that Shook the World" and comrade X criticized his speech. (Our emphasis—W. M. K.)

"But I want to reject the criticism made by comrade X. He declared the Russian workers did not need any John Reed. I think the Russian workers did need John Reed. Lenin thought so. Lenin was delighted to have John Reed in the revolution and sometimes, after the ending of the civil war, comrade Lenin went out of his way to cause to be printed in Russian John Reed's book, and more, he wrote a special introduction for this Russian edition, in which he recommended it to the workers of the entire world. Comrade Lenin did not do that for many books—you won't find many introductions by comrade Lenin. I want to read the introduction. It is important for the purpose of our agreement.

"With the greatest interest and with never slackening attention I read John Reed's book 'Ten Days that Shook the World'. Unreservedly I do recommend it to the workers of the world. Here is a book which I should like to see translated into millions of copies and translated into all languages. It gives a truthful and most vivid exposition of the events so significant to the comprehension of what really is the proletarian revolution and the dictatorship of the proletariat. These problems are widely discussed, but before one can accept or reject these ideas, he must understand the full significance of his decision. John Reed's book will undoubtedly help to clear this question which is the fundamental problem of the international labor movement."

"Here it is necessary for me to say something I wanted to say at the John Reed meeting. I had made a note of it and meant to include it in my speech, and here is where justified criticism comes in because this should have been said at that meeting. It is something I must say here. That is, that there are serious political inaccuracies and mistakes in John Reed's book and some of these were even pointed out by comrade Stalin. There are certain statements which do not correspond with historical facts and which fit in with the Trotskyist distortions of history. I should have pointed these errors out in order to vaccinate the readers against these particular mistakes." (E. Browder, The Communist, April, 1933.)

Lenin sponsors the book first by giving it an introduction, then by "unreservedly" recommending it; finally, by calling it "truthful and most vivid". Stalin and Browder find that there are "serious political inaccuracies and mistakes" and "certain statements which do not correspond with historical facts and which fit in with Trotskyist distortions of history."

How could comrade Reed indulge in these political inaccuracies before Trotskyism was discovered? How could Lenin fail to notice them? Or was he a Trotskyist too? What is wrong with Reed's book then? Why did he please Lenin and not Browder and Stalin?

Read the book and judge for yourself.

Austro-Marxism Retreats...

Vienna, Austria.—Several weeks ago the Arbeiterzeitung (central organ of the Austrian social democracy) published an editorial justifying the policy of the social democratic leadership and pointing out that up till then only "outposts" had been evacuated. What do these "outposts" look like? We will attempt to let the facts speak for themselves by drawing up a review of everything the Austrian working class, led and betrayed by the Austrian social democracy, has allowed to be snatched away from it without a struggle in the course of the last few months.

Freedom of Press and Assembly Destroyed

On the basis of the War Powers Act, the press law is revised backwards behind that of 1862 and the law of assembly backwards behind 1867. All of the labor press is submitted to pre-censorship. The holding of meetings must be announced 8 days in advance, a provision which actually stifles the working class in a period of such high political tension as the present. Marches and open meetings are prohibited "until further notice". On the basis of these provisions, the following were banned: 75 party meetings of the social democracy on March 10, the main annual event of the Vienna Free-thinkers on March 18, a meeting of the Friends of the Free School for Children Society on April 26; the annual conference of the social democratic women's organizations of Vienna was dispersed on April 28. In the middle of May, the conference of the Tenants' League was prohibited, etc., etc. On May 9 pre-censorship was also instituted for posters. Distribution of leaflets is made liable to arrest.

Streets Are Made Free... For the Reaction

"The State secretary for the maintenance of safety" announces on April: "In view of the demonstrations which have of late taken place in the form of street carnivals, especially on the side of the social democrats.... the safety authorities are hereby advised to apply the sharpest means provided for by law against all such attempts." The parade of the working class for the First of May (traditional since May 1, 1890) is banned, threats are issued against all attempts.

Fascism Receives Arms

While the Ringstrasse (main thoroughfare) is shut off for the workers by mounted forces and machine gun detachments on the First of May, the Austrian federal army marches in review down the streets. On May 14 an exception to the law is granted and thousands of Hitlerian men goose-step throughout the town.

On the basis of the War Powers Act the collective agreements of the bank employees are nullified. Wage cuts are instituted for Social Insurance employees. Railroad workers get cuts in overtime remuneration and in pensions that go as far as 40 per cent among the lower ranks.

Against Versailles

While thundering against the Treaty of Versailles and the dismemberment of Germany for the creation of the Polish Corridor, Hitler can make no serious move in that direction. Bankrupt Germany dare not risk a war with military superior France without a comparatively long period of rapid industrial revival and outside, particularly American, economic support. Hitler cannot free Germany from its "slavery of interest."

Neither can he stand still. The pressure of German capitalism upon the German working class, intensified by its defeat in the World War, are too great for that. So Hitler is compelled to act. He is forced to move toward war and from the logic of the situation it is quite conceivable that Fascist Germany may become the spearhead of an attack on the Soviet Union from the west while Japan attempts to grab Vladivostok and the Chinese Eastern Railway in the East. Soviet Union Menace to Capitalism.

It must be remembered that the workers' state is a constant bone in the throat of the capitalists. Its existence has been permitted not because Stalinism checked the world work of the Communist International but because of a lack of favorable conditions for intervention. As comrade Trotsky wrote more than a year ago, "To make intervention possible, a great, highly industrialized, and moreover European empire would be needed—one which would desire and be able, to take upon itself the principal weight of a holy pilgrimage against the Soviets. To be more accurate—a country would be needed which had nothing to lose. A glance at the political map of Europe will convince you that such a mission could be undertaken only by a Fascist Germany. More than that, a Fascist Germany would have no other road left to go. Having come to power at the price of innumerable victims, having revealed its bankruptcy in all domestic problems, having capitulated to France and consequently to such semi-vassal states as Poland, the Fascist regime would be inexorably compelled to seek some sort of a gambling way out of the contradictions of the international situation. A war against the Soviet Union would grow out of these circumstances with fatal necessity."

Foreign Interests in Germany

However, while the demands upon Germany have been reduced from time to time as the result of political and economic developments, particularly in the last two years, it is interesting to note that the amount of foreign-owned German bonds was estimated by the Second Committee of Experts at Basle in December 1931, at approximately 400 million Marks; foreign-owned shares and interests in German industries at between 2,500 million and 3,500 million Marks, and the amount of foreign-owned real property at approximately 2,000 million Marks.

The total amount of German foreign indebtedness on February 29, 1932 was estimated by the Statistical Bureau at from 25,600 million Marks (par value, 2382 cents) involving an interest service of approximately 1,225 million Marks per annum. Of this amount approximately 8,892 million Marks are owed to the United States alone, Germany's leading creditor, of which 3,227 million are in short term and 5,165 million in long term credits.

Such figures are interesting for two reasons. On one hand they shed light on the respite granted Germany by the Hoover moratorium and the reparations "settlement." The United States, in its role of the leading imperialist power of the world, granted Germany a breathing spell in order to prevent civil war and, if failing in that, to assist Hitler in his fight against the working class of Germany, thereby adding in not only averting a political crisis for Cen-

On April 9, the cabinet decides to form "voluntary auxiliary bodies". These are formed from the "self-defense" organizations already in existence. Into the auxiliaries (auxiliary police) are admitted: members of the Peasant Defense Corps, the Austrian Home Guards and the Austrian Storm Troops. All organizations furnishing auxiliary police are exempted from the law governing the wearing of uniforms. The task of the auxiliary police is evident from its composition.

The pressure of German capitalism upon the German working class, intensified by its defeat in the World War, are too great for that. So Hitler is compelled to act. He is forced to move toward war and from the logic of the situation it is quite conceivable that Fascist Germany may become the spearhead of an attack on the Soviet Union from the west while Japan attempts to grab Vladivostok and the Chinese Eastern Railway in the East. Soviet Union Menace to Capitalism.

It must be remembered that the workers' state is a constant bone in the throat of the capitalists. Its existence has been permitted not because Stalinism checked the world work of the Communist International but because of a lack of favorable conditions for intervention. As comrade Trotsky wrote more than a year ago, "To make intervention possible, a great, highly industrialized, and moreover European empire would be needed—one which would desire and be able, to take upon itself the principal weight of a holy pilgrimage against the Soviets. To be more accurate—a country would be needed which had nothing to lose. A glance at the political map of Europe will convince you that such a mission could be undertaken only by a Fascist Germany. A war against the Soviet Union would grow out of these circumstances with fatal necessity."

Capitalism has developed its productive forces to a point beyond the effective consumptive capacity of the world under the profit system. As a result, in many countries, the present crisis is primarily due to a glut of commodities arising from a narrowing of markets rather than from an increase in the level of production. In Great Britain, for example, by the latter part of 1929, production in many industries had not attained pre-war level. The output of coal was approximately 28 million tons less than in 1913. The British proportion of the world's output of pig iron was 13.2% in 1913 while in 1929 it fell to 7.8 percent; steel in 1913 was 10.2 percent and in 1929, 8.1 percent. Consumption of raw cotton had declined by 617,000 tons. Yet, during the first two years of the crisis British production had a further decline of approximately 30 percent. Although industrial activity was hardly above the years immediately prior to the war, nevertheless British capitalism was suffering from "overproduction."

Only Avenue of Escape for Capitalism

Due to this contradiction the various national units of world capitalism are compelled to expand. They must find additional foreign markets. This they can do only at expense of some other power and the Soviet Union is the one power all capitalists wish to destroy. They see in an attack upon it not only a chance to destroy a political menace, not only a possibility to shift the much needed reparations from bankrupt Germany to the USSR, but also a chance to obtain a potential field for further expansion—a possible avenue of escape from their present position in an almost blind alley.

However, while the situation points to a probable attack on the Soviet Union by no means does it follow that the Workers' Fatherland will be destroyed. On the contrary such an attack might apply a spark that would consume at least a large part of world capitalism in the conflagration of social revolution.

In conclusion, however, it must be pointed out that Stalinism with its neglect of world revolution (and particularly the German situation) from fear of provoking a capitalist attack, instead of preventing such an attack, has helped to transfer it from the realm of imagination to the sphere of probability.

Unemployment Insurance Payment is Restricted for the Great Bulk of the Unemployed to 20 Weeks (Formerly 30 Weeks) and for Some Even to 12 Weeks. Emergency relief is to be cut off or reduced drastically by July 1. Young workers up to the age of 25 are to receive no relief at all any more.

Strikes Are Prohibited

Through a "Law for the Protection of Economy against Stoppage of Work", political strikes are altogether banned and economic strikes in the "vital" industrial enterprises including printing plants). The provisions for penalties are much sharper than those of the penal code of 1853. An example: On April 27 the Viennese Bakers' agreement, in existence since 1923, is terminated summarily. The bosses refer to the above law as "valid" also for the baking establishments (it provides for a strike ban in all enterprises that are "vital" for maintenance).

Prayers Are Ordered

On April 14, compulsory participation in religious exercises is instituted in all schools, like in the old days.

Against the Constitution

The Christian Socialist members of the Constitutional Supreme Court resign their posts on May 23 and the government declares the Constitutional Court as suspended. "Therewith the legal basis, upon which the whole state life, and along with it, also the existence of the federal government, rests, has been destroyed.... thereby the Austrian federal constitution is in fact invalidated, every door and gate is opened for any and every coup d'Etat." (Arbeiterzeitung, April 24.)

As can be seen from all this, the advance of the reactionaries is a matter of the conquest, not of "outposts", but of decisive positions.

The Austrian government has, as it informed the "Austrian people" in its manifesto of March 8, "firmly decided" to "proceed with iron determination and with impassionate but hard perseverance" along the road it has taken.

What did the manifesto of the Social democratic party leadership say on March 9?</

C.P. Expels Albert Goldman

I was opposed to the joining of the Scottsboro issue with the Mooney issue. I was not given a chance at the Congress to explain my position. The joining of the two issues in such a mechanical manner was harmful both to the Mooney issue and to the Scottsboro issue. But I would have voted with the party had I been asked to attend the fraction meeting and given a chance to make my position clear.

But the expulsion had to come. The violation of discipline at the Mooney Congress was but the pretext. My views on the various problems confronting the American movement and the world movement are such that a conflict between myself and the party leadership was inevitable. If the party permitted freedom of discussion, that conflict would run its natural course within the party; but without freedom of discussion a breach of discipline is inevitable.

A typical example of the dishonesty typical of the party is the statement that I was expelled for a "willful misinterpretation." Without claiming that there is a sharp line of demarcation between a plain statement of fact or, in plainer English, a downright lie and an answer for the purpose of convenience, will deal with these two types of falsehoods under different headings.

The answer does not assume to enter into a detailed explanation of the various problems which I discussed in articles and speeches within the last eight months. It confines itself merely to a simple denial and a short explanation of all the distortions contained in the statement.

I. DISTORTIONS OF FACT

(1) "He (Goldman) was previously expelled from the Party for his opposition to the policy of the Communist Party in the Trade Unions."

I was never expelled from the party for that reason or any other reason. I was not opposed to the policy of the Communist Party in the trade unions, during the years 1920-25 when I was active in the underground party. I was opposed to the policy of some of the party leaders of those days in their tactic of the united front from above with the Hillman-Levine gang of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, a tactic which, at that time, killed the Left wing in the Amalgamated and which to a large extent explains its pitiable weakness at present.

The above falsehood has a source which, to those who are acquainted with events of that period, is quite obvious. Undoubtedly the secretariat accepted the word of that ignorant confuser par excellence, Robert Minor. It was he who asked me not to attack the Hillman leadership at the 1922 Amalgamated convention. It was he who was most completely taken in by the shrewd and slippery Hillman. It was he who fought me bitterly at the fraction meeting of the comrades in the needle trades, subsequent to the convention. There was a complete united front between him and Hillman against the Left wing. As a result of this unholy alliance, Minor took advantage of the vicious frame-up of Hillman and Levine against me, on the basis of which I was expelled from the Amalgamated as a spy.

Rumors pointing the finger of suspicion against me began to be circulated in the party two years after everyone knew about the frame-up and during which time I was very active in the underground party. I demanded an immediate investigation, and refrained from activity in the meantime. A committee to investigate was appointed, and not until the united front between Minor and Hillman was broken up did the committee come out with a statement branding the action of Hillman and Levine as a frame-up to get me out of the Amalgamated. I was then studying law and did not go back to party activity, but I was never expelled.

(2) "...Goldman at that time (during the united front conference held in October 1932 in Chicago) defended the leaders of the Socialist Party against the Communist Party position."

After a stupid and violent attack on Bordaberry and the Socialist Party leadership by Williamson of the Communist Party, an attack which alienated all the rank and file of the non-party organizations, I was called upon to make a collection speech. I stated that I, for one, would accept the Socialist leaders who came into the united front at their word, and would criticize them only on the basis of their action in the united front struggle. In an article in the December issue of The Communist, (an article which was not listed in the table of contents, and which was printed immediately after Williamson's reply—all for the purpose of giving as little prominence to it as possible) I developed my position and criticized my own statement. I refer everyone to this statement which I defended the leaders of the Socialist Party.

(3) "On the occasions he defended the position of the Second International and that of the counter-revolutionary renegade, Trotsky..."

He slandered the Communist Party of Germany...

...sentence in anything I wrote or to point to any statement that I made, indicating that I defended the position of the Second International. I have said many things about the united front, and about the German situation which were in agreement with Trotsky's ideas. I do not apologize for that. As there are many party rules, saying that one must first find out what Trotsky has said, and then say the exact opposite? The claim is constantly made that Trotsky was expelled for violation of discipline and not for his ideas. If that is so, (and I am not naive enough to believe it) is it not possible to agree with Trotsky and still be a good party member?

In the course of a discussion with the District Committee on my views, I explicitly stated that I do not consider Cannon and Lovestone counter-revolutionaries. I am still of that opinion. By virtue of what rule in the party or the Communist International is one liable to expulsion for such an opinion? If there is such a rule, let it be made public immediately!

In what way did I slander the Communist Party of Germany? By saying that its united front tactics were incorrect? Let me call attention to the fact that when the party leaders were grandiloquently proclaiming that the Communist Party of Germany will crush the Fascists, I was warning everyone of the impending calamity. It gives me no satisfaction whatever to say that I was right. The real truth of the matter is that when one criticizes the leaders of the party, it is called slander; and when the party leaders slander everyone who disagrees with them, it is called criticism.

(4) "He developed a theory that only a united front with leaders is possible."

What a shameful untruth! One must lose all hope in the possibility of a successful Communist movement when leaders can stoop to such misrepresentations. Fortunately we understand very well, that the Communist movement is only temporarily burdened with such "leaders," who depend upon lies and repression for their control of the Communist party. All I can say is, where and when did I say or write anything justifying this slander?

(5) "He persistently resisted the independent role of the party in the united front, objecting to every political criticism of the American Federation of Labor or the Socialist Party leaders."

I did not object to political criticism, but I did object to vile and stupid attacks which had the inevitable result of alienating all the non-party people from us.

(6) "The letter of the Executive Committee of the Communist International, he interpreted as agreeing with his position."

This charge is exceedingly humorous. I did not, as a matter of fact, make that claim. How could I make that claim, when my position was that we should criticize the Socialist leaders, but mainly on the basis of the issues involved in the particular united front action, whereas the Communist International came out with its advice to the various parties to refrain from criticism? It seems that many party members were of the opinion that my position was endorsed by the Communist International, and to counteract that opinion, the district leaders attributed it to me.

(7) "At the 'Free Tom Mooney' Congress, he made a speech in which he held the Communist Party and the Tom Mooney Molders' Defense Committee responsible for the absence of delegates from the Socialist Party."

I did not say a word about the Communist Party. In short, my criticism of the method of calling the Congress was that it was called under the auspices of one organization, whereas it should have been called by a provisional committee representing all tendencies in the labor movement. This very idea was advocated by the party about eight weeks before the Congress. I said that the ones who called the Congress thought of the united front tactic as something which permits one organization to invite all other organizations to its affair. One organization decides to have a congress or a hunger-march or what not, and then graciously sends an invitation to all other organizations to join it. I pointed out that the proper way is to make all organizations feel that they are participating in the calling of the united front conference. Had this been done, we would have been able to swing many more Socialist party locals and American Federation of Labor locals away from the reactionary leadership. The criticism was leveled at the Tom Mooney Molders' Defense Committee and not a word was said about the Communist party.

II. Willful Misinterpretations

(1) "Goldman developed a theory that there can be no united front of unorganized workers, therefore laying down a light wing theoretical justification against any activities in the shops were the masses of workers are unorganized."

A real gem of logic, worthy of the leaders of district eight! How the conclusion follows from the premise is a mystery which only the logicians of district eight can solve.

The statement I made in an article which was not published for one reason or other, but which the district eight bureaucrats misquoted and misinterpreted was that the united front presupposed the existence of organizations differing on fundamental principles, but agreeing to act together on some immediate issue; that the necessary attempts to organize the unorganized workers around some immediate issue would not be by any stretch of imagination be considered a united front. Where, then, does the idea that there should be no activities in the shops come from? Ask the leadership of district eight! They will tell you that to invite workers to one of our dances constitutes a united front that when Negro and white workers struggle together, it is a united front; and will probably furnish you with similar examples of their conception of a united front. Can we not, must we not, establish a school where district eight leaders and similar leaders could be compelled to attend classes in the A B C of Communism?

(2) "He also developed a 'Leftist' theory against the united front campaign of the Communist party in election campaigns, declaring that in the elections there can be no united front of the workers since the workers already support different political parties..."

He sharply opposed the policy of the Workers' Ticket charging that this is a reformist policy to appeal to the members of the American Federation of Labor and Socialist Party, to join with the Communist Party in the election struggles."

What a jumble of misrepresentations and half-truths! Had the article which I wrote on the subject been published, I could easily refer the reader to it and the whole issue as to what I wrote would be settled. But the article was not published, so that all I can do is to give its leading ideas. I said in that article that the united front has as its main purpose the involving of large masses of workers of different organizations in a struggle against the capitalist class on the basis of an immediate issue. I further stated that the main purpose of our parliamentary campaign should be the education of the workers in the principles of Communism; that this can best be done if the Communist party has its own candidates and conducts its campaign on its own platform; that a united front for the purpose of electing someone to a capitalist legislature is opportunistic. I did not altogether exclude the possibility of a united front on the parliamentary field, but very severely criticized the tactics as pursued in Chicago.

Why then deliberately lie in attributing to me as the reason for my opposition to the united front on the parliamentary field, "since the workers already support different political parties"?

Why give the absolutely false impression that my opposition to the Workers' Ticket was based on the fact that this is a "reformist" policy to the appeal to the members of the American Federation of Labor and Socialist Party, to join with the Communist Party in the election struggles?

Of course the lies and distortions have only one reason. To discredit with the workers who will never get a chance to read my reply to the slanderous statement.

(3) "He did not participate in any mass activity, and abstained from work in mass organizations, confining his activity to that of a lawyer, appearing in a number of cases in court, and occasionally as a speaker for the 'Friends of the Soviet Union'."

I do not of course claim that I did the most important work in the party. I did not organize any party units, nor did I organize any unemployed councils or industrial unions. But the statement above quoted leaves the impression that I handled very few cases and did practically nothing else besides.

For the last four years I have handled very few cases and did practically nothing else besides.

For the last four years I have handled hundreds of cases for the International Labor Defense. There were times when I appeared in court every day for weeks and weeks, spoke at least an average of three times a week, before different branches of various organizations.

I do not say this with any feeling that I did a lot for the movement, but simply to show the dishonesty contained in the above statement of the secretariat.

III.

If freedom of discussion were to exist in the party had I been given an opportunity to talk to the membership on the various problems that I raised in my articles; had two articles which I wrote dealing with the united front on the parliamentary field and with the slogan of amalgamation of the unemployed workers' organizations been published; had I felt that the district leaders were honestly opposed to me but were willing to permit me to discuss all the vital issues before the membership, I would now feel extremely vexed at myself for my breach of discipline at the Mooney Congress. I do not think that expulsion would have been merited, but I would feel that almost any other punishment would be well deserved. Communist discipline is something that cannot be taken too seriously. But when Communist discipline is used to trap a comrade who has ideas, it assumes a formal and obnoxious character, far removed from the ideas of Communist discipline as taught by Lenin.

Everyone knew I was a delegate to the Mooney Congress, I am quite positive that the fact that I was a delegate reached the ears of the leaders of district eight before the Congress convened. Why was I not invited to the fraction meeting where I should have been given a chance to present my views on the conduct of the Congress and on the advisability of joining the Scottsboro and Mooney issues? On the one hand, I am kept out of the fraction meeting and on the other hand, if I say anything contrary to the decision of the fraction, I violate discipline. "Heads I win, tails you lose!"

Yes, I violated discipline, but under the circumstances expulsion is not justified, and since expulsion was decided upon, it is obvious that the real reason is not my conduct at the Mooney Congress, but the fact that for the past six months or so I have dared to come out with theories of the united front tactic and with an explanation of the German situation not to the liking of the district eight leadership.

I cannot deny that expulsion would be a terrible blow. No real Communist would take expulsion from the party calmly. On the other hand, no real Communist surrenders the most cherished possession of a revolutionist, intellectual honesty and independence and integrity. Party membership and intellectual honesty should never conflict. If there is a conflict, if the party does not permit freedom of discussion within the limits of Communist discipline, if a party member must conceal his views in order to remain in the party, the expulsion is no longer a disgrace, but a badge of honor.

Woe to the party that must resort to repression and expulsion to compel members to agree with the leadership! Has it come to such a TWENTY TWO stage in the Communist movement? My expulsion indicates that it has. The affirmation of the expulsion by the Central Committee of the party will prove conclusively that there is no room for a thinking revolutionist within the party.

—ALBERT GOLDMAN.

Perspectives for American Labor

Although American capitalism is entering, or has entered, the upward swing of a new cycle, it is reasonable to assume that the perspectives of the near future point to a growing realization of the American masses.

While it might seem as if the United States stands as a refutation of Marxism, due to the fact that it possesses both the most highly developed forms of the capitalist mode of production and the least (or near the least) developed revolutionary working class, in reality this contradiction is no refutation at all. On the contrary, it can be understood to its fullest extent only by means of an analysis based on the larger content of Marxism.

The political lag of the American working class is the result of peculiarities of national development. In the past the consciousness of the American workers as a class rose to a certain level as a result of various stages of American economic development only to subside under the influence of a subsequent period of comparative "prosperity."

American historical development (with the opportunity of the frontier and the possibilities of individual escape from the working class by means of a limited success as a farmer, small merchant or professional man) operated as a safety valve preventing the rise of the American proletariat as a political factor in the social life of American capitalism. The American wage earner viewed himself as a potential capitalist rather than as a member of the working class. His ideology was that of the petty bourgeois and he failed to recognize the desirability of acting as a mass.

But today the peculiar historical conditions which drilled the philosophy of individualism so deeply into the minds of the American workers are no longer present. They are crumbling, or have crumbled, to the march of economic development. The frontier is closed. No longer is it possible for any appreciable number of workers to rise out of their class by becoming small farmers or by entering the permanently over-crowded professions. The small farmer has been reduced to the economic status of the "poor peasant" of Europe. American schools and colleges are turning out thousands of young persons, trained for professional service, for whom there is no employment. "The possibility of a success as a small merchant has been reduced to the neighborhood of zero by a rise in the minimum amount of capital necessary to start in business for oneself" and by the invasion of large scale capital (with its superior technique, greater control over sources of supply and similar advantages) into such hitherto neglected fields as retail distribution, to such an extent that in 1929 it made a total of 21.5 percent of all retail sales.

At the same time, American workers are beginning to realize that their interests and those of the capitalists represent two antagonistic poles.

They are becoming aware that a rise in productivity does not necessarily result in a corresponding rise in their so-called share of the national profit. And to this the fact that a cyclical recovery will not bring a substantial restoration of the depressed American standard of living and it is easy to believe that the awakening process will continue.

Labor power is a commodity. As such its true value is determined by the value of the physical minimum of requirements necessary to reproduce that labor power from day to day plus certain requirements dictated by natural conditions and by the particular social level of the United States. However, by reason of its being a commodity, labor power is amenable to the invisible laws governing all commodities. It is influenced by the factors of supply and demand, being forced below or carried above its true value according as the available supply of labor power is above or below demand. But with the tremendous technological advance of production in recent years there exists a permanent and relatively growing over-supply of labor power. While a cyclical recovery would cause them to rise slightly above their present level, as a result of the absorption of a part of the over-supply of labor power, from that point they would once more recede.

Thus we are led to believe that the period of "prosperity" existing between 1923 and 1929, as far as the workers are concerned, has passed never to return. It is estimated that improvement of productive technique has progressed to the point where a return to the production levels of 1923-29, which is not likely, could be made today with the re-employment of not more than 50 percent of the 16 million American workers unemployed at present. Thus, the United States will enter any period of cyclical recovery with a permanent industrial reserve army of at least 8 million persons. Nor will this army shrink. On the contrary, it is reasonable to presuppose its further growth. The technological displacement of workers will continue. Each year an influx of young persons who have attained "working age" will swell the ranks of available workers. So take it, all in all, it may be said that the American period of high wages is a thing of the past.

In 1929 the United States definitely joined Europe in a condition of general capitalist decline. Its industrial activity, held up by the export of capital between 1923-29, permanently slackened. The general crisis of capitalism laid it by the heels and today America is confronted by an accumulation of surplus capital seeking investment, excess plant capacity, over-capitalization in expectation of high monopoly profits, restricted markets and other phenomena characteristic of the period of capitalist decay.

However, this does not mean that cyclical variations are excluded. On the contrary, one is beginning to take place now. But all phases of the business cycle—bull, average production, boom and crisis—from now on, will occur on a generally descending curve in contradistinction to a formerly ascending one. They will take place within a restrictive circle dictated by the present stage of development of the international economic and social relationships of world imperialism. Things will be extremely short-lived and succeeded by crises of unusual length and depth.

Parliamentary Cretinism

Bordaberry's paper, Monde, are keeping watch over you! And, as if to complete the picture of political decay, the same number of the Rundschau prints a leading article on the present relations between Germany and Austria. A revolutionary phrasist relates that "for the first time" (!) in the relations of the two countries, "Hitler has recourse to reprisals against Austria to force measures of internal policy from that government." For the first time in the relations of two states! The article concludes with the following remarkable words: "The relations between Germany and Austria have never been, since the existence of the Bismarck, as bad as they are at this moment. Such is the practical result of Hitler's foreign policy."

It is somewhat unbearable to read this philosophy which is worthy of a conservative Privatdozent (professor). Hitler is conducting a policy of counter-revolutionary realism in Austria. He wins over the petty-bourgeois masses by digging the ground from under unstable Austrian Bourgeoisism. With obstinacy and perseverance, Hitler is changing the relationship of forces in his favor. He does not fear the straining of relations with Dollfuss. In that he distinguishes himself—and distinguishes himself to his advantage—from Otto Bauer and from... the Stalinist bureaucracy which does not view the relations between Austria and Germany from the standpoint of the class struggle but from the standpoint of diplomatic cretinism.

Moscow's enthusiasm for the Paris Congress called to replace the revolutionary struggle in Austria, and the indignation at Basel over the policy of Hitler who does not fear, in the struggle against the Austrian masses, to dispute with Dollfuss himself—"there is no animal stronger than a cat", says the mouse—this enthusiasm and this indignation complement each other as two forms of parliamentary and diplomatic cretinism. By a minute part the whole can be judged. In many cases one can precisely determine the sickness by a symptom. These two articles are enough—one in Pravda, the other in the Rundschau—to say: perhaps the Centrist bureaucracy has adequate means at its disposal to hire expensive halls in Paris and to publish bulky papers in Basel, but Bureaucratic Centristism as a revolutionary current is dead, it decomposes before our eyes and poisons the atmosphere.

London Meet Splits

We can more successfully attack the rest of the world."

To help cover up the real policies of concentrated attack on international markets, they set up a utopian nationalistic ideal of high prices, stabilized for a generation, of a nationally managed currency, of broader purchasing power for the masses in the face of rising prices, of improved conditions for agriculture as against industry, of a general return to the "prosperous period" of 1924-1925. The realities, however, are not stabilization but the wildest speculation; not the stimulation of agriculture, but the elimination of the small farmer; not greater purchasing power for the masses, but less purchasing power due to inflation and the tying up of the trade unions, hand and foot, with the ropes of the Industrial Recovery Act.

The combination of open force with sentimental hypocrisy, of ruthless driving toward a fixed goal with apparent vacillation, of an open splitting of the London conference with pious attempts to keep it going, are Roosevelt's distinct contribution to the technique of aggressive imperialism.

COMRADE MILICENT SHOOTER

We have received the sad news from abroad that one of the first supporters of the Left Opposition in England, comrade Millicent Shooter, passed away at her home in Helston, Cornwall. Comrade Shooter rallied to The Militant with contributions, both literary and financial, from its very inception. We wish to record our appreciation at the excellent Jimmy Higgins work she carried on to the limit of her capacity in Great Britain and our deep grief at losing a faithful comrade-in-arms, who remained with us to her last day.

The next issue of The Militant will contain an article by comrade Trotsky in reply to the critics of the History of the Russian Revolution.

Archbishop and F.S.U.

In this anti-Soviet speech: "In behalf of our organization, the F. S. U., we thank the Archbishop Benjamin and his secretary, Mr. Hieromonk Dimitri for being present here tonight." And then followed hand shaking between the two counter-revolutionary white guards and the two Friends of the Soviet Union, Dr. Le Roy and B. Friedman. Sarcastic laughter greeted this very dignified ceremony from various parts of the hall.

Open air meetings conducted by the Left Opposition are systematically broken up by the Stalinists while a class enemy is given all opportunities to express anti-Soviet propaganda from the platform of a party-controlled organization. Left Oppositionists are being expelled, not only from the party but also from auxiliary organizations by the same leaders who shake hands with White Guard Wrangellites. The earnest Communist must ponder over these facts.

Party members should demand an explanation from their leadership. Instead of repudiating this affair the Daily Worker has maintained complete silence in it. The proletarian elements in the F. S. U. (if there are any) should demand an accounting from their leadership for this shameful business.

The Left Opposition must sharply condemn this dangerous infamous stunt and the attitude of the party leaders, who by their silence share the responsibility for it. The depths of Stalinist degeneracy as revealed in this criminal episode, which is only symptomatic, makes the fight of the Left Opposition for a return to the policies of Lenin and Trotsky more necessary, more imperative than ever before.

—J. KAMIAI.

"They in our ranks who erroneously act along the line of a belief in the existence of a basic contradiction between bourgeois democracy and Fascism, between the Social Democracy and Hitler's party, are harmful and fatal to the Communist movement. Indeed this is our chief danger." (Manuilsky, Report at the XI Plenum of the E. C. C. I., April 1931; Communist International, number 16, April 1931, page 708).

Industrial Recovery Act Prepares New Capitalist Crisis in Near Future

The National Industrial Recovery Act, its immediate and its further consequences, occupy the center of the American stage today. What effects does the bourgeoisie want the new policy to have on the standards of living of the American worker, on the reformist and on the revolutionary trade unions, on the relations between capital and the bourgeoisie state apparatus? The new legislation reaches so deep into the inner machinery of capitalist organization that the workers must be on their guard from the very beginning to resist the new attacks which the sharpening of these new and extraordinary powerful weapons is preparing.

To begin with a rapid survey of the economic background against which the new policy stands out, we may summarize the situation as follows: The first really prolonged symptoms of an upturn began to appear last July, with a speculative boom in securities and in commodities, following on the successful overcoming of a banking crisis in the late Spring. The tentative efforts at spontaneous recovery resulted in relatively small increases in production and trade in the second half of 1932, which failed to hold, but did not return to the low levels reached earlier in the year. By the first quarter of this year, some signs of a renewal of the tendency toward improvement were again perceptible, but were cut across by the banking crisis which developed in the second half of February and culminated in a nationwide closing of banks from March 4 to March 15. Within a few weeks after the banks had begun to reopen, the tendencies toward recovery again manifested themselves. From May on, however, they were powerfully accelerated by the increasing evidence that the government was prepared to make large concessions to those sections of the bourgeoisie and of the petty bourgeoisie which were demanding inflation (farmers, export trade, certain sections of industry, etc.). The biggest concession actually made was the embargo on gold shipments, which tore the dollar away from its anchorage to a gold base, and opened the door to speculation in the foreign exchanges. Along with this came the provision that banks could not pay out gold against paper money, which was generally taken as a preparation for inflation.

An enormous wave of speculation, both in the markets and in actual production, was thus added on top of the "natural" or spontaneous forces within capitalist economy making for an upturn. To give one instance, steel production, which had dropped to 11 percent of capacity, picked up by leaps and bounds to 54 percent, the highest figure in more than two years. Railroad car loadings, which indicate the physical movement and consequently the production of commodities, increased over 60 percent in a period of three months. Electric power production, which had been 10 percent below 1932 figures in the early weeks of the year, increased sharply, because of the increased demand from large industrial users of power, and is at the moment not far from figures for the corresponding weeks of 1929 at the height of the boom.

Yet during this whole period the financial basis for the upturn was not broadening, but narrowing; in other words, not inflation but deflation was actually taking place. The tremendous increase in the volume of speculative securities and commodities bought, at rising prices, together with a substantial increase in the physical volume of goods produced, also at rising prices, was financed by less money and less bank credit than had been in use before the boom started in April. Actually, money in circulation was about 1-2 billions lower, much more than the 600 millions of gold which were added to the money supply by the return of gold from private hands to the banks under threat of punitive measures; bank credits showed a corresponding contraction in deposits and loans.

Yet there was no shortage of money, although the demand for it was greatly increased and its supply reduced—money can still be obtained on time loans for 1 to 1-2 percent a year. It would seem as if the results of inflation—higher prices and stimulation of production—were being obtained while actually carrying through deflation.

The answer to the apparent paradox is simply that the existing amount of currency and of bank credits is being turned over faster, that is, that the average velocity

C.P. Holds Extraordinary Conference To Whitewash Bureaucrats' Failure

The defeat of the German working class by fascism through the betrayal of social democracy and Stalinism has already had its repercussions in the Communist Party of the United States. The revisionist policies of Stalinism having already sapped the main vitality of the American party, it was shaken from top to bottom by this repudiation. The Stalinists do not realize the cause, but they do see the effects.

An acute party situation has been revealed. An extraordinary party conference was called in cope with this situation. The conference has issued an open letter to the party members.

The open letter is the most confused, worthless piece of trash ever issued by an extraordinary party conference. It is an attempt to prevent the disintegration setting in, in the party, at a rapid pace due to the defeat of the German proletariat and the smashing of the Communist party in Germany. It is an attempt to cover up, to prevent a real analysis from being made, to prevent an understanding, and to enable the bureaucrats to retain their hold upon the party and the apparatus.

The party fathers admit that

SAVE CHEN DU SIU FROM WHITE TERROR!

We have received the letter printed below from our Chinese comrades. The urgent need of international action to save Chen Du Siu from a living death in jail is self-evident. Every comrade must agitate among the members of the International Labor Defense and the party members for the assumption of responsibility by the latter in the defense of our brave class war prisoner.

Chiang Kai-Shek must not be allowed to do away with the founder of the Chinese Communist movement! The Stalinists must not be allowed to sabotage his defense! Left Oppositionists, get on the job for the defense of comrade Chen!

Shanghai.—There has been no news of Chen Du Siu since the report of his having been sentenced to 13 years imprisonment, beyond a brief announcement in the press that he would appeal against the sentence. Legal processes in China, being even more slow and involved than in the capitalist West, it is not likely that this appeal, if it is ever heard at all, will come before the court in the near future. In view of the attitude taken up by the official Chinese Communist Party toward the arrest and trial of Chen—which was one of unbecoming exultation—the comrades abroad should do all possible to keep the matter before the attention of the workers. Wherever possible, protests against the continued imprisonment of Chen should be sent to the Nanking government and published as widely as possible.

Plan to End Relief in N.Y.

New York, N. Y.—Suspension of all jobs relief by the city administration started in the faces of 2,000,000 unemployed workers and their dependents this week. The question is not yet decided as to whether the city will make any concessions to the unemployed remains highly precarious and a desperate tension exists in their ranks.

The suspension of relief came about as a result of a financial crisis due to the sabotage of relief bond sales by the local bankers. The bonds had been issued by the city government. The bankers are intent on cutting down the city budget so as to enable the administration to pay them on loans due, or at least to force concessions profitable for them (e.g. a raise of rates to bolster up the traction interests they control).

On Monday and Tuesday crowds of workers milled around the relief bureau voicing their protests and demands and anxiously awaiting word of the most recent developments. On Wednesday afternoon delegations of jobless appeared before a meeting of the Board of Estimate at City Hall to present their demands to the administration. And here, the whole sorry plight of the organized unemployed movement came to the fore. The delegates did not act in a body. Stalinists appeared separately and Communists separately. No attempt was even made to get a united delegation with a united program.

The result of this split of forces was obvious. The Tammany fathers naturally used the one against the other. While some time ago, on a similar occasion, they allowed the socialist Norman Thomas to speak and ejected the Communist delegation, they this time turned the tables and permitted the Communist Robert Minor to speak, while ejecting the socialist representatives. The socialists are reported to have protested vigorously against the "united front between the democrats and the Communists." It comes with ill grace from them. For they were in a similar situation the last time and may just as well be the next time. It is true that Minor did not protest against their exclusion, but neither did Thomas when he had occasion to. The responsibility for split in the ranks of the unemployed, which is of the greatest aid to Tammany fakery, rests squarely upon the shoulders of both the social reformist as well as the Stalinist bureaucrats.

Minor to the Board of Estimate: "Now Comrades..."

It is of special interest to revolutionary workers to observe how the delegate from the party-controlled unemployed council acted. Minor's address to the Board of Estimate was the purest reformism and did not breathe a breath of the revolutionary spirit of Communism. On the contrary, it serves to breed further dangerous illusion among the broad masses as to possibilities of permanent relief from their miseries under capitalist government. He restricted himself almost exclusively to a statement of immediate demands, never once even touched upon the Communist class struggle position. It could not be otherwise. Under the guise of "struggle against social fascism," the Stalinist leadership is making a new right turn whose opportunist trappings hit the revolutionary worker right in the eye. So engrossed did Minor become in his "positive, constructive" opportunist program that he forgot at one point before whom he was presenting it and broke out into the appellation: "Now, comrades..." amid the smiles of the Tammany racketeers. He barely caught himself.

The whole position of the Stalinists flows from their past line. Their rejection of the Leninist united front and their "third period" unionization program has left them divorced from the broad mass with an artificial, "private property"—as to speak—mass movement on their hands. Unwilling to make the turn toward a correct united front tactic and union policy because that involves their shaky bureaucratic prestige, and on the other hand, afraid of losing whatever non-party forces they still control, they mimic the reformists in the unemployed council headed by themselves and capitulate to opportunism within their own four walls, so to speak. How else can a speech like Minor's be explained?

In the meantime, this policy does serious damage to the working class as a whole and discredits the very name of Communism. What the unemployed workers need in

HOLD ANTI-FASCIST STRIKE IN TORONTO

More than 25,000 Toronto workers staged a two hour general strike against the Hitler regime in Germany. The demonstration which included a monster parade was carried through in defiance of the ban of the reactionary Bennett government against all public manifestations of the Canadian working class. This effective protest of the Canadian workers is a most fitting reply not only to the savage maltreatment of the militant German proletariat by the fascist hordes—it is a proof of the efficacy of the united front, under whose auspices the demonstration was held.

The Toronto branch of the Left Opposition took a most active part in the preparation of and in the demonstration proper. It issued a special anti-fascist strike number of the organ of the Left Opposition in Canada, the Yankee. This issue contains an appeal to the workers of Toronto to demonstrate against the persecution of the German workers by the Nazis and at the same time against the treatment accorded the Canadian workers by the government. It concludes its appeal with a ringing appeal for international solidarity to prosecute the struggle to victory under the banner of Lenin and Trotsky!

The coming issues of the Militant will contain fuller and more complete reports from our comrades on the scene; on the role that they played in the strike demonstration and of the status of the Canadian anti-fascist movement to date.

The July 4-5 Unemployment Leagues Columbus Conference was a united front from above between the Musteites and the Stalinists. Weeks before the conference convened the Musteite-Stalinist bloc was formed with the rank and file of both organizations knowing nothing about it. The C. P. L. A. group ran the conference while the Unemployed Council representatives sat in as fraternal delegates waiting for the Musteites to pick the chestnuts out of the fire of the Ohio conference which was red hot with flag-waving, patriotic Americans who conducted religious revivals in the morning before the conference opened.

The united front from above called for a state federation of the Leagues and Councils; the adoption of the Unemployed Insurance Bill of the Stalinists; a committee of fifteen from the Leagues, Councils and the National Unemployed Federation; and a conference in Washington, in December, when Congress convenes, where an amalgamation of the unemployed organizations is to take place.

THE POLITICAL TENDENCIES

The Musteites objected to any talk of political control or political tendencies. However, they saw it that they elected fifteen Musteites out of twenty-two on the executive committee of the Unemployed Leagues. Other political tendencies within the conference struggles were the Right wing flag wavers, the socialists, the Lovestonites, the United Workers Party, the Stalinists and the Left Opposition.

THE MUSTEITES

The C. P. L. A. aim to use the Unemployed Leagues as the foundation for their Labor Party. Opposition to their Labor party aims did not come from the Stalinists from above with them. Opposition to the C. P. L. A. by the flag-wavers in the state conference forced them to concentrate their energies to retain political control, and for the time being open agitation for the Labor party was pushed to the background.

One must recognize the mass unemployed movement the C. P. L. A. have, but at the same time one must recognize that it is still a flag-waving, religious, mass movement by Musteism. Much of the unemployed Leagues' growth can be accounted for by the fact that the city and county reactionary forces are using the Leagues as buffers against the Unemployed Councils.

The Itzinger March on Columbus, led by the Unemployed Councils, was met by the police with clubs while the Unemployed Leagues' conference in Columbus was approved by the authorities. The "Workers' Patrol," established by the Unemployed Leagues to keep order, armed themselves with clubs. The Musteites cannot be accused of aiming this patrol but they are guilty of misdirection which led to this end.

THE SOCIALISTS

The few socialists on hand played a negligible role in the conference. If they did have policy differences, no one found it out because their steering committee wasted their time mainly on secondary points of order.

THE STALINISTS

The united front from above netted the Stalinists nothing. They did not obtain the committee of fifteen, they did not obtain an official statement of the conference.

A Letter from Fascist Germany

One could never have imagined in his wildest dreams such a transformation of the daily life as Fascism has brought about. The period of transition in the workers' movement is especially terrifying. We speak of the transition period until the movement has managed to rid itself of its dregs, the worst of which are at present the traitors. The police swoops down daily on the workers' quarters. One betrays another so as to exonerate himself. The Nazis penetrate everywhere.

On holidays—and there are so many of them now—the workers hang out the swastika flag. The C. P. G. has simply disappeared. Sometimes dues are still collected, but that is all. The two issues of the Rote Fahne (Stalinist organ), according to which all of Germany is gripped by strikes, and stands on the eve of the revolution, have been received here. They aroused great resentment everywhere. Some party comrades who swore by the "line" as by something holy until March 5, now speak of the bureaucrats as plain charlatans. The intelligent workers are beginning to realize that we are now entering into a long and difficult period.

Of the C. P. G. as such there is even less to be seen than of the C. P. U. But often it so happens that many former adherents of the S. P. G. are more upright and honest anti-fascists than, for instance, some of the C. P. U. unemployed. Those elements who have conclusively broken with the S. P. are very sympathetic to the slogan of the "new party," since their conviction about the disaster of reformist policy has in no case been accompanied by any conviction in the "correctness of the policy" of the C. P. G.

A few more interesting observations: When we stroll through the streets here one is struck by the fact that the men wear better clothes than before, "when democracy still existed," as we always say here. This is due to the fact that the poor people, i. e., the Communists, no longer dare to creep out of their holes, and when they do, then they put on their best clothes so as not to appear "suspicious." The coffeehouses and restaurants of the city are frequented only by Nazis now. The workers' inns and the houses of the "people" are shut down. In the "ritzy restaurants" the officers frequent, in the others, the lower ranks. Very often someone starts singing the Horst-Wessel song (Nazi hymn). Then all those present have to stand up and participate.

Pocketbook Workers Struggle

New York, N. Y.—The general strike of the 4,000 pocketbook workers is spreading day after day to the non-union shops. The strike is an excellent condition. The strikers are in a good spirit. It proves that all the talk we hear from the Right wing leaders that the workers will not and cannot fight due to the fact that the bosses starved out the workers for the last few years is nonsense. The workers have been and are eager to fight to improve their conditions. It is the Right wing leadership who keep the workers back from fighting for better conditions. That is why the employers took advantage of the last few years and brought down the conditions of the workers to the lowest level.

The strike of the pocketbook workers prove that in spite of the starvation and suffering the workers went through for the last few years, they are fighting to get back some of the conditions the Right wing has given to the employers without a fight.

The Right wing leaders in the Pocketbook Workers Union as well as other Right wing leaders look at the union as their private property—they have a monopoly on the union. They think that the union is an S. P. union, S. P. leadership, and only S. P. speakers are invited to address the meetings of the strikers. If the Left wing had been given a chance to be in the leading committees of the strike, it would have been 100 percent effective today in New York and vicinity. There is chaos and inefficiency in the leadership of the strike. The Left wing must demand representation in all leading committees of the strike, otherwise there is a danger, as the strike goes on, that more confusion will develop which will demoralize it. More mass picketing and demonstrations must take place in order to show the employers that not a single bag will be made while the strike goes on.

In the last issue of The Militant there was reported that through the militant struggle of the workers in Morris White shop in New York, Mr. White was compelled to settle with the union and concede to the union demand. It also said that the agreement has not been signed. Last Saturday Morris White backed out and ran to court for an injunction instead of signing the agreement with the union. The workers of the Morris White shop are carrying on the fight against the firm with more vigor until Mr. White will be forced to settle with the union and grant the demands of the workers. What actually happened with the settlement of Mr. White nobody knows. One thing is certain and our leaders should know that diplomacy and maneuvering will not settle strikes. A strike must be fought in a militant way till the employers are forced to grant the demands of the workers. We warn the pocketbook workers again to be on guard and see to it that similar situations as the Morris White should not repeat themselves during the strike.
POCKETBOOK WORKERS BE ON GUARD!

Perspectives for American Class Struggles

It is a fundamental teaching of Marxism that capitalism, once out of its swaddling clothes, extends the scale of production at the same time as it restricts the available market. As capital accumulates, an ever larger share of its total is expended on the means of production in proportion to that expended for labor power. Competition between various capitalist units compels the production of commodities at a lower cost, that is, with each unit containing a smaller amount of necessary labor power. In an effort to do this, more and more capital is expended for labor-saving machinery with the result that unemployment grows, at first relatively, and later, absolutely, as well.

For example, the Hoover committee report, "Recent Economic Changes," tells us that the number of workers employed in the major branches of industry (agriculture, manufacturing, mining and railways) in the U. S. fell from 23,450,000 in 1918-20 to 23,425,000 in 1924-26. At the same time, production was increased 18 percent—an increase of 27 percent per worker. In manufacturing alone the number of workers fell from 10,780,000 to 9,810,000 and production was increased 22.5 percent—an increase of 34.5 percent per worker. Between 1923-25, according to Lewis Corey, while production was increasing, unemployment was also increasing by about 1-2 millions yearly, due to the displacement of workers by machinery and other technological causes.

On one hand, this process causes the rate of profit to fall, thereby compelling the capitalists to seek to increase the scale of operation and also to seek to increase the rate of exploitation or production of surplus value per worker by means of wage-cuts, speed-up, etc., and on the other hand, it reduces the number of effective consumers and the extent of individual consumption. It sets in motion a contradictory capitalism can never permanently solve.

Add to this the facts that capitalism has already developed its productive forces beyond the effective capacity of the world market, that its national aspects, that is, its contradictions, competition between its various units, etc., are international in scope, that capitalism is in the fourth year of a violent process which attempts to re-establish temporarily its lost equilibrium, that there has been a general narrowing of markets due to unemployment, lowered living standards and the development in many formerly backward countries of native industrial workers, and you have a rough picture of the world situation today.

The United States, as a national unit of world capitalism, is compelled to find additional foreign markets. That it will succeed in this there is little doubt. It is in the position of a highly efficient manufacturing plant competing with a less advanced one. Its superior technique and greater resources, as well as the burden imposed on its foreign competitors by means of war debts and loans, give it an advantage that cannot be overcome.

However, as the United States expands it will do so at the expense of other exporting powers, primarily England, thereby heightening their internal contradiction and driving their workers ever closer to revolutionary action. At the same time, the prerequisites for such expansion include a lowering of the standard of living of American workers by all the means at the capitalists' disposal as well as a tightening of the noose of centralization around the necks of weaker capitalist enterprises to the point where ever larger numbers of them are driven out of existence, thereby hastening the already rapid and extensive monopolization of American industry.

By the very process of attempting to escape the effects of its contradictions America will weld its workers into a class-conscious mass. As wages continue to fall and unemployment to rise, the petty fable of American class collaboration will disappear in favor of a growth of labor militancy.

In this connection it is well to remember that the use of militant action is not alien to American shores. America is not devoid of revolutionary traditions. It has had many a stormy outburst in the past and the political lag of the American workers behind their European brothers can best be explained not by reference to something inherently conservative in their nature but rather by the absence of material conditions necessary to give their philosophy its proper social direction.

In conclusion, however, it might be well to point out that capitalism will never collapse of its own accord. As Lenin once said "there is no situation from which there is absolutely no way out for the bourgeoisie." While the shocks of economic crises open wide cracks in the structure of capitalism, to bring about its collapse more than an economic crisis is needed. The workers will to revolution must rise to the point where it is strong enough to establish the dictatorship of the proletariat in contradistinction to the present more or less concealed dictatorship of the bourgeoisie. A section of the working class known as "the vanguard" must have sufficient strength, both numerically and ideologically, to lead the revolutionary proletariat onto the broad highway outlined by Marx and Lenin. And, in the opinion of the writer, it is precisely this point which constitutes the fundamental task of the American revolutionary parties today. It is one of building the "vanguard", of drawing into a state of revolutionary consciousness a larger number of American workers, of educating them in the struggle and tactics of the coming struggle. Tomorrow the nature of our tasks may change. But, until that happens, they must be considered in their proper chronological order.

N. Y. Doll Workers Win Demands in Strike

The Doll and Toy Workers (Lafayette St.) won their strike at the Rosenberg Doll Shop, 48 West 25th St., one of the biggest shops in the industry.

Recognition of the union, and the shop committee; hiring and firing in control of the union; and increases in wage scales even for the girls who scabbed and tried to call the police, were gained by the militant doll workers after two weeks of picketing.

This victory in the first strike of the season has set the workers in action, and preparations for striking another of the big shops is under way. On this may hang the fate of the negotiations to be carried out between the workers of the industry and the bosses, under the provisions of the Industrial Recovery Act.

Last Saturday the A. F. L. union of Farulla and Joseph Cannon, who were defeated in the elections of officers in the union last year, and who thereupon opened up their own little private office, called a mass meeting of the Doll workers, because, to use their own words:

"They did not want to go to Washington without any workers to represent." About twenty workers and three thugs showed up.

The Doll and Toy Workers Union is calling a mass meeting Saturday, July 15th at Stuyvesant Casino.

In the struggle of the workers of Rosenberg Doll Co., as in the preparatory work of the union; in the printing and distribution of leaflets, in picket line duty, in work in the office; the Spartacus Youth Club, relatively small, played a more active and prominent role than the Young Communist League, for all its vaunted "activity".

An opportunist deviation which is sure to land the revolution in the swamp is the united front from above. When the leadership of an organization comes together and decides over the heads of their membership or without the participation of the membership, except by bureaucratic decree, what to unite on and how to unite you can be assured that wrong start will not bring the desired results.

The united front between leaders, the united front from above, is a denial and violation of the united front of the working class. The united front of the leaders guarantees in advance the victory of the right wing, the opportunists, and the labor fakery over the Left wing, the revolutionists, in the united action.

AGAINST THE UNITED FRONT FROM BELOW

The Stalinist "Third Period" united front from below is the most harmful caricature and denial of the united front possible. If an organization desires a united front on some concrete issues and proceeds to send the call to all organizations it is sure it can control, mechanically or ideologically, but refuses to send the call to other organizations of the working class, because the leaders of the other organizations are fakery, because of fear of losing control; and instead invite the rank and file alone to unite, over the heads of their own leadership, the results will be a lasting service rendered to the misleaders and the fakery and a set-back for those who carry on the united front from below.

It would be excellent if the task of winning misled workers were so simple. If the united front from below were a short-cut to winning the rank and file from the misleaders, our task would already be an accomplished fact. This would imply a rapid transformation of a misled rank and file which has been shaken off its misleaders and their petty bourgeois ideology. The education of misled rank and file workers is not so simple that it can be accomplished by telling them to unite with us over the heads of their leaders. The united front

BETWEEN ORGANIZATIONS, where the leadership and the policies of the organizations can be put to a test, to enable the rank and file to see leaders and programs in action—that is the way to educate and win the rank and file.

Workers belonging to organizations have faith in their organizations and often, their leaders. They are placed in a position where they must function THROUGH THE ORGANIZATION if they desire to continue as members because of faith, convictions, (no matter how false), or job control. By asking these workers to unite with us over the heads of the leaders and the organization through the united front from below, we are telling these workers to break with their organization on the one hand, and giving the misleaders an excuse for sabotaging united action, on the other hand. The united front from below strengthens rather than weakens the misleaders of the other organizations. When we invite the whole organization and the Left wing responds and the Right wing leaders decline, it is far more difficult for the right wing leaders to fight the united front than it is when they have a chance to fight united action through the excuse of the "united front from below."

Letter from Party Member Exposes Bureaucracy

It is time that Communists should openly state their views and aims. The tactics of the official Communist party contradict the fundamental aspects of Marxism which are so essential for the strengthening of the party.

The tactics and strategy of Stalinism flow not from contemporary requirements but from complex system of bureaucracy which bases itself on an erroneous foundation. The bureaucracy has advantageously anticipated the successful building of an isolated socialist society in the U. S. S. R. This in turn has created a dogma of action which stands in fundamental contradiction to Lenin's teachings.

I have recently been admitted into the C. P. where I have come upon such situations that have dumfounded me and proved the impotence of my party which is allegedly the leader of the working class in its struggle for emancipation. Prior to my admittance I expounded some revolutionary concepts that coincided with those of the L. O. I was immediately branded a "Trotskyite." This caused a delay to my entrance into the party. Only when it appeared that I was converted was I given my membership book.

The bureaucrats refuse to polemize against "Trotskyism" in an objective way but immediately denounced it to all new members as a counter-revolutionary tendency. From these observations I have learned that the road for success for an opportunist or a careerist in the party—as a matter of fact, the internal regime tends to create these destructive characteristics in all members above the average intelligence—lies in the degree of the verbal denunciation of "Trotskyism."

I will do all in my power to force the C. P. back to the correct policy of the world revolution. I consider myself a part of the Left Opposition and will fight for its reintegration into the C. P. where it rightfully belongs.

I firmly believe that the theories and practices of the Left Opposition will make their way into the party because they are endowed with the power of Marxism.

Although I am unemployed at the present time, just as soon as I lay my hands on a dollar bill I will become a regular subscriber to the Militant which is the only revolutionary organ that gives its readers a realistic version of historical facts and a corresponding revolutionary diagnosis. —E. R.

THE KILLING OF THE UNITED FRONT FROM ABOVE AND BELOW

The united front with leaders and the united front from below are both wrong. A united front must be BETWEEN ORGANIZATIONS of the working class (or the working class or between political tendencies, groups and factions, etc.) You do not appeal ORGANIZATIONALLY "from below." You bring PRESSURE on the organization from below. You win the rank and file from below to force the ORGANIZATION into the united front. Have the other organizations elect delegates through their organizational channels to the united front regardless of who are selected as the delegates. You try to obtain Left wing delegates but you take what you get—what they elect. If the organizations send misleaders and betrayers they must be seated in the united front representing their respective organization.

The dialectics of the united front between organizations is to win the rank and file (below) and expose the leadership in action (above). This concept of below and above has nothing in common with "united fronts" put forward under these labels.

UNITED FRONTS AND INDIVIDUALS

The united front is not a tactic to corral a group of prominent individuals, liberals and artists, who do not represent organizations or political tendencies.

"GUARANTEE" LEADERSHIP OF THE UNITED FRONT

"Join the united front against the capitalist class under the leadership of the Communists" (the Stalinist formula)—is the best way to formulate what is not a united front. We Communists hope to win ideological control and leadership through our superior program, but no one, not even those who have the prestige of the October revolution, can mechanically obtain leadership of the movement in advance. United fronts are not called under our leadership, or any other leadership.

It is wrong for one organization or political current to set up the provisional committee and adopt a draft program and call the other organizations to the united front. There are certain exceptions where emergency demands speed, but those who take the initiative must see to it that the program and leadership is left open to be decided at the conference, where all working class organizations have delegates, even though the conditions force the initiative upon one political current. In fact, one political current will always take the initiative, but this has nothing in common with the Stalinists, who interpret this to mean, "under our leadership."

BULLETIN OF THE OPPOSITION (BOLSHEVIKS-LENINISTS)

To Readers Who Are Adherents and to readers who are sympathizers!

The profound crisis through which the Soviet Union has been passing for the last few years has reached the decisive stage. The Soviet Union is in danger. Stalinism is leading it to ruin with seven league boots. Under these conditions the struggle of the Russian Left Opposition assumes tremendous historical significance. The Bulletin serves as one of the most important weapons of this struggle for the saving of the October Revolution. Even though it penetrates into the U. S. S. R. in an insignificant quantity of copies, it nevertheless plays a big role in its life, in the formation of genuine revolutionary cadres. The ideas of the Bulletin pass from month to month. Our task lies in strengthening this role; in achieving a larger circulation of the Bulletin in U. S. S. R.; in succeeding in publishing it each month regularly.

For this we require the help of readers and friends, primarily financial help. The Bulletin is forced to contend with unheard-of difficulties.

Spartacus Youth Club in Over-Night Hike

The Spartacus Youth Club invites all friends, sympathizers and young workers to meet at 126 East 11th St. on Saturday, July 15th, 12 noon. We leave promptly on our overnight bike.

Be prepared for a slice of genuine outdoor life, and bring flashlights, blankets, cooking utensils, etc.

We return Sunday evening to the headquarters for a social, Music, Songs, Dancing. All very informal all very free.

Every Wednesday evening the Spartacus Youth Club holds a mass open air meeting at the corner of 7th St., and 2nd Ave. Members and sympathizers, take note.

bulleties. It is forbidden not only by Stalin but also by Hitler and Mussolini; it is factually forbidden in Roumania, Jugoslavia, Poland, Lithuania, Latvia and a few other countries. The entry and circulation of the Bulletin into these countries is tied up with great difficulties and expense. Stalin, on his part, resorts to most ferocious measures to close up the roads for the Bulletin into U. S. S. R. The Bulletin is forced to seek for new ways. We are issuing a special edition of the Bulletin for USSR, the small size and bulk of which facilitates its entry into the Soviet Union. (Upon request, we will forward copies of this edition to our friends and readers.) This edition as well as the circulations we issue require new resources. These we lack. Generally there obtains among a few readers of the Bulletin an incorrect conception regarding the financial security of our publication. At no time was this even in prospect. This issue of every number is tied up with immense efforts and difficulties. But never before has the Bulletin been in so onerous a material condition as it is at the present time. The publication of the Bulletin itself is being threatened. And in the meantime, the situation dictates the transition of the Bulletin to a monthly schedule, to appear regularly on specified dates. The editors of the Bulletin have set themselves the pressing task of achieving this. This task as well as the guaranteeing of the existence of the Bulletin in general, cannot be performed without the decisive and systematic help of friends and readers. In the past this help was far from sufficient. Without this help it will be impossible to speed matters ahead. We appeal for decisive help and we are firmly banking upon it.

We are in need of financial help; of immediate and regular contributions. We are in need of new subscribers. All our friends and readers can and must find new subscribers. We are ready to forward five of charge "sample" copies of the Bulletin to addresses sent us by our readers.

We must succeed in having all subscribers pay for their subscriptions regularly and promptly. We must have addresses of book stores, selling Russian literature and papers and which would agree to stock Bulletins on commission basis (for sale).

We need assistance in the matter of popularizing the Bulletin; there should not be a single city in which our adherents live and in which the existence of the Bulletin is not widely known, and in which it is not on sale.

Every reader who is an adherent must take stock of all his resources and connections in order to help the Bulletin. We await financial assistance! We await financial assistance!

What Stalinism Said about Democracy and Fascism

Stalinism did not recognize as its task, to arouse the working class against the threatening danger of Fascism. On the contrary, the Stalinists took pains to "demonstrate" new day in day out, that "between democracy and Fascism there is no basic difference." Nothing was more qualified to make the workers underestimate the danger of Fascism than this distorted formula of Stalinism.

They in our ranks who erroneously act along the line of a belief in the existence of a basic contradiction between bourgeois democracy and Fascism, between the social democracy and Hitler's party, are harmful and fatal to the Communist movement. Indeed, this is our chief danger.

(Manilsky, Report, XI Plenum of the E. C. C. I., April 1931, Kommunistische Internationale, No. 16, April 1931, page 703.)

From this we draw the first conclusion—that only a bourgeois liberal can construe a counter-distinction between bourgeois democracy and a Fascist regime, and can assume that we are dealing here with two basically different political forms....

(Manilsky, Report, XI Plenum of the E. C. C. I., Kommunistische Internationale, No. 16, April 1931, page 703.)

The fact that the bourgeoisie is obliged to suppress the workers' movement by means of Fascist methods does not mean that the upper classes no longer rule as before. Fascism is not a new kind of governmental method to be distinguished from the system of the dictatorship of the bourgeoisie. He who thinks so is a liberal.

(Manilsky Report, XI Plenum, April 1931, Komm. Internat. No. 17, 18, May 1931, page 773.)

The Fascist dictatorship offers no basic distinction from bourgeois democracy, through which also the dictatorship of finance capital is carried out.

(Resolution of the C. C. of the

C. P. G. on the decisions of the XI Plenum of the E. C. C. I., May 1931.)

The Leipzig party convention confirmed fully the correctness of the resolution of the IX (?) Plenum of the E. C. C. I., which declared that in our parties the counter-position of Fascism and bourgeois democracy is a liberal interpretation.

But even worse is the fact that in spite of the conclusions of the XI Plenum, in spite of the masterly clarification of the problem as presented in the final words of comrade Manilsky, there have appeared in our ranks tendencies towards a liberal counter-distinction of Fascism and bourgeois democracy, of the Hitler party and social Fascism.

(Thaelmann, "Some Mistakes in Our Theoretic and Practical Work", Die Internationale, November-December, 1931, page 487.)

Germany demonstrates.... that the transition of democracy to Fascism is an organic process, which does not have to take on the form of unusual and explosive occurrences but can be accomplished gradually and in a "bloodless" way.

(Wermer Hirsch, "Fascism and the Hitler Party", Die Internationale, January 1932, page 28.)

The objective situation in Germany is a striking and incontrovertibly practical argument against the liberal counter-distinction between Fascism and democracy, Social Fascism and Hitler Fascism.

By no means at all, therefore, is the task of Communists to search with extra-strong spectacles for any possible differences between democracy and Fascism.

What the Left Opposition Said about Democracy and Fascism

the order of the day the question of the open participation of the Nazis in the government. Through this, the role of the socialist party of Germany will in no wise be weakened.

(Thaelmann, "Some Mistakes in Our Theoretic and Practical Work", Die Internationale, November-December, 1931, page 485.)

Leninism versus Stalinism

FOREWORD

The victory of German Fascism closes a distinct epoch of political history and opens a new one. In the course of the past year the Stalinist bureaucracy did all that was possible without it, to render the Fascist victory easier. Addressing itself to the proletariat of the world, the Left Opposition (Bolshevik-Leninists) criticized implicitly the policies of the Stalinist bureaucracy and gave its answers to all problems as they were posed by events.

At present no proletarian revolutionary can close his eyes to the conflict between the two factions raging within the camp of Communism. Comrade Oscar Fischer has performed an important and instructive task by collecting and classifying according to subject the clearest and most inclusive statements that were given in answer to theoretic and practical questions, that were band by the Stalinist bureaucracy, and on the other by the Left Opposition (Bolshevik-Leninists). I hope that this rare collection of citations will soon find its way to every thinking worker. There will be no advance unless we learn by the tragic mistakes and defeats of the past.

Also in the event that the Nazis are taken into the government, there can be no question that the bourgeoisie will refuse the cooperation of the social democracy in the carrying out of the Fascist dictatorship. Die Internationale, January 1932, page 4.)

The XI Plenum of the E. C. C. I. has swept aside the artificially constructed counter-distinction between bourgeois democracy and Fascist dictatorship. By this it has rendered an invaluable service to the Communist parties in their fight against social Fascism. The XII Plenum has demonstrated that so-called "classical" Fascism does not exist and cannot exist, and that all confusing theories, basing themselves on the history of Italian Fascism, about the Fascist need of first striking down the working class, are bloodless abstractions.

WHAT STAND DID THE LEFT OPPOSITION TAKE?

Fascism makes its appearance as the second representative agent of the bourgeoisie. Like the social democracy, but to a greater degree, Fascism possesses its special army, its particular interests and its own logic as a movement. We know that in order to save and stabilize bourgeois society in Italy, Fascism not only had to oppose sharply the social democracy but the traditional bourgeois parties as well. We must not imagine that all the political organs of the bourgeoisie worked in perfect concord. Fortunately things do not work out that way. Economic anarchy is supplemented by political anarchy. Now, too, Fascism, which has been nourished by the social democracy, will have to smash the latter in order to reach power.

(Trotsky, "The Austrian Crisis", November 1929.)

No matter how true it is that the social democracy, by its whole policy, prepared the blossoming of Fascism, it is no less true that Fascism comes forward as a deadly threat primarily to that same social democracy, all of whose magnificence is inextricably bound up with parliamentary-democratic-parliamentary forms and methods of government.

(Trotsky, "The Turn in the Communist International and the German Situation", September 1930, page 13.)

The XI Plenum of the E. C. C. I. came to the decision that it was imperative to put an end to those erroneous views which originate in the liberal interpretation of the contradictions between Fascism and bourgeois democracy, as well as between the parliamentary forms of bourgeois dictatorship and the outright forms.... The gist of this Stalinist philosophy is quite plain: From the Marxist denial of the absolute contradiction, it deduces the total negation of any contradiction at all, even of a relative contradiction. This error is typical of vulgar radicalism. What Next, page 28.)

A contradiction does exist between democracy and Fascism. It is not at all "absolute" or, putting it in the language of Marxism, it does not at all denote the rule of two irreconcilable classes. But it does denote different systems of the domination of one and the same class.

The statement that the transition from democracy to Fascism may take on an "organic" and a "gradual" character can mean one thing and one thing only and that is: without any fuss without a fight, the proletariat may be deprived not only of its material conquests—not only of its given standard of living, of its social legislation, of its civil and political rights—but also of the basic weapon whereby these were achieved, that is, its organizations. The "bloodless" transition to Fascism implies under this terminology, the most frightful capitulation of the proletariat that can be conceived. (Page 36.)

In a Fascist regime, at least during its first phase, capital leans on the petty bourgeoisie which destroys the organizations of the proletariat. Italy, for instance! Is there a difference in the "class content" of these two regimes? If the question is posed only regards the ruling class, then there is no difference. If one takes into account the position and inter-relation of all classes, from the angle of the proletariat, then the difference appears to be quite enormous. (Page 34.)

In order to try to find a way out, the bourgeoisie must absolutely rid itself of the pressure exerted by the workers' organizations, these must needs be eliminated, destroyed, utterly crushed.

At this juncture the historic role of Fascism begins. It sets on its feet those classes that are immediately above the proletariat and who are then in dread of being forced down into ranks; it organizes and militarizes them at the expense of finance capital, under the cover of the official government, and it directs them to the extermination of proletarian organizations, from the most revolutionary to the most conservative.

Fascism is not merely a system of reprisals, of brutal force, and of police terror. Fascism is a particular governmental system based on the uprooting of all elements of proletarian democracy within bourgeois society. The task of Fascism lies not only in destroying the Communist advance guard but in holding the entire class in a state of enforced disunity. To this end, the physical annihilation of the most revolutionary section of the workers does not suffice. It is also necessary to smash all independent and voluntary organizations, to demolish all the defensive bulwarks of the proletariat, and to uproot whatever has been achieved during three quarters of a century by the social democracy and the trade unions. For, in the last analysis, the Communist party also bases itself on these achievements.

After the German Catastrophe

An Historical Evaluation of the Events by Leon Trotsky

The imperialist epoch, in Europe at least, has been one of sharp turns, in which politics has acquired an extremely mobile character. At each turn the stakes have been, not some partial reform or other, but the fate of the regime. On this fact the exceptional role of the revolutionary party and of its leadership is based. If, in the good old days when the social democracy grew regularly and uninterrupted, like the capitalism which nourished it, the leadership of the party resembled a general staff tranquilly elaborating plans for a war in the indefinite future (a war that perhaps might not come after all), under present conditions the Central Committee of a revolutionary party resembles the field headquarters of an army in action. The strategy of the study has been replaced by the strategy of the battle field.

The struggle against a centralized enemy demands centralization. Trained in a spirit of strict discipline, the German workers assimilated this idea with renewed vigor during the War and the political convulsions which followed it. The workers are not blind to the defects of their leadership, but none of them as an individual is able to shake off the grip of the organization. The workers as a whole consider it better to have a strong leadership, even if a faulty one, than to pull in different directions or to resort to "free-lance" activities. Never before in the history of humanity has a political staff played so important a role or borne such responsibility as in the present epoch.

The unparalleled defeat of the German proletariat is the most important event since the conquest of power by the Russian proletariat. The first task on the morrow of the defeat is to analyze the policy of the leadership. The most responsible leaders (who are heaven be praised, safe and sound) point with paths to the imprisoned tank and file executives of their policies in order to suppress all criticism. We can only meet such a spuriously sentimental argument with contempt. Our solidarity with those whom Hitler has imprisoned is unassailable, but this solidarity does not extend to accepting the mistakes of the leaders. The losses sustained will be justified only if the ideas of the vanquished are advanced. The preliminary condition for this is courageous criticism.

For a whole month not a single Communist organ, the Moscow Pravda not excepted, uttered a word on the catastrophe of March 5. They all waited to hear what the Praesidium of the Executive Committee of the Communist International would say. For its part the Praesidium oscillated between two contradictory variants: "The German Central Committee led us astray," and "The German Central Committee pursued a correct policy." The first variant was ruled out: the preparation of the catastrophe had taken place under the eyes of everybody, and the controversy with the Left Opposition that preceded the catastrophe had too clearly committed the leaders of the Communist International. At last, on April 7, the decision was announced: "The political line... of the Central Committee, with Thälmann at its head, was completely correct up to and during Hitler's coup d'Etat." It is only to be regretted that all those who were dispatched into the beyond by the Fascists did not hear of this glowing affirmation before they died.

The resolution of the Praesidium does not attempt to analyze the policy of the German Communist party—which was, above all else, to have been expected—but constitutes another in the long series of indictments against the social democracy. It preferred, we are told, a coalition with the bourgeoisie to a coalition with the Communists; it evaded a real struggle against Fascism; it fettered the initiative of the masses; and as it had in its hands the "leadership" of the mass labor organizations, it succeeded in preventing a general strike. All this is true. But it is nothing new. The social democracy as the party of social reform, exhausted the progressiveness of its mission, as capitalism was transforming itself into imperialism. During the war the social democracy functioned as a direct instrument of imperialism. After the War it hired itself out officially as the family doctor of capitalism. The Communist party strove to be its gravedigger. On whose side was the whole course of development? The chaotic state of international relations, the collapse of pacifist illusions, the unparalleled crisis which is tantamount to a great war with its aftermath of epidemics—all this, it would seem, revealed the decadent character of European capitalism and the hopelessness of reformism.

Then what happened to the Communist party? In reality the Communist International is ignoring one of its own sections, even though that section rallied some 6 million votes in the election. That is no longer a mere vanguard. It is a great independent army. Why, then, did it take part in the events only as a victim of repression and pogroms? Why, at the decisive hour, did it prove to be stricken with paralysis? There are circumstances under which one cannot withdraw without giving battle. A defeat may result from the superiority of the enemy forces; after defeat one may recover. The passive surrender of all the decisive positions reveals an organic incapacity to fight which does not go unpunished. The Praesidium tells us that the policy of the Communist International was correct "before as well as during the coup d'Etat." A correct policy, however, begins with a correct appraisal of the situation. Yet, for the last four years, in fact up to March 5, 1933, we heard day in and day out that a mighty anti-Fascist front was growing uninterceptably in Germany, that National Socialism was retreating and disintegrating, and that the whole situation was under the aegis of the revolutionary offensive. How could a policy have been correct when the whole analysis on which it was based was knocked over like a house of cards?

The Praesidium justifies the passive retreat by the fact that the Communist party, "lacking the support of the majority of the working class," could not engage in a decisive battle without committing a crime. Nevertheless, the same resolution considers the July 20 call for a general political strike as deserving special praise, though for some unknown reason it neglects to mention an identical call of March 5. Is not the general strike a "decisive struggle"? The two strike calls wholly corresponded to the obligations of a "leading role" in the anti-Fascist united front! Under the conditions of the "revolutionary offensive" Unfortunately, the strike calls fell on deaf ears; nobody came out and answered them. But if, between the official interpretation of events and the strike calls on the one hand, and the facts and deeds on the other, there arises such a crying contradiction, it is hard to understand wherein a correct policy can be distinguished from a disastrous one. In any case, the Praesidium has forgotten to explain which was correct—the two strike calls or the indifference of the workers to them.

But perhaps the division in the ranks of the proletariat was the cause for the defeat? Such an explanation is created especially for lazy minds. The unity of the proletariat, as a universal slogan, is a myth. The proletariat is not homogeneous. The split begins with the political awakening of the proletariat, and constitutes the mechanism of its growth. Only under the conditions of a ripened social crisis, when it is faced with the seizure of power as an immediate task, can the vanguard of the proletariat, provided with a correct policy, rally around itself the overwhelming majority of its class. But the rise to this revolutionary peak is accomplished on the steps of successive splits.

It was not Lenin who invented the policy of the united front; like the split within the proletariat, it is imposed by the dialectics of the class struggle. No successes would be possible without temporary agreements, for the sake of fulfilling immediate tasks, among various sections, organizations and groups of the proletariat. Strikes, trade unions, journals, parliamentary elections, street demonstrations demand that the split be bridged in practice from time to time as the need arises; that is, they demand a united front ad hoc, even if it does not always take on the form of one. In the first stages of a movement, unity arises episodically and spontaneously from below, but when the masses are accustomed to fighting through their organizations, unity must also be established at the top. Under the conditions existing in advanced capitalist countries, the slogan of "only from below" is a gross anachronism, fostered by memories of the first stages of the revolutionary movement, especially in Tsarist Russia.

At a certain level, the struggle for unity of action is converted from an elementary fact into a tactical task. The simple formula of the united front solves nothing. It is not only Communists who appeal for unity, but also reformists, and even Fascists. The tactical application of the united front is subordinated, in every given period, to a definite strategic conception. In preparing the revolutionary unification of the workers, without and against reformism, long and patient experience in applying the united front with the reformists is necessary; always, of course, from the point of view of the final revolutionary goal. It is precisely in this field that Lenin gave us incomparable examples.

The strategic conception of the Communist International was false from beginning to end. The point of departure of the German Communist party was that there is nothing but a mere division of labor between the social democracy and Fascism, that their interests are similar if not identical. Instead of helping to aggravate the discord between Communism's principal political adversary and its mortal foe—for which it would have been sufficient in proclaiming the truth along instead of violating it—the Communist International convinced the reformists and the Fascists that they were twins, it predicted their reconciliation, embittered and repulsed the Social Democratic

News from Workers in Naziland

LETTER FROM HAMBURG

Our groups shows good advances here for the past few months. Few connections with C. P. G. and S. P. G. units have been established. There has not been any loss in numbers. Illegal work has been carried on smoothly, with only one comrade arrested for our special work. All other arrests have taken place on account of work in the party and the mass organizations. Our group is publishing its organs regularly. The composition of our group has been improved considerably in the last months by a growth in the number of factory workers.

Insofar as the party work is concerned, it must be said that its disintegration is being hastened by heavy blows dealt through spies. The most notorious of these cases is the case of a certain Kaiser. Kaiser was a leading functionary among the unemployed on the waterfront. A member of the District leadership of the party and of the defense organizations, he always knotted to the top leadership. Today Kaiser is a leading collaborator of the state police. Recently he declared on oath before a court that he had been for two years a functionary of the information department of the National Socialist German Labor Party (Fascists). Further, that he carried out the orders of these people exclusively within the ranks of the Communist party. It is also possible for a healthy party to contain within its ranks a number of spies and for these spies to attain positions within it. But this Kaiser is a lumpenproletarian type, with whom any decent worker will have nothing to do. Only the inner-party regime brought him to the top. This skunk is responsible for hundreds of arrests and raids. Rumors are spreading in the party ranks that other leading functionaries are spies. It is rarely possible to test out these rumors, but they cause terrible confusion. In the last days of April the party was dealt a particularly heavy blow. In two days, 6 big printshops were discovered and material worth several hundred thousand marks confiscated. The whole manner of the action showed that it was the work of a spy in the apparatus.

About the "Revolutionary Storm Troopers"

There is a wide-spread conception among party members here that the S. A. men (Hitlerite Storm Troopers) are revolutionary. The comrades are of the opinion that in the future struggles it will not be the masses included in the present labor organizations that will play the decisive role, but the disillusioned S. A. men, who will put the rope around the neck of Fascism. There are united front formations here with the Black Front, some collaboration has already taken place.

In the transport concerns the "equalization" action brought within it a mass discharge of R. G. O. (Red Trade Union Opposition) members. Some 4 weeks later a great many of those discharged were rehired. In some concerns (e. g., the stockyards), R. G. O. functionaries were made commissary factory councilors, naturally after the inevitable "equalization".

The confusion in the party is increased by all sorts of clique fights among the D. E. C. leadership. The confidence of the membership in the top leaders is very low. Many units refuse to remit dues or higher. In many cases, comrades who formerly shunned the sight of "Trotskyists," come to us for advice. It is also not unusual for functionaries to request the collaboration of our comrades. The party comrades come to our discussions and ask us for material. All this forces the bureaucracy to call meetings at which they aim to "deal a final blow against Trotskyism".

The S. P. G.

The disintegration of the S. P. G. proceeds apace. The workers and officials of the state concerns hastened to leave it so as not to be lost out by equalization. The trade union bureaucracy acted especially shamefully in this town. After the arrests of May 2, they were soon released on pledges to cooperate. All trade union functionaries left the socialist party in a body. If they are not yet members of the Nazi party, that is not their fault.

But in spite of its capitulation, the S. P. G. still attracts many good proletarians. This has been expressed in 10 May Day meetings attended by 100 to 150 men on an average. At the funeral of the deputy Biedermann, who was murdered by Fascists, about 2000 social democratic workers gathered. As we have heard from S. P. G. circles, a Left wing is soon to split away under the leadership of several functionaries with the perspective of the creation of a new independent Social Democratic Party. Whatever leaflets have been put out by the S. P. G. recently came through the initiative of this group. Our comrades have established connections with it.

All comrades sending in news accounts and articles for publication in the Militant are requested to prepare typed copy, triple spaced.

workers and consolidated their reformist leaders. Worst yet: in every case where, despite the obstacles presented by the leadership, local unity committees for workers' defense were created, the bureaucracy forced its representatives to withdraw under threat of expulsion. It displayed persistence and perseverance only in sabotaging the united front, from above as well as from below. All this it did, to be sure, with the best of intentions.

No policy of the Communist party could, of course, have transformed the social democracy into a party of the revolution. But neither was that the aim. It was necessary to exploit to the limit the contradiction between reformism and Fascism—in order to weaken Fascism, at the same time weakening reformism by exposing to the workers the incapacity of the Social Democratic leadership. These two tasks fused naturally into one. The policy of the Communist International bureaucracy led to the opposite result: the capitulation of the reformists served the interests of Fascism and not of Communism; the Social Democratic workers remained with their leaders; the Communist workers lost faith in themselves and in the leadership.

The masses wanted to fight, but they were obstinately prevented from doing so by the leaders. Tension, uneasiness and finally disorientation disrupted the proletariat from within. It is dangerous to keep molten metal too long on the fire; it is still more dangerous to keep society too long in a state of revolutionary crisis. The petty bourgeoisie swung over in its overwhelming majority to the side of National Socialism only because the proletariat, paralyzed from above, proved powerless to lead it along a different road. The absence of resistance on the part of the workers heightened the self-assurance of Fascism and diminished the fear of the big bourgeoisie confronted by the risk of civil war. The inevitable demoralization of the Communist detachment, increasingly isolated from the proletariat, rendered impossible even a partial resistance. Thus the triumphal procession of Hitler over the bones of the proletarian organizations was assured.

The false strategic conceptions of the Communist International collided with reality at every stage, thereby leading to a course of incomprehensible and inexplicable zigzags. The fundamental principle of the Communist International was: a united front with the reformists cannot be permitted. Then at the most critical hour, the Central Committee of the German Communist party, without explanation or preparation, appealed to the leaders of the social democracy, proposing the united front as an ultimatum today or never! Both leaders and workers in the reformist camp interpreted this step, not as the product of fear, but, on the contrary, as a diabolical trap. After the inevitable failure of an attempt at compromise, the Communist International ordered that the appeal be ignored and the very idea of a united front was once more proclaimed counter-revolutionary. Such an insult to the political consciousness of the masses could not pass with impunity. If up to March 5 one could, with some difficulty, still imagine that the Communist International, in its fear of the enemy, might possibly call upon the Social Democracy, at the last moment, under the club of the enemy—then the appeal of the Praesidium on March 5 proposing joint action to the Social Democratic parties of the entire world, independent of the internal conditions of each country, made even this explanation impossible. In this belated and worldwide proposal for a united front, when Germany was revealed by the flames of the Reichstag fire, there was no longer a word about social-Fascism. The Communist International was even prepared—it is hard to believe this, but it was printed in black and white—to refrain from criticism of the Social Democracy during the whole period of the joint struggle.

The waves of this penicillin-stricken capitulation to reformism had hardly had time to subside when Wells swore fealty to Hitler, and Leipart offered Fascism his assistance and support. "The Communists," immediately declared the Praesidium of the Communist International, "were right in calling the Social Democrats social-Fascists." These people are always right. Then why did they themselves abandon the theory of social-Fascism a few days before this unmistakable confirmation of it? Luckily, nobody dares to put embarrassing questions to the leaders. But the misfortunes do not stop there: the bureaucracy thinks too slowly to keep pace with the present tempo of events. Hardly had the Praesidium fallen back upon the famous "twins," than Hitler accomplished the complete destruction of the free trade unions and, incidentally, arrested Leipart and company. The relations between the twin brothers are not entirely brotherly.

Instead of taking reformism as a historic reality, with its interests and its contradictions, with all its oscillations to the right and left, the bureaucracy operates with mechanical models. Leipart's readiness to crawl on all fours after the defeat, is offered as an argument against the united front before the defeat. As if the policy of making fighting agreements with the reformists were based upon the valor of the reformist leaders and not upon the incompatibility of the organs of the proletarian democracy and the Fascist bands.

The Labor Movement in Greece

Economic and Political Acts of Capitalism and the Working Class

The national revolution of 1821-1829 against Turkish domination was carried through under the influence of the ideas of the French Revolution and financed by the island bourgeoisie, which made its fortune in the Napoleonic wars and by foreign commerce, particularly with Russia. However the long duration of the struggle and the intervention of the Holy Alliance which prevented the extension of the frontiers of free Greece so weakened the Greek bourgeoisie that for the whole period up till the beginning of the 20th century Greek capitalism was unable to make any signal advances in its development. Manufacture had practically been ruined by the war and the merchant marine which constituted the principal basis of the Greek bourgeoisie transformed into a war fleet for the exigencies of the revolution was also badly crippled. The bourgeoisie was replaced by landlord elements who governed the country until the last years prior to the war.

In 1860 small scale industry began to spring up in Greece, trade grew and the merchant marine became more and more important. Weak bourgeois democratic tendencies began to assert themselves in the political movement and the bourgeoisie showed some signs of influence.

The rise of the bourgeoisie began to take on an accelerated rhythm at the opening of this century. It made headway against the landed proprietors who lost in influence and in economic strength. In 1909 the bourgeoisie gave a demonstration of its strength. A military coup d'etat took place in Athens and the trusted man of the bourgeoisie came to power without great struggle. With Venizelos as its political leader the Greek bourgeoisie led the Greek army to victory and to the annexation of new, rich and economically well developed territories (Macedonia, Aegean Isles, etc.).

The Balkan wars and the great war which lasted for Greece till 1922 and ended in the Asia Minor catastrophe helped the Greek bourgeoisie to amass a fortune, to centralize wealth by the expropriation of the peasantry which bore the brunt of the war, and which had to support almost 1,500,000 refugees who returned without any material resources to the country.

Through the wealth accumulated during the war, particularly by the munition manufacturers Greek capitalism began to boom. It established industries which now employ 200,000 workers. Hundreds of thousands of expropriated refugees supply the cheap manual labor so necessary to capitalism. The concentration of industry has progressed and now the industrial magnates are seated in the Council of Banks and vice versa.

We have in Greece side by side with backward forms of production the most developed type of finance capital. Save two banks, which are greatly dependent upon foreign capitalist groups, the whole banking system is bound up with the National Bank of Greece. But the National Bank also collaborates with the Bank of England and with English capital as did the Habsburgs during the Balkan wars of 1912-1913. It shares the surplus value of the country with them. Through its collaboration with Greek capital, English capital exploits the huge transport and industrial concessions, etc.

The Greek proletariat, created together with capitalism, has courageously struggled against the bourgeoisie. The arrival of the refugees in 1922-1923 changed the composition of the working class and its conditions of struggle. They were utilized from the very beginning by Greek capitalism to cut wages and to beat down the demands of the other workers whose unparalleled suffering and wretched conditions were no better than theirs. But these young elements, of a higher cultural formation, who fell into the vise of capitalism, soon became the most aggressive elements and they have conducted severe battles together with the Greek proletariat.

The political and trade union organizations of the Greek proletariat were immensely influenced by the Russian revolution until 1923. All the sincere and even careerist elements took on a red coloration. After the reaction and the return of the bourgeoisie, the reformist leaders took control of the party and the C. G. T. (trade union center) was abandoned in 1925 to conservative elements by its leaders who as members of the party are now the leaders of the reaction in the proletarian movement.

The Communist Party

The Communist party was founded in 1918 by reformist elements who baptized themselves Communists under the influence of the Russian revolution and the sentiment of an imminently approaching revolution in Europe. Adventurism came to the fore in the party after 1922. It formed the basis of Stalinism. The Greek Communist party without ever having been a Communist party passed from the stage of social democracy to Stalinism. Its most noteworthy adventurous acts are the following: in 1922 they were utilized by the militarists to explain the shooting of the royalist ministers. This was also stated at the League of Nations by the Greek ambassador at Geneva who used them as an excuse to the imperialists (the will of the workers). In 1923 at the time of the royalist rising the party allied itself with the military government and appealed to the workers to enlist as volunteers under the bourgeois flag to save democracy. In 1925 they collaborated with the dictator Pangalos. In 1926 with the emperor of Pangalos, and formulated the slogan of a "left republic" and "pure democracy" which provided a shield for the militarist elements. This was the third period. A logical chain.

Although the party led many workers struggles during this long period it could bring none of them to a successful conclusion, it could not reestablish a new leadership. Now the party is a shell of an organization without a spinal column. Its influence over the radicalized masses who are coming towards Communism only because it is the official and exclusive representative of the C. I. and the Russian revolution. By maintaining the appearance of the party Stalinism only compromises the struggles of the Greek proletariat by its militarist slogans which have no basis in actual fact and are purely scholastic.

The present Left Opposition, the Communist organization of Bolshevik-Leninists (Archimexists) has its roots in the origins of the party. At the foundation congress of the party in 1918 the Left wing clearly distinguished itself from the reformists, and after some time it broke from it, formed the "Communist Union", published the weekly magazine Communismo, organized its educational, agitation and propaganda courses, etc. It progressed. But after the adoption of the 21 points by the party and the persistent recommendation of the representative of the C. I. it fused with the party.

These comrades occupied the highest posts in the party. A number of them degenerated. The others understood that it was necessary to work for the formation of a cadres and to help the formation of the Communist party by its publications and by its activities inside the party and in the working class. It was in this sense that the first group met in the winter of 1921 and elaborated a program along these lines. Educational work among the proletariat began and was carried on systematically. This activity was combined with the issuance of the magazine Archives of Marxism which published the classical works of Marx, Engels, Lenin and Trotsky in the Greek language. Up till that time no Communist publication existed in Greece.

The appearance of the magazine so disturbed the bureaucracy that the first numbers sold at the rate of 100 copies in 1923 were torn up by groups organized by them. This was the first hostile act against this tendency. The movement progressed. After ignoring it silently expulsions began. They kept discovering Archimexists in the party till 1925 and expelled them. The years of 1926 to 1928 were years of bitter struggle in which the Stalinists took recourse to terrorist acts to exterminate the Archimexists. The present leaders of the Spartacus group were the organizers of these attempts. In this way the cowardly murders of comrades Georgopoulos, a bakery worker and Lachis, a woodworker, took place. These workers were among the best in the cadre of militants in our times. That we did not have more victims is only because we had comrades in the party who warned us. In Kavalla powder and revolver cartridges, meant for us, were seized. Then came the third period. While the party was busy with the conquest of the streets, there was free ground for the rebuilding of the trade unions, so that in 1930 two revolutionary trade unions in Salonica, Athens and Piraeus were under our influence. On the eve of our first national conference there were scarcely any trade union organizations but ours and the reformists.

Last Whimpers from Scheidemann

Philip Scheidemann, the German social-chauvinist, now safely buried in Karlsruhe, reappeared for a minute—to offer his apologies in the N. Y. Times of July 9th. It seems the Nazis and that dreadful Adolf have been very nasty—in fact they have been slanderous. One of the Nazi lies is the claim that Herr Scheidemann and the other social democrats stabbed the army in the back with a revolution. Instead, on September 29, 1918, the army leaders demanded peace because the army had completely broken down. On October 16, Wilson made it clear that he would treat only with a democratic government, never with the Kaiser. Only then did Scheidemann, a member of the Kaiser's last cabinet, and Ebert, presume to take the power handed to them both by the old government and the revolution. With these facts Scheidemann defends himself against "the agitator, Hitler," who "has continued for fifteen years to peddle the legend of the stab in the back by the November criminals."

But to whom is Scheidemann apologizing? Is it to the workers whom he and the other social democratic leaders betrayed on August 4, 1914 into the slaughter and starvation of the imperialist war? Is it to the Spartacists whom the Council of Commissioners, made up of Ebert, Scheidemann, Landsberg, Noske, and Wissel, all Social Democrats, killed in December 1918 and January 1919? Is it to Liebknecht and Luxemburg who were killed in cold blood at Noske's orders? Not at all. Scheidemann is apologizing to the same bourgeoisie whom he served so faithfully during the war, whom again and again he saved from the proletariat during the years of revolution, whose final triumph he made possible by disarming the proletariat with parliamentary lies.

But now Scheidemann and all the boot-lickers of his type are cast out as useless tools. No longer is the Social Democracy able to accomplish its task of supporting bourgeois democracy by holding back the workers. Instead the bourgeoisie are using the reactionary storekeepers, white-collar slaves, students, and peasants as a Fascist fist to crush the workers, destroy all traces of democratic rights, demolish all workers organizations—including the happy hunting ground of the Scheidemann bureaucracy the social democracy.

Now the social democrats, who have been fortunate enough to save their hides, fill the places of exile, whimper to their master how faithful they were as servants, and mutter impotent threats against their successor, Hitler. These men who were glad in 1914 to support the Kaiser in the war, now call for a war against Hitler. Says Scheidemann: "It must be the task of the entire civilized world to paralyze these adventures." That this may not exclude a bloody war is self-evident."

After a lifetime of pussyfooting with the bourgeoisie in Germany proper, Herr Scheidemann makes bold—in his Karlsruhe exile. And even this Karlsruhe boldness is characteristic of the social democratic bureaucracy, though it is only a dethroned snout: Herr Scheidemann calls for war against Hitler—not, god forbid, by a mobilization of the world working class—but as the "task of the entire civilized world". In this appeal he summed up the beginning and the end of the bureaucratic physiology: "Too weak, too scared of itself to call upon the workers to struggle in time, the bureaucracy to the very last trust in every other quack salvation. And when everything is all over, when the enemy is firmly entrenched, it takes an order depriving them of their pensions to make the bureaucratic leaders so bold as to shake off their social-chauvinism in favor of salvation by the entire civilized world."

The example of Scheidemann is a deep, though tragic, lesson in the logic of bureaucratic degeneration. It is necessary once more to recall that this degeneration began by the substitution of social-chauvinist reformism for the Marxist conception of the Permanent Revolution. The Stalinist bureaucracy too, within its own limits and in its own special circumstances, has already gone a long stretch of the road along this same line of degeneration. The fate of Scheidemann should serve as a warning to the Stalinists, lest they too have to resort to "Karlsbad Boldness". Communists everywhere must work with all forces to prevent this and for the reestablishment of the conception of Permanent Revolution in the Communist International and in the Communist Party of the Soviet Union.

Historical Objectiveness..

Everyone digests his food and oxygenates his blood. But not everyone will dare write a thesis about digestion and blood circulation. Not so with the social sciences. Since each person lives under the influence of the market and of the historic process in general, it is considered sufficient to possess common sense in order to write exercises on economic and especially historic-philosophic themes. As a general rule only "objectives" is demanded of an historical work. In point of fact whatever does bear this high-sounding title in the language of common sense, has nothing to do with scientific objectiveness.

The Philistine, especially if he is separated from the fighting arena by space and time, considers himself elevated above the fighting camps from the mere fact that he understands neither one of them. He sincerely takes his blindness regarding the working of historical forces for the height of impartiality, just as he is used to considering himself the normal measure of all things. Notwithstanding their documentary value, too many historical papers are being written according to this standard. A blunting of sharp edges, even distribution of light and shadow, a conciliatory moralizing, with a thorough disguising of the author's political sympathies, easily secures for a historical work the high reputation of "objectiveness."

In so far as the subject of investigation is a phenomenon as poorly reconcilable with common sense as revolution, this historical "objectiveness" dictates in advance its immutable conclusions: the cause of the disturbances lies in the fact that the conservatives were much too conservative, the revolutionaries much too revolutionary; the historical excesses called civil war, can in the future, be avoided if the private owners will be more generous, and the hungry people more moderate. A book with such tendencies has a good effect on the nerves, especially during an epoch of world crisis.

The demand of science, and not of a parlor-philistine "objectives", really is that one should expose the social conditioning of historical events, no matter how unpleasant they may be for the nerves. History is not a dumping-ground for documents and moral maxims. History is a science no less objective than physiology. It requires not a hypocritical "impartiality" but a scientific method. One can accept or reject the materialistic dialectic as a method of historical science, but one must reckon with it. Scientific objectiveness can be and must be lodged in the very method itself. If the author did not manage its proper application it must be pointed out exactly where.

I attempted to base my History not on my own political sympathies, but on the material foundations of society. Revolution I considered as the process, conditioned by all the past, of the direct struggle of classes for power. The center of attention for me was those changes in the consciousness of the classes taking place under the effect of the feverish tempo of their own struggle. I considered political parties and political agents in no other light than that of mass shifts and clashes. Four parallel processes conditioned by the social structure of the country formed thus the background of the whole narrative; the evolution of the consciousness of the proletariat from February to October; the change of the moods in the army; a growth of the peasant vindictiveness; the awakening and insurrection of the oppressed nationalities. By revealing the dialectic of the consciousness of masses thrown out of equilibrium, the author sought to give the nearest immediate key to all the events of the revolution.

A literary work is "truthful" or artistic when the inter-relations of the heroes develop, not according to the author's desires, but according to the latent forces of the characters and setting. Scientific knowledge differs greatly from the artistic. But the two also have some traits in common, defined by the dependence of the description on the thing described. An historical work is scientific when facts combine into one whole process which, as in life, lives according to its own interior laws.

Is the depiction of the classes of Russia true? Do these classes through their parties and politicians talk their own language? Do the events—naturally, without being forced—go back to the social source, i. e. to the struggle of living historic forces? Does the general conception of the revolution conflict with actual facts? I must admit with gratitude that a large number of critics have approached my work precisely from the standpoint of these really objective, i. e., scientific criteria. Their critical remarks may be right or wrong, but the great majority of them are fruitful.

It is not accidental, however, that those critics who miss "objectiveness" neglect completely the problem of historic determinism. They are really complaining about the "injustice" of the author toward his opponents, as if it were a question not of scientific research, but of a school report-card with marks for good conduct. One of the critics is offended for the monarchy, another for the liberals, a third for the compromisers. Since the sympathies of these critics got neither recognition nor indulgence from the actual reality in 1917, they would now like to find consolation in the pages of history; just as some people seek shelter from the blows of destiny in romantic literature. But the last thing the author had in mind was to interpret in his book the verdict of the historic process itself. The offended persons themselves, by the way, in spite of the fifteen or sixteen years which they have had at their disposal, have never attempted to explain the causes of what happened to them. The White emigration has not produced one single historical work worthy of the name. The cause of its misfortune it still tries to find in "German gold", the illiteracy of the masses, the criminal plots of the Bolsheviks. The personal irritation of the apostles of objectiveness—I trust this is indisputable—must necessarily be the sharper, the more convincingly the historical narrative reveals the inevitability of their destruction and their want of any hope for the future.

The more cautious of these politically disappointed critics often disguise the source of their annoyance in complaints to the effect that the author of the History permits himself to use polemics and irony. That, they seem to think, is beneath the dignity of the scientific guild. But revolution itself is a polemic become a mass action. Nor is irony lacking to the historic process; during a revolution it can be measured in millions of horse-power. Speeches, resolutions, letters of those taking part, as well as their subsequent recollections, have necessarily a polemic character. There is nothing easier than to "reconcile" all this chaos of bitter struggle of interests and ideas according to the method of the golden mean; there is also nothing more fruitless. The author strove to define the true relative might in the course of the social struggle of all opinions, slogans, promises and demands by means of a critical (or, if you wish, polemical) sorting and cleaning. The individual he reduced to the social, the particular to the general, the subjective he confronted with the objective. This is exactly what history consists of in our opinion as a science.

There exists a quiet special group of critics who are offended personally for Stalin, and for whom history outside of that question does not exist. These people consider themselves "friends" of the Russian revolution. In reality they are merely attorneys for the Soviet bureaucracy. That is not the same thing. The bureaucracy grew stronger as the activity of the masses weakened. The power of the bureaucracy is an expression of the reaction against the revolution. It is true that this reaction is still developing on the foundations laid by the October revolution, but even so it is a reaction. The attorneys of the bureaucracy are often attorneys of the anti-October reaction. This is not altered by the fact that they perform their functions unconsciously.

Like shop-keepers grown rich who create for themselves a new and more suitable genealogy, the bureaucratic class which grew out of the revolution has created its own historiography. Hundreds of rotary presses are at its service. But its quantity does not make up for its scientific quality. Even to please the most disinterested friends of the Soviet authorities, I could not leave untouched these historic legends which are perhaps very flattering to the vanity of the bureaucracy, but which nevertheless have the misfortune to contradict facts and documents.

I shall confine myself to one single example which, as it seems to me, well illustrates the matter. A number of pages in my book are devoted to refuting the fairy-tale created after 1924 to the effect that I attempted to postpone the armed insurrection until after the Congress of Soviets, while Lenin, it government will have to face the question which it has been able to avoid so far—to inflate or not to inflate, how, how much. The higher prices and speculative production in anticipation of future markets have run up, the sharper will be the break. Graduated doses of "controlled" inflation may then be administered to soften the break or change the downward trend, but the resulting price advances will create a larger demand for money (each unit of which will have lower purchasing power) and thus only reproduce, after a shorter or longer time, the previous situation. Whenever the attempt will be made to alter the shock of readjustment and the demand by the bourgeoisie for relief through inflation will be repeated.

All during this period, unless the workers can succeed in organizing so as to obtain higher wages and higher profits in proportion to the advance in prices, they will be squeezed tighter and tighter, their living standards and real wages will be forced steadily downward. Finally, at some point or other in this course, the bourgeoisie, tormented at the prospects of losing control of its life-blood, money, will be compelled to call a halt, whether through drastic deflation or through the mere cessation of inflation, which will have a similar effect. The earlier this is done, the shorter and less violent the ensuing crisis. Even under present conditions, however, when actual inflation has not begun, the prerequisites for a sharp though perhaps short crisis have already been created.

With this perspective of shocks and sharp readjustments, the working class will find itself opposed by the class enemy, under the Industrial Recovery Act, in a threefold form—the capitalist himself, strengthened and concentrated through the encouragement of monopoly and the elimination of "wasteful competition"; the honor-roll state, as supervisor and coordinator of the concentration of capital and guardian of the new "code"; and the reformist trade-unions who will endeavor to utilize the present situation, so advantageous for them, to secure the exclusive monopoly before the capitalist organizations and the government of the representation of the working class, to the end of reducing it to a willing victim to the super-exploitation planned for the immediate future. —B. J. FIELD.

seems, backed by a majority of the Central Executive Committee, succeeded in having the insurrection carried out on the eve of the Congress. By adducing numerous evidences, mostly indirect, I tried to prove—and I think I undeniably did prove—that Lenin, cut off by his illegal status from the theatre of struggle, was too impatient to bring on the insurrection, separating it completely from the Congress of Soviets. I, on the other hand, backed by the majority of the Central Committee, tried to bring the insurrection as near as possible to the Congress of Soviets, and cover it with the latter's authority. With all its importance the disagreement was of a purely practical and temporary character. Later Lenin frankly admitted that he had been in the wrong.

While I was working on my History I did not have in hand the collection of speeches pronounced at the Moscow anniversary meeting of April 23, 1920, celebrating Lenin's 50th birthday. One of the pages in that book reads verbatim as follows: "We in the Central Committee decided to go ahead with reinforcing the Soviets, to summon the Congress of Soviets, to open the insurrection, and proclaim the Congress of Soviets the organ of state power. Ilych, who was then in hiding, did not agree and wrote (in the middle of September-L.D.) that . . . the Democratic Central Committee must be dissolved and arrested. We understand that things were not so simple. . . . All the holes, the pitfalls on our course were more visible to us. . . . In spite of all Ilych's demands we went ahead with reinforcement, and on the 25th of October confronted the picture of an insurrection. Ilych smiling, slyly looking at us, said: 'Yes, you were right.'" (Fiftieth Anniversary of V. I. Ulyanov-Lenin, 1920, pp. 2728).

The above quotation is taken from a speech pronounced by none other than Stalin, some five years before he put into circulation the poisonous insinuation that I attempted to "belittle" the role of Lenin in the revolution of October 25th. If the just quoted document, which fully confirms my story (in cruder terms, it is true), had been in my hands a year ago, it would have relieved me of the necessity of adducing indirect and less authoritative proofs. But, on the other hand, I am content that this small book, forgotten by all, poorly printed on poor paper (1920, a heavy year!) happened into my hand so early. By this very fact it brings additional and very striking proof of the "objectiveness" of my narrative even in the sphere of those disputed questions of a personal character.

Nobody—I shall allow myself to state this in a most categorical manner—nobody has so far found in my narrative a violation of truthfulness which is the first commandment for historical, as well as all other narratives. Particular lapses are possible. Tendentious distortions—no! If it were possible to find in the Moscow archives even one single document directly or indirectly refuting or weakening my narrative, it would have been long ago translated and published in all languages. The adverse theorem is not hard to prove: all the documents in the least degree dangerous to the official legends are carefully kept out of sight. It is not surprising that the advocates of the Stalin bureaucracy, calling themselves friends of the October revolution, have to make up for this lack of arguments by a surplus of zeal. But this type of criticism worries my scientific conscience least of all. Legends dissolve, facts remain. —LEON TROTSKY.

The face of the threat to cut off relief is a single, united unemployed organization that will be able to rally the whole million or more of jobless in the city solidly under its banner. That is the task for the present. That requires the immediate adoption by the Unemployed Councils of the unity basis put forward by the Chicago Conference, which last May created the National Federation of Unemployed Workers Leagues, in which the Stalinist participated. On this basis, they will be able to challenge the social reformists to enter into the united front and to hold them responsible before the masses of workers.

The establishment of such a genuine, Leninist united front—with freedom of expression and criticism for every labor tendency—will also enable the Communists to carry out the Communist task in the mass movement—that of educating broad layers of the working class with demonstrative class struggle facts in the fertility and rottenness of the capitalist system and in the inevitability of the Communist way out of misery—the proletarian dictatorship.

The Tammany threat still impends. The need for the unity of the unemployed workers is indispensable. If it is to be defeated, if Tammany is to be prevented—by splitting the workers' ranks—from reducing the unemployed to a state where they get not enough to live, and just too much to die. The task of the Communists is obvious—frank and open, Leninist united front proposal to the reformists, which will make unity possible and insofar as it will permit the Communists to implant class consciousness within broad strata of the workers. —S. One of the pages in that book reads verbatim as follows: "We in the Central Committee decided to go ahead with reinforcing the Soviets, to summon the Congress of Soviets, to open the insurrection, and proclaim the Congress of Soviets the organ of state power. Ilych, who was then in hiding, did not agree and wrote (in the middle of September-L.D.) that . . . the Democratic Central Committee must be dissolved and arrested. We understand that things were not so simple. . . . All the holes, the pitfalls on our course were more visible to us. . . . In spite of all Ilych's demands we went ahead with reinforcement, and on the 25th of October confronted the picture of an insurrection. Ilych smiling, slyly looking at us, said: 'Yes, you were right.'" (Fiftieth Anniversary of V. I. Ulyanov-Lenin, 1920, pp. 2728).

The above quotation is taken from a speech pronounced by none other than Stalin, some five years before he put into circulation the poisonous insinuation that I attempted to "belittle" the role of Lenin in the revolution of October 25th. If the just quoted document, which fully confirms my story (in cruder terms, it is true), had been in my hands a year ago, it would have relieved me of the necessity of adducing indirect and less authoritative proofs. But, on the other hand, I am content that this small book, forgotten by all, poorly printed on poor paper (1920, a heavy year!) happened into my hand so early. By this very fact it brings additional and very striking proof of the "objectiveness" of my narrative even in the sphere of those disputed questions of a personal character.

Nobody—I shall allow myself to state this in a most categorical manner—nobody has so far found in my narrative a violation of truthfulness which is the first commandment for historical, as well as all other narratives. Particular lapses are possible. Tendentious distortions—no! If it were possible to find in the Moscow archives even one single document directly or indirectly refuting or weakening my narrative, it would have been long ago translated and published in all languages. The adverse theorem is not hard to prove: all the documents in the least degree dangerous to the official legends are carefully kept out of sight. It is not surprising that the advocates of the Stalin bureaucracy, calling themselves friends of the October revolution, have to make up for this lack of arguments by a surplus of zeal. But this type of criticism worries my scientific conscience least of all. Legends dissolve, facts remain. —LEON TROTSKY.

The face of the threat to cut off relief is a single, united unemployed organization that will be able to rally the whole million or more of jobless in the city solidly under its banner. That is the task for the present. That requires the immediate adoption by the Unemployed Councils of the unity basis put forward by the Chicago Conference, which last May created the National Federation of Unemployed Workers Leagues, in which the Stalinist participated. On this basis, they will be able to challenge the social reformists to enter into the united front and to hold them responsible before the masses of workers.

The establishment of such a genuine, Leninist united front—with freedom of expression and criticism for every labor tendency—will also enable the Communists to carry out the Communist task in the mass movement—that of educating broad layers of the working class with demonstrative class struggle facts in the fertility and rottenness of the capitalist system and in the inevitability of the Communist way out of misery—the proletarian dictatorship.

The Columbus Conference

Unemployed Councils are associated (note the substitute for affiliation), and such other groups as are willing to cooperate in the unification of the unemployed organizations into one organization through a Unity Convention."

We call attention to the fact that this official statement of the Council N. C., which had been circulated in leaders from the first day on, was made before any national organization of Leagues was formed. Thus we see that the Stalinists for some reason or other saw fit to stop their earlier plea that "a new national organization" be not set up. We also call attention to the fact that although both the Councils and Leagues are represented on the N. C. of the Federation, neither the Councils did not ask support and affiliation to the FUWLA; they proposed instead a Unity Convention for amalgamation, which unification should be prepared by local "united front federations".

All the Stalinist-Musteite talk about preparing for "unity" and amalgamation without first of all having all the unemployed organizations work together in a National Federation for a long period of time is plain deception. Both of these groups are more interested in maintaining mechanical control of their own national movements for the furthering of their own "political" ends than they are in building one huge mass organization of unemployed workers on a national scale. When the Musteites and Stalinists refuse to support completely the national Federation movement they in fact refuse to take the most necessary step towards the complete unification and amalgamation of the unemployed; and all their talk about the fact that the FUWLA has not yet told them just how much representation they will get on its committees shows that neither of them believe that they will be able to long retain their "leadership" if once they should happen to lose mechanical control of their movements.

While the Stalinists found it necessary to sabotage the work of the national Federation in a roundabout manner the Musteites merely used their machine for a steam roller. First the Resolution Committee which they controlled saw to it that no resolutions dealing with the question of affiliation, to the FUWLA came up until long after they had placed a new constitution before the convention and had it adopted. This constitution of the National Unemployed League contains a clause which leaves the whole question of unity, federation, etc., up to the incoming Musteite National Committee.

After this was adopted, a resolution by delegate Newby, asking that the convention affiliate the new organization which it had just set up to the FUWLA, was allowed to come before the convention for a short time. But this was only after the new organization had been set up and all of the officers' untested nominations. Moreover, a resolution from Rose of California dealing with the setting up of a national committee of federated and other delegates for the calling of a unity conference was just ignored in committee.

Bidenz set the Musteite key-note by speaking against Newby's resolution for affiliation to FUWLA and after Newby was permitted to speak, the Musteite chairman Kamuglia closed the discussion and railroaded Bidenz's motion that the resolution be referred to the incoming National Committee. A "division of the house" was not permitted as such would have shown much more support for affiliation to the FUWLA than the mere hearing of "ayes" and "nays" showed. For example, if put to a vote the 8 delegates from California would have received 10 votes equal to the votes of the 307 from Ohio.

dissemination of their BILL, they did not obtain an endorsement of the December meeting. Muste gained the most out of the united front from above. However, this much can be said, now that the Musteites have the executive committee and the power to make the decisions that the conference should have made, they will be able to complete the original agreement by the continuation of the united front from above. The bloc of Leagues and Councils lost at Columbus but they hope to make up for this by December.

While Muste and Hathaway were roaming the conference grounds arm in arm the Daily Worker, in an editorial, accused the Musteites of breaking the agreement. When the Stalinists steering committee saw how reactionary the conference was the Unemployed Council representatives decided it was time to be ready in case they had to change horses in the middle of the stream, to negotiate with the Left Bloc of the conference around the National Unemployed Federation, of course trying to exclude the Left Opposition members present.

THE RIGHT WING
In the state conference of the Unemployed Leagues the flag-waving patriots took the conference out of the hands of the Musteites. A revival atmosphere filled the air more than once. This bloc of Ohio delegates numbered 300 out of the 500 in the national conference, were mainly composed of Right wing elements. The bulk of the remainder were Musteites. They had tremendous influence on the national conference and determined its main course. The Musteites fought this Right wing where they threatened the Musteite control but the Musteites did not take one step beyond this in a political fight against them.

THE FREE LANCERS
The Musteites catered to the progressive free lancers, slobbered all over them andaped some in on this basis. Dennis Burt was also present, but he paddled his own canoe. He was made chairman of the Constitution Committee that drew up the Musteite "Declaration of Independence". In the main, Burt supported the Musteites.

THE LOVESTONEITES
The Lovestoneites were criticized by Lovestone for their concessions at the Chicago Unemployed Conference so they came to Columbus ready to bargain with Muste. But Muste had already closed his deal with Stalinism and did not care to deal with the Lovestoneites. The Lovestoneites, through their unemployed organizations which are affiliated to the National Unemployed Federation, presented a draft program for a new federation to the Columbus conference. They did not present this to the Federation to which they are affiliated. If the Lovestoneites had been able to obtain a "better deal" at Columbus they would have deserted the Federation which they are affiliated with. The old Lovestone policy, the two-faced game, cannot be discarded by their group.

The Declaration of Independence or rather Declaration of Workers Rights, a political document of the Musteites is signed by the Constitution Committee headed by Batt and the Steering Committee of the Conference which includes four Lovestoneite signatures. Does Lovestone agree with the action of his fraction?

and one delegate from Washington who favored affiliation had a vote of 5. The big votes of Ohio and Pennsylvania would have been split, and enough votes from the other states could quite likely have been gained for the federation affiliation. As have passed the resolution. But the Musteites railroaded the thing through because their followers would make the most noise.

It appears that the struggle of the workers for first federation and later unity of unemployed organizations on a national scale will have to be fought out in opposition to the Musteites and Stalinists. —N.

The German Catastrophe

In August 1932, when Germany was still ruled by the "social general," von Schleicher, who was supposed to assure the union of Hitler with Weis, announced by the Communist International, I wrote:

Everything goes to show that the Weis-von Schleicher-Hitler triangle will fall apart before it has really been put together. But perhaps it will be replaced by a Hitler-Weis combination? Let us assume that the Social Democracy, without being afraid of its own workers, would seek to sell Hitler its toleration. Fascism, however, does not need this commodity; it is not the toleration of the Social Democracy which it needs but its abolition. The Hitler government can realize its task only when it has broken the resistance of the proletariat and all the possible organs of such a resistance. Therein lies the historical role of Fascism. ("The Only Road," page 31.)

That the reformists, after the defeat, would be happy if Hitler were to permit them to vegetate legally until better times return, cannot be doubted. But unfortunately for them, Hitler—the experience of Italy has not been in vain for him—realizes that the labor organizations, even if their leaders accept a muzzle, would inevitably become a threatening danger at the first political crisis.

Doctor Ley, the corporal of the present "labor front," has determined, with much more logic than the Praesidium of the Communist International, the relationship between the so-called twins. "Marxism is playing dead," he said on May 2 "in order to rise again at a more favorable opportunity. . . . The sky fly does not deceive us! It is better for us to deal him the final blow rather than to tolerate him until he recovers. The Leipzarts and the Grossmans may feign all sorts of devotion to Hitler—but it is better to keep them under lock and key. That is why we are striking out of the hands of the Marxist rabble its principal weapon (the trade unions) and are thus depriving it of the last possibility of arming itself again." If the bureaucracy of the Communist International were not so infallible and if it listened to criticism, it would not have made additional mistakes between March 22, when Leipart swore fealty to Hitler, and May 2, when Hitler, in spite of the oath, arrested him.

Essentially the theory of "social Fascism" could have been refuted even if the Fascists had not done such a thorough job of forcing themselves into the trade unions. Even if Hitler had found it necessary, as a result of the relationship of forces, to leave Leipart temporarily and nominally at the head of the trade unions, the agreement would not have eliminated the incompatibility of the fundamental interests. Even though tolerated by Fascism, the reformists would remember the despots of the Weimar democracy and that alone would make them concealed enemies. How can one fail to see that the interests of the Social Democracy and of Fascism are incompatible when even the independent existence of the Sted Helms is Mussolini tolerated the Social Democracy and even the Communist party for some time, only to destroy them all the more mercilessly later on. The vote of the Social Democratic deputies in the Reichstag for the foreign policy of Hitler, covering this party with fresh dishonor, will not amandate its fate by one iota.

As one of the main causes for the victory of Fascism, the lackless leaders refer—in secret, to be sure—to the "genius" of Hitler, who foresaw everything and neglected nothing. It would be fruitless now to submit the Fascist policy to a retrospective criticism. One need only remember that Hitler, during the summer of last year, allowed the high peak of the Fascist tide to escape him. But even the gross loss of rhythm—a colossal mistake—did not have fatal results. The burning of the Reichstag by Göring, even if this act of provocation was crudely executed, did, however, yield the necessary result. The same must be said of the Fascist policy as a whole, for it led to victory. One cannot, unfortunately, deny the superiority of the Fascist over the proletarian leadership. But it is only out of an unbecoming modesty that the heathen chiefs keep silent about their own part in the victory of Hitler. There is the game of checkers and there is also the game of losers-win. The game that was played in Germany has this singular feature, that Hitler played checkers and his opponents played to lose. As for political genius, Hitler has no need for it. The strategy of his enemy compensated largely for anything his own strategy lacked.

Fighting the 'Recovery' Act

Cleveland Conference Against the N.I.R.A.

Weeks have passed since the Industrial Recovery Act became a law. In this time big business and its government have been drafting codes that are ushering in a new form of industrial slavery.

The broad layers of the working class have not yet been organized to resist and to fight back. This is due to the confusion that exists within the ranks of the organized forces of the class.

The A. F. L. leaders, the Right wing in the Progressive Miners of America and the conservative Independent unions are supporting the I. R. A. The socialist leaders are singing praises to the "great forward step". The majority of the other forces are in confusion.

The Stalinists, as usual, were not equal to the task. The Stalinists did not recognize the danger until after it had fallen upon their heads.

Now, at last the Stalinists have called for action to fight the Industrial Recovery Act. They are calling a national conference in Cleveland, August 28-29, for all trade unions, unemployed organizations, and others; to protect the trade unions, and to rally the class against the capitalist attack.

We welcome the fact that the Stalinists and Mustelites, who are jointly calling this conference, have at last realized the necessity of the struggle, but they have not presented a program suitable for resistance to the bosses' attack. NOW to fight the capitalist offensive is the most important question.

Anyone can criticize after the event. We are criticizing the program and method of calling the conference prior to the August 28-29 conference. Further, we were the first to raise the cry of alarm, to give a Marxian analysis, and to fight for the mobilization of the class against the capitalists' new attacks. At the Gillespie Trade Union conference a delegate of the Left Opposition presented a resolution, prior to the act becoming a law. A bloc of Stalinists and Right wing delegates voted down the Left wing of the conference fighting around the resolution (See the Militant of June).

The national conference called by the Muste-Stalinists bloc is a caricature of the proposal presented at Gillespie last June. A few weeks later, at the first national unemployed conference since the act became a law, at the Columbus Muste-Stalinist conference, the Left Opposition again raised the question of the Industrial Recovery Act, especially dealing with its effects upon the unemployed. We were the only ones to raise our voice on this subject. The Muste-Stalinist bloc ignored this vital question. At last they have realized its importance. But how are they going to fight it?

In regards to the Needle Trades Code, the Right wing proposed a 30-hour week and a definite minimum wage. The Left wing, Stalinist group proposed a 40-hour week and said nothing about a minimum wage. Later the Freiheit said that was a mistake but without stating what should be done. Preparations for the Cleveland Conference are under way. A trade union conference was called in New York, July 15th. The Stalinists passed out a draft resolution. This is a step forward and has some good proposals but the draft leaves out an answer to the trade union question. So does the resolution dealing with the Needle Trades that was passed out. So does the call for the Cleveland conference.

In all of the preparations for the Cleveland Conference, the Stalinists refuse to answer the following questions (Let us hope they answer them in the near future): Do the facts refute the Stalinist theory that the A. F. L. is on a decline and is being liquidated and that therefore we must split locals away and build parallel unions all along the line? Will the Industrial Recovery Act help to rearm the A. F. L. leaders in their hold upon the trade union movement? Should we hasten to build a Left wing within the A. F. L.? Should the work, Left wing, paper unions return to the A. F. L. en bloc and function as a Left wing there? To ignore these questions, in the needle trades resolution in the New York Conference resolution and in the Cleveland conference call, is to ignore the most vital question of trade union policy and tactics in the struggle to protect the class, its trade unions and to repel the capitalist offensive. The Left Opposition answers these questions in the positive now as we have in the immediate past.

The working class have no voice in drafting the codes for the different industries. Only the pressure of the class through class struggle will force concessions from the enemy class. How to organize this class pressure effectively against the capitalists depends

Bonapartist Government Robs Labor of Long-Standing Rights in Austria

Vienna, Austria.—

Quite a number of bombshells have exploded in Austria in the last few weeks. Their significance should not be underestimated even if they did not quite hit their mark. It must not be overlooked that they constitute tremendous progress in the undermining of the entire Austrian labor law and therewith of the living standards of the Austrian working class. The work was carried on with deadly calm, without any outer effects. The peace was not even disturbed by those who were hit—the apparatus of the S. P. saw to that—but each blow had its effect.

The first mine was laid in the May days by the Dollfuss government, when it destroyed the workers' right to strike with one stroke of the pen. This blow was completed with the introduction of compulsory arbitration for all "vital" industries, to which the printshops were added, and lately so, the building trades. No matter how vague the clauses of this act may be, its sense is quite transparent: the old lordly rights of the boss class are once again to be established with unlimited sway. If no agreement is reached at the arbitration office, before which all disputes between employers and workers are brought, or if one party raises objections against the verdict, then the super-arbitrator can make a decision which is binding for all. That such a decision will never do harm to the employers cause is quite obvious.

In the public utilities the elimination of the workers' voice from the decision of their working conditions takes place even less maskingly. In the future only the administration is to decide about conditions of work there.

After the metal workers and the railroad workers, the workers of the building trades form the most

MINERS PROTEST VIGOROUSLY AGAINST RIGHT WING'S RE- MOVAL OF ALLARD FROM P. M. A. POST

EDITOR'S NOTE—In the rush to compete with the John L. Lewis gang for the favors accruing to labor fakers from the Roosevelt National Industrial Recovery Act administration, the Right wing in the Progressive Miners of America have launched a broadside against all Left wingers and genuine progressives in the union. Being in control of a majority on the leading organs, their first step in this direction was the removal of Gerry Allard from the editorship of the P. M. A. paper, the Progressive Miner. The reply of the rank and file to this Right wing challenge is recounted in the dispatch we print below.

Gillespie, Ill.—Local Union No. 1 of the Progressive Miners of America voted almost unanimously in favor of a resolution demanding the reinstatement of Gerry Allard, recently deposed editor of the official organ.

This is the largest single local union in the P. M. A., with a membership of 2500. Claude Peary, president of the union, is a member of this local.

President Peary and Secretary Keck appeared at the meeting to explain their actions. Allard presented his case in person, claiming that the officials had no substantial reasons for removing him. After a hectic 5-hour debate the local union voted overwhelmingly to support Allard. A statement previously issued by the officials stated that they were confident the membership of the organization would accept the executive board's decision on the matter.

Fascists Kill Young Worker in Astoria, L.I.

New York, N. Y.—While bourgeois democratic America hailed General Balbo, representative of the first Fascist state, the latest embryonic Fascist organization the Khaki Shirts of America was proving its kinship to the Black and Brown Shirts of Italy and Germany by the murder of Antonio Ferro, a working class student of City College, New York.

The murder took place at a meeting of Khaki Shirts held in Astoria, Long Island, on Friday last. When some workers and students in the audience questioned the statements made by the speakers a general attack was launched against them. One of the Khaki Shirts drew a revolver and shot young Antonio Ferro.

Though the murderer is known to the authorities he has not been arrested, but instead two of the anti-Fascists who were present are being held by the police. They are Athos Terzani and Michael Palumbo, charged with felonious assault. The International Labor Defense which is handling the defense of the frame-up workers is also pressing for the arrest of the real murderer. Full support of the I. L. D. in this case is the duty of all workers.

The murder in New York by the Khaki Shirts is in line with their provocative actions elsewhere, particularly in Philadelphia, where apparently is their headquarters. With the tacit approval of "law and order", they direct their first efforts against the "Reds".

The history of similar organizations such as the "Nazis" which started out as "anti-Marxist" and ended up with the destruction of all forms of workers' organizations must be driven home and used in the building of a united front of all labor manifestation of nascent Fascism in America.

NAZIS LAUNCH NEW ATROCITY CAMPAIGN AGAINST WORKERS

Leipzig, Germany.—In the last few days, a new wave of persecution has swept the city, especially since the proscription of the S. P. G. In the streets, all those wearing corduroy jackets are halted and the jackets confiscated as impermissible "uniform apparel". The same holds true for the blue linen shirts formerly worn by the Socialist Youth.

But the Nazis are not concerned only with clothing. The strong distribution of material from all organizations has aroused in them a blind wrath. Consequently, at the unemployment registry offices, all the unemployed have been forced to undergo thorough examinations. Workers are also stopped arbitrarily in the streets. On the morning of the proscription of the S. P. G. the former social democratic factory councilors in many of the big concerns were put under arrest (Borgguld, Stoehr, etc.).

The new atrocities can be explained only by the fact that the fighting spirit of the Leipzig workers precisely has held on longer and more firmly than elsewhere. In many factories, the NSBO (Nazi factory cells) did not succeed in getting more than one or two members.

Along with the new printed organ you have at your disposal a hectographed (excellently hectographed) bulletin, "The Communist". It would be extremely desirable to devote the greatest possible space in this publication to the examination of the policy of the British Communist Party along the lines indicated above, and also to the discussion of controversial questions within the Left Opposition itself. While persistently striving to widen our influence among the workers, we must at the same time make it a point to work for the theoretical and political education of our own ranks. We have a long and laborious road in front of us. For this we need first-class cadres. With all my heart I wish you success.

HITLER PREPARES "SUICIDES" FOR COMRADE TORGLER AND THE BULGARIAN COMMUNISTS

Berlin, Germany.—The trial on the "arson" attempt against the Reichstag has been postponed several times. The mysterious Van der Lubbe is designated as the chief defendant, comrades Torgler, Popoff, Dimitroff and Taneoff are named as being "suspected". Those who are really responsible for it, Goering and Co., are working on new provocations.

The Fascist government keeps on postponing the trial and is attempting even to suppress it altogether. The jailed Communists are submitted to torture. It is quite apparent that "suicides" are being planned for the inconvenient "criminals".

The whole international working class must enter into a broad and serious protest action against the planned murder of comrades Torgler, Popoff, Dimitroff and Taneoff!

HOW NAZI "PACIFISM" LOOKS IN PRACTICE

From a small town in Thuringia, we receive the following news, which throws a sharp light on the "peace work" of the loud-mouthed Adolf: In this place there is a great watch factory which at one time employed thousands of workers. The watch factory was closed down completely. It has been transformed now for the production of hand grenades, incendiary bombs, and other war material. Comment is superfluous.

Spartacus Delegates Raise Internat'l Issues at Youth Anti-Fascist Meet

The Youth Conference against War and Fascism which met last Sunday, July 16 at the Church of all Nations was called by a long list of organizations, primarily the Young Communist League and its auxiliaries. The Sunday meeting was to prepare for an international conference of youth, in Paris, late this summer. About seventy delegates, composed in the largest part of young Communists representing Y. C. L. units, I. W. O. youth units and the like, appeared. The War Resisters League, a group of militant pacifists, the Lovestonite youth, the National Student League and the Spartacus Youth Club also sent delegates.

The only display of enthusiasm at the conference took place when the members of the Spartacus Youth Club, attempted to read the statement printed below, comrade Carter was allowed three minutes, after a protracted period of disorder, in which to read the statement. When another comrade attempted to complete the reading of the statement, a vote was passed forbidding it.

It is significant that the Y. C. L. ers who ran the conference refused an answer to the several times repeated question of the brutal treatment accorded to delegates of the International Left Opposition at the Paris Anti-Fascist Congress this past June. A report of the Paris Congress was the major, and only, report on Fascism, at the Sunday conference. Yet we were called "disrupters", and "out of order", for questioning and for condemning the treatment of our comrades at the Paris meet.

Little can be expected of this conference and its customary decisions for work, just as little can be expected of any of the numerous anti-war conferences that the Stalinists have conceived. Undoubtedly it, as well as the international conference still to be held, will go

Slavery Provisions Exposed in Code for Steel Industry

The fierce attack upon the living standard of the workers, which the American capitalists are making under the cover of Roosevelt's Industrial Recovery Act, becomes more openly vicious with each new code. In the newly-monthed hypocrisy of the proposed steel code, the robber barons of the steel industry make clear their intention of taking their rightful places at the head of the capitalist offensive. After the Cossack terrorism of the Great Steel Strike in 1919, and the consistent brutality with which all attempts to unionize the steel mills have been put down, nothing less could be expected of the barons than this code.

In the code "minimum" hourly wages range from 25 to 40 cents for different territories. Assuming workers are employed a full 40 hours a week, this means wages of from 10 to 16 dollars a week. Since the dollar is down 25 percent and more on the international exchange and prices are skyrocketing, these wages at present really are worth from $3.50 to $12, when inflation really gets under way they will amount to even less. The steel workers shall not have a standard of living; they shall have a standard of starvation.

Publicity to Steel Barons' "Generosity"

Right now the capitalist press is giving all possible publicity to the generosity of the steel bosses in granting a 15 percent raise to their workers before the code goes into effect. But the flunkies journalists carefully forget that this 15 percent wage increase is wiped out and more than wiped out by the rise in living costs. The proposed code shows how strangely the clothing of liberality sits on the shoulders of the steel barons.

The code fixes the work week at forty hours. But there is a cruel trick in the provision limiting hours. The code reads: "None of the members of the code shall cause or permit an employee to work on average of more than forty hours per week in any six month period".

There is absolutely no limit set to the number of hours a worker may be forced to work in any single week. The code permits the steel manufacturers to drive their workers eighty hours a week for three months, and then to throw the workers on the street for the next six months. By this treacherous provision the steel code puts a premium upon seasonal unemployment coupled with the longest possible work week. Every advantage the workers can gain from the shorter work week is stolen from them; every hardship of irregular employment forced upon them.

The Right to Organize?

Finally, what about the right to organize, the great gift the A. F. L. takers claim is granted by the Industrial Recovery Act? Article IV, Section 1 of the code states: "That no employee and no one seeking work shall be required to join any company union, or to refrain from joining, organizing or assisting a labor union of his own choosing." So far, all is orthodox: "It is the belief of the industry that the method of collective bargaining set forth in such plans (Employee Representation Plans) provides for a day to day adjustment of all matters relating to the employment of employees... that such principles should be maintained and that the rights of the employees and members of the industry to bargain collectively through representatives elected or appointed in accordance with such plans without interference, restraint or coercion of any sort should be preserved and protected."

The so-called "Employee Representation Plan" provides for the election of representatives by the workers, but "such nominations and elections shall be held on the premises of the employer." These representatives shall settle differences between the workers and the employer by "collective bargaining" with representatives of the employer, but in case the representatives cannot agree, "procedure for appeal shall be maintained—if necessary, to the head of such employer, responsible for the management of the business of such employer." In other words the Employee Representation Plan is a company union, set-up in silicon-pure and foolproof, having its election under absolute control of the boss.

Trotsky Greets 'Red Flag', British Organ of L. O.

Dear Comrades,
You have begun the publication of a little monthly, the 'Red Flag'. This is a modest step forward. We must hope that other steps will follow.

The advance of Communism in Great Britain is no way corresponds to the rate of decay of British capitalism. The conservative traditions of British politics, including the politics of the working class, are in themselves obviously insufficient to explain this fact. We only declare what is true and cannot be refuted when we say that above all, and, alas, with greater success, than by any other factor, the progress of Communism during the last years has been hindered by the leadership of the British Communist. They, of course, have not acted independently, but have only followed blindly the orders given by the leaders of the Communist. But this fact does not free the British Communist bureaucracy from its responsibility, nor lessen the damage it has done. The study and critical examination of the policy of the British Communist Party during the last eight or ten years constitutes a most important task in the education of the Left Opposition itself. You should carefully study the official publications of the Party throughout this period, digest them, and bring out clearly the Party line on the main strategic problems: its attitude towards the Labour Party, the trade unions, the Minority Movement, the colonial revolutions, the united front policy; the I. L. P., etc. Even the mere selection of the most striking quotations, and the presentation of them in chronological order, would lay bare not only the glaring contradictions of the 'general line', but also the inner logic of these contradictions, i. e., the violent vacillations of the Centrist bureaucracy between opportunism and adventurism. Every one of these tactical zigzags pushed Communists, sympathizers, and potential friends back, to the Right, to the Left, and finally into the swamp of indifference. We can say with-out the least exaggeration, that the British Communist Party has become a political throughfare and that it retains its influence only with that section of the proletariat which has been forcibly pushed to its side by the decomposition of both capitalism and reformism.

Along with the new printed organ you have at your disposal a hectographed (excellently hectographed) bulletin, "The Communist". It would be extremely desirable to devote the greatest possible space in this publication to the examination of the policy of the British Communist Party along the lines indicated above, and also to the discussion of controversial questions within the Left Opposition itself. While persistently striving to widen our influence among the workers, we must at the same time make it a point to work for the theoretical and political education of our own ranks. We have a long and laborious road in front of us. For this we need first-class cadres. With all my heart I wish you success.

Toronto, Canada.—The Left Opposition was the last contingent in the big anti-Fascist parade on Tuesday, July 12, and followed directly behind the "official" Left wing and Communist organizations. Over 150 workers... members, sympathizers and friends rallied behind our big masthead "The International Left Opposition of Canada." This banner, in the centre of which was a big hammer and sickle, was carried by two young girl comrades, one of the Spartacus Youth Club and the other of the Y. C. L.

L. O. Slogans in Parade

As our contingent swung off, our comrades boomed out the international. Then followed a flow of revolutionary songs, "The Red Flag", "Solidarity Forever", "The Red Army March" etc. As we came up Spadina to Queen St., the workers lining the streets applauded and cheered. As the march proceeded, the enthusiasm and spirit of our comrades rose still higher, and soon were shouting out the slogans of our banners, all of which breathed the spirit of international solidarity and class struggle. "Free the Scottsboro Boys", "Long Live the International Solidarity of the Working class", "Free all the Class War Prisoners", "Down with Section 88", "Freedom for Chen Duxiu and Andres Nin", "Forward to Victory Under the Banner of Lenin and Trotsky", etc., etc.

We swung into Queen Park to the enthusiastic tune of the international. As our contingent proceeded to their station, they again shouted out the slogans of our prominent banners. When the Stalinists as it to reply to us, shouted "Long Live the C. P. of Canada," we joined in the loud unison. Then in order to reveal our identity our comrades immediately revealed our "Long Live the Left Opposition", "Forward to Victory under the Banner of Lenin and Trotsky."

The speakers representing every tendency in the labor movement addressed the big crowd from 3 platforms. As comrade Spector took the platform we again shouted out the slogans of our banners amidst the general applause of the crowd. The same was repeated when comrade MacDonald stood up on a second platform. The Left Opposition were active participants and organizers of the greatest and most militant labor demonstration since 1919, were able to show the workers the strength of its ideas, the enthusiasm and idealism of its banner-bearers, and the general growth of our movement. The militant character of our participation and banners, has already brought incitements and threats against us as well as the other revolutionary groups. We quote from the Toronto Telegram, July 13: "Nothing is more calculated to persuade Torontoans that Hitler was right than the presence in the Toronto demonstration of banners carrying such slogans as, 'Victory under the Banner of Trotsky', 'We demand the abolition of Section 88', and 'Hands off the Young Communist League'." ... Unless "Victory under the banner of Lenin and Trotsky" and Hands off the Young Communist League" do not mean the advocacy of revolution, the English language has lost its meaning." The editorial calls upon the police to take action.

What do the Stalinists say to the above? Is this another united front between Trotsky and the bourgeois press? —Q.

The Columbus Conference

1. The Background of the Unemployed Movement

The Columbus Conference can be properly understood only in the light of all past experience of the unemployed movement. Four years of economic collapse have not rolled by without leaving their mark. As a matter of fact, it radically changed the whole physiognomy of the labor movement. Trade union organization, which never did reach any great proportions, diminished in size and unemployed organizations gradually grew up and developed.

At the beginning of the "depression," whatever organization of the unemployed was done resulted through the activity of the Communist party. The leadership of the socialist party was still groggy from an overdose of "prosperity" and the A. P. of L. bureaucracy was busy helping Hoover cover up the existence of the crisis. A truly golden opportunity here presented itself to the Communists of building up a mighty nationwide unemployed movement such as might throw terror into the hearts of the bourgeoisie. Here also was the opportunity of cutting away the base of social reformism. But Stalinism is not rated for its accomplishments; defeats and setbacks are the rule that Stalinists work by, and the party's course during this entire period is certainly no exception to this rule.

Amidst such splendid possibilities, the party was weighed down with the Stalinist "third period" thesis, out of which flowed the ruinous theories and tactics that were guaranteed to bring about the isolation of the Communist party. Since the "third period" called for a "revolutionary upsurge" and this unfortunately did not exist—and in fact does not yet exist in spite of the fact that the C. I. has for the second time recently declared with great solemnity that "capitalist stabilization has ended"—the revolutionary upsurge had to be manufactured. The "fight for the streets" was inaugurated and demonstrations of unemployed organizations for that purpose. Somehow it did not occur to anyone to ask what the party would do with the streets after it had captured them—in the "third period" this would have been sheer heresy. Instead of organizing the unemployed around their immediate demands, the abstract slogan of "Work or Wages" was shouted to the four winds. The writer, who was active in organizing the unemployed in Milwaukee at that time and, together with others, began to lay some emphasis on the immediate needs of the unemployed instead of spending his time extolling the Chinese Soviets. Together with his associates he was hailed before a meeting of the District Committee and all were condemned as "Economists."

The party was out for "independent leadership." The party would have nothing to do with "social fascists." The party must "fight for the streets." The party must organize "revolutionary trade unions." This was surely the road to success—did not the party set into motion some million-and-a-half unemployed on the first March 6th? (See the Daily Worker)

The height of this fever was reached when Browder thundered out a manifesto to the American working class to follow the example of the Arkansas farmers, storm warehouses, and help themselves. But somehow no response came to this swashbuckling call to arms and it was not long before the same hand of Browder wrote another article in the same Daily Worker of a directly opposite nature and this without even a word of explanation. Whereas the first decree had instructed the workers to seize the food warehouses for themselves, the second article gave to understand that the real job of the unemployed Councils was to make the American working class "soup-conscious," i. e., to begin concentrating on the immediate needs of the unemployed. Naive people scratched their heads in amazement and marvelled at this sudden change.

Unemployment Councils Decompose
The whole secret lay in the fact that in that period the Unemployed Councils, which had at first experienced a relatively rapid growth, had now begun to decompose at an equally rapid pace, precisely because they could not be kept together on the basis of abstract slogans. In fact, the demonstrations, which had been the stimulant administered to keep them alive, had begun very seriously to decline in size and generally to flake out. Hence the zigzag.

Meanwhile the Unemployed Councils were the only organizations in the field. The S. P. was still blissfully oblivious to its own possibilities and the depth of the crisis had not been reached where spontaneous organizations would come into existence. But the inability of the party to adapt itself to the needs of the moment, as well as the deepening of the crisis, at length began to make their way into the consciousness of the American reformists. The failure of the Communists served to encourage the S. P. and it began to organize its own unemployed movement. The Muste group, not to be outdone, began to organize its unemployed organizations. Still another stratum of unemployed organizations came into existence, organized on a self-help or barter basis, of which the original California carrot-pulling organization is typical.

But as the crisis deepened, even these self-help organizations began to change their complexion and inevitably gravitated in the direction of class struggle. By this time, the Unemployed Councils had drawn up several social insurance bills, the first one demanding twenty-five dollars a week for the unemployed, and the others gradually going lower and lower. Hunger marches on Washington and state capitals were organized which at first, as long as they served to dramatize certain campaigns, aroused the country to the brutality of the crisis, but later began to peter out. Due to senseless repetition. To obtain the actual numerical strength of the Unemployed Councils over this period is impossible. The Daily Worker is not famous for modesty and truthfulness.

Need of Unity
Gradually these various organizations developed and grew up side by side and a leveling process set in. The most radical, i. e., the Unemployed Councils, got out of the dizzy heights of the "Third Period" and began to pay some attention to the needs of the unemployed. In fact, the center of their entire activity became the fight for relief. On the other hand, the self-help organizations were driven to the wall and had to resort to the same activities as were conducted by the Unemployed Councils; that is, eviction activity, turning on gas and electricity, etc. So that, at the beginning of this year, aside from the spontaneous organizations, practically every political group had its own unemployed organization, each carrying on practically the same activity and having practically the same program. And gradually the thought of unity began to develop—the thought of uniting all unemployed organizations into one.

Another golden opportunity here presented itself to the Communist party—and another golden opportunity was missed. At this point, the "united front from below" hung like a pallstone around the neck of the party, with the bureaucrats keeping vigilant guard lest anyone should seek to loosen it. When the thought of unity took on concrete form, it was not the Stalinist leadership that concretized it, but on the contrary the reformists, Karl Borders, of the Chicago S. P. who had built up a large unemployed movement of considerable influence. It was this Workers' Committee, together with the Workers' League, that met last fall and began to talk in concrete terms of federation. Of course, Karl Borders had an axe to grind. A federation of unemployed organizations which would exclude the Unemployed Councils would be quite acceptable to Mr. Borders. In a federation of this sort, the S. P. could easily take the leadership and thereby capture the control of additional unemployed organizations. As for the Workers' League—well, that is a small organization which could be easily disposed of. So thought Mr. Borders. But, as the canny Scot would have it, "There is many a slip twixt the cup and the lip." And, in this case, the cup was rudely dashed out of Borders' hands.

The Chicago Conference
The call for the Chicago Conference of Unemployed Organizations was very plain-spoken. The conference was to achieve unity, but the Unemployed Councils were to be left out. No organized voice of protest was heard from the rank and file of Borders' organization against this perfidious arrangement. What made it possible for Borders to proceed in this manner with impunity was the past activity of the Unemployed Councils along the lines of "united front from below" previously commented upon in the Militant.

As the day of the conference approached, the Chicago Branch of the Left Opposition addressed a letter to the C. P. asking for a Left wing bloc to fight for a militant policy in the conference. The only group that came into this conference with a clear-cut program of unity through federation was the Left Opposition and before the conference adjourned our position was adopted in the main.

From the point of view of numerical attendance, the conference was no great success. But it was thoroughly representative, and in that lay its importance. Literally, all shades of political thought were represented through the medium of the delegates from the various unemployed organizations which they had built up. It was, however, very uncertain at the beginning as to which political current would predominate.

Left Wing Scores Victory
The first battle of this conference was around the question of seating the Unemployed Council delegates. After a heated debate, a vote was taken and the Left wing scored its first victory, which indicated the general possibilities. From then on, the conference began slowly but surely to slip from the hands of Mr. Borders, and the Left wing position grew stronger and stronger. The Stalinists, who had come uncertain even of being seated, became arrogant and attempted to hog the entire conference. Only through the utmost exertion of the Left Opposition were the differences between the various Left wing groups bridged and unanimity established on the salient points of policy.

The Left wing emerged victorious from this conference. Out of this conference grew the National

ANOTHER SO-CALLED UNITED FRONT

In the hey-day of the "united front from below" the Stalinist called many united front conferences, sending calls to all organizations under their ideological and mechanical control and asking all other workers to break with their leadership and join the "united front." The T. U. U. L. and the I. L. D., the W. I. R. and the fraternal organizations, as well as any A. F. L. local where the Left wing was strong enough to send a delegate, received a call.

The delegates at the conference, no matter how many paper organizations or real organizations they represented, represented one political current; Stalinism—with the exception of the Left Opposition which was always kicked out the door, and several stray delegates who ran the gauntlet by accident. Month in and month out the same organizations sent delegates to the "united fronts." Each time the conference ended with the Stalinists capturing themselves, through the "united front from below."

The united front is a tactic of uniting, in temporary agreement, different organizations, and different political tendencies. To call together several organizations under socialist party control is not a united front, any more than the calling together of those organizations under Stalinist control constitutes a united front. United front action must be between organizations, but at the same time must embrace more than one political current. Each political current entering the united front is expected to rally those organizations and forces it has control over.

The Mooney Congress held in Chicago in May, with about two dozen political tendencies; and the Unemployment Conference held in Chicago in June, with fifteen political tendencies—are first steps toward the Leninist United Front action. However, the number of workers put in motion and not the number of political tendencies is decisive.

THE UNITED FRONT AS A MANEUVER

The reformists say that the communists are insincere and that the call for a united front is a maneuver. If this is so then the reformists have nothing to worry about because if the Communists call a united front upon such a flimsy foundation, the Communists and not the reformists will lose. Of course the united front tactic or rather, the rejection of the united front tactic by Stalinism has played into the hands of the reformists, but in the main this is merely an excuse of the reformists to avoid taking part in the united front.

On the other hand, one must not take the word maneuver in too narrow a sense. If by maneuver one means a trick then we are opposed to a maneuver, but the fact remains that every move of any military or political force is a maneuver. In this latter sense, every united front action, like all other political actions, is a maneuver. The thing for the revolutionist and honest worker to find out is: Is it a correct maneuver, one that benefits the working class—or a false maneuver?

NON-AGGRESSION PACTS

The reformists and opportunists and misleaders will prevent a united front as long as possible, but once more the mass pressure and conditions force them to make a move toward the united front they immediately attempt to set up certain provisions which will guarantee them from the "evils of exposure." One of their favorite means is to attempt to form a "non-aggression" pact with the others participating in the united front. They demand that while the united front is conducted, the organizations should refrain from criticizing each other. If one agrees to refrain from political criticism, then the misleaders are sure they will be able to retain their control and will not be exposed in action for their traitorous acts. Anyone who agrees to refrain from criticism during united front action forsakes one of the basic conditions of the Leninist united front. The right of minority expression and political criticism must be guaranteed at all times. Only fakery would ask for such a pact and only fools and Stalinists would agree to such pacts. Stalinism, like the social democracy, has its own crimes to cover up.

In the last several years in Germany, while Fascism was marching forward with rapid strides, while Stalinism was in its "third period," the social democratic betrayers were rendered the greatest historical service possible by the Stalinist united front from below. When over the threshold of state power Fascism gained, and was already the social democratic leaders offered the Communists a united front, but with the "non-aggression" clause. The C. I. statement and answer agreed to refrain from criticism. Again, following the "united front from below," the agreement to refrain from criticism rendered social democracy more service. This was repeated at the Mooney Congress in Chicago by the Stalinists. (To be continued)

Hathaway Speaks on United Front in Brownsville

New York, N. Y.—C. A. Hathaway, editor of the Daily Worker, gave another of his famous lectures in Brownsville a week ago. This time the subject was to be the National Industrial Recovery Act. The lecturer was going along at a fine pace for about one hour when suddenly he found himself in the dreadful united front business once more. And here this great apostle of Stalinism could not restrain himself from casting a few slanders at the Left Opposition, and comrade Trotsky. He told the workers that the renegade Trotsky wanted only a united front from above, and that the "Trotskyists" told the workers that they must not attack the leaders of the socialist party. It appears that the Hathaways will stoop to any level in order to fool the workers into believing that Trotsky is a counter-revolutionary. What a shameless lie!

When and where has the Left Opposition ever said that we must unite only from above?—and that we must not attack the leaders? The Trotskyists want us to go to the doors of Hillquit and Thomas and knock, and in this manner they will form a united front.

At a District membership meeting of the Y. C. L. where he attempted to clarify the party united front policy, it was this same Hathaway who got up and in a mass of dramatic gestures boasted so loudly of the fact that "yesterday comrade Stachel, and myself went to visit A. J. Muste and we got him to accept our united front invitation." And did comrade Hathaway forget? "We called up Norman Thomas and he agreed to bring up our invitation to the National Committee of the Socialist Party."

Then there was still the question (and a new policy in the Hathaway lectures) discussion period. And lo and behold the same incident to a greater extent than at the District membership meeting of the Y. C. L. The questions were all of a "Trotskyite" nature, causing comrade Hathaway to get very angry as he remarked, picking up a large bundle of questions, "I think zation, and only have a paltry two representatives on this national committee. What we want is unity. In order to achieve unity we propose that you agree to elect a committee of five, let the Unemployed Councils elect a committee of five, and the Columbus conference also a committee of five, and this committee of fifteen will arrange a unity conference in Washington at the time that Congress opens and at that time merge all unemployed organizations into one. Then we'll present one common front to the capitalist government." Such open-hearted frankness was so unexpected by the non-Stalinist members of the committee that for a moment they lost their bearings and almost fell into the trap. But fortunately a few more experienced members "came from Missouri" and remained unmoved by Browder's eloquence. So they voted against the proposition and laid down by Browder and, in spite of the outraged protestations of innocence on the part of the Stalinists, decided to poll the entire committee on this question. —NORMAN SATIR.

Brooklyn, N. Y.—Continuing a policy of using their fists when their heads ceased to supply arguments, leading Y. C. L. members resort to the method of physical violence against Left Oppositionists. On Friday night, July 14, after an open-air meeting held by the Left Opposition in Brownsville had ended and the comrades had left, comrade Joe Elliott was attacked in front of the Parkway cafeteria. The Stalinists previously made attempts to provoke him. Al Dasch, functional of the Brownsville section, notorious as a retired pugilist, "hard guy," and Trotsky-baiter, shouted out: "These Trotskyists must be driven out of Brownsville!" Comrade Elliott replied: "I'll leave when the workers of Brownsville want me to leave," and turned away. Al Dasch swung viciously at Elliott and dealt him several blows, injuring his eye.

Many of the workers present protested against this procedure and loudly voiced their opinions, promising to bring this matter up at the Section headquarters. To some of the others this "educational" work of Dasch, who is a member of the Section "Agit-prop" was considered in line with the "New Turn" though not outlined in the famous Open Letter.

Several Y. C. L. members expressed their indignation by saying that they would go themselves to the Section and bring charges against Dasch. In the meantime the Section has not uttered a word on the matter; by its very silence it is condoning and encouraging gangsterism and strong-arm methods. The system of Stalinism promises advancement and functionaries positions by plenty of use of the fist and nothing of the head.

OHIO CONVENTION EXPOSES REACTION IN MUSTE BUILT LEAGUES

Columbus, Ohio.—We were received at the Columbus Convention on July 1st by a "workers' patrol," marked with arm-bands, armed with clubs and headed by one "Joe Gershner," whom Truax, president of the Ohio Unemployed League, saw fit to publicly characterize on the last day of the national convention as a "stool-pigeon, organizer of strike-breakers and company thugs." It was not until the third day of the convention, after incoming fraternal and out-of-town delegates had protested vigorously against these armed "guards" that the clubs disappeared; and with the exception of a few passing words about a "disguised national guard" not one public word was said in protest, until the last day of the convention, and then only to the Ohio Caucus.

The first session began with the endorsement of slates presented by the state office, etc., and continued with reports from county delegations to local conditions. Karl Paul, S. P. member spoke on the Continental Congress. Truax spoke on the C. P. sponsored Small Home and Land Owners Federation. Arnold Johnson spoke as representative of the C. P. L. A. and organizer of the O. U. L., mentioning united front action with Unemployed Councils through state federation. Clove, chairman of the Franklin County League, in which Columbus is situated, jumps to platform and demands to know whether or not the Councils respect the "Star and Stripes." Preis of Toledo follows, attempting to defend the council and explain the working class attitude towards "the flag." He is interrupted by a threatening riot, cries of "Stop him!", "Call the police!" "Make him take that back!" and a charge on the platform of about one-fourth those present. Numerous members of this "workers' guard" took part in this demonstration. Fortunately there was a fence between the audience and the platform, which stemmed the rush long enough to let the Mustelites Johnson and Baubert smooth the situation over with words.

But the situation was still tense enough when Perkins of Franklin County, introduced the motion: That the following be inserted in the Preamble of the O. U. L.—"The Stars and Stripes forever. When they're right we'll uphold them; when they're wrong we'll fight them." That no one dared to object to this was passed before Ben Smith of Franklin County, urged the crowd to return to their seats saying that the O. U. L. was not organized "under the red flag but as a 100 percent American organization," and pacified them with words about "diplomacy."

With such a start it was hard to expect much from this convention. And it is significant that the leaders of this non-class-conscious (and to be mild) came mostly from Franklin County, in the Columbus office of the O. U. L. is located and where we should normally expect the most progressive elements to be. If the Mustelites leaders of the O. U. L. had really followed a working class organizational and educational policy.

Declaration of L. O. at Columbus Conference

TO ALL DELEGATES TO THE NATIONAL UNEMPLOYMENT CONFERENCE

Brother delegates:
The passing of the Industrial Recovery Act by the Roosevelt government is the most far-reaching attack on the working class. This Act is a direct attack against the unemployed.

Capitalist charity and unemployment "emergency relief" has proven inadequate and has come to a breakdown. The capitalists realize that they will have to spend hundreds of millions of dollars next winter in order to keep the 18 million unemployed in submission. Hence the Recovery Act.

This Recovery law is an attempt on the part of the capitalists to side-step social insurance. They have passed codes in various industries precisely for the purpose of establishing a universal stagger system in order to absorb some of the unemployed into industry at a starvation wage. The 3 billion dollar program of public and manufacturing works program will be paid in inflated currency, which will not suffice for the bare necessities of life. This is merely another form of forced labor which the capitalists will institute in the place of social insurance.

The Industrial Control Law establishes a form of state capitalism and is calculated to save the rotten and decayed capitalist structure by the elimination of small producers, the organization of cartels, the outlawing of strikes, the establishing of a class collaboration machinery to hamper the development of class struggle organizations and the shifting of the entire burden of the crisis upon the working class. By instituting these measures and reducing the cost of production, the American capitalists hope to be able to better compete on the world market.

A determined struggle must be waged by the entire working class against the effects of this capitalist offensive in the form of the Recovery Act. The unemployed have a special part in this struggle. Fellow delegates:

The present economic crisis is here to stay. It is a natural development of capitalism. Increasing unemployment and lower relative wages, greater misery and increased pauperization are all natural products of the present decaying system. The capitalists have no solution for the present crisis. Their present scheme of the partnership of industry and government will no more solve the problem than all their previous plans. The only real and permanent solution to all the misery created by this planless system of production is the proletarian revolution. For the working class to rid itself for all time of the present conditions it is necessary to appoint capitalism and replace it by a socialist planned system of production for use.

Toward the achievement of this goal it is necessary first of all to put the working class in motion in a struggle for its immediate needs. This conference must adopt a program of action for the struggle for these immediate demands. In addition to local demands, the Communist League of America (Left Opposition) proposes to the conference the consideration and adoption of the following concrete slogans and organizational steps:

1. For immediate relief and social insurance at the expense of the bosses and their government.
2. For the 6-hour day, 5-day week with an increase in wages.
3. Fight for higher wages and increased relief to combat inflation.
4. For the recognition of and the extension of long-term credits to the Soviet Union.

To attain the necessary strength to struggle for these demands we propose the following organizational steps:

1. The application of the united front tactic as a means of uniting the various unemployed organizations (Unemployed Leagues, Unemployed Councils, Workers' Leagues, etc., etc.) should be put into effect. In this united front each organization retains its organizational independence, refrains from slander and personal attack against each other, but maintains the right of minority expression and freedom of criticism. Under no circumstance can any united front exclude or bar any unemployed organization from participation. Should the leadership of any unemployed organization attempt to prevent the entry of its organization into the united front, continued efforts must be made to bring them into the united front.
2. The Columbus Conference is the second national conference held this year. The Chicago Conference of June 13-15, called by the Workers' Committee on Unemployed and the Workers' League, has established a National Unemployed Federation of Workers' Leagues, to which are already affiliated the largest unemployed organizations in the country. This Federation stands for the unification of the unemployed movement and is opposed to any discrimination against race, color, creed or political opinion.

Of all the organizations that participated in the conference, endorsed the program and voted for the Federation—such organizations as the Unemployed Leagues, Workers' Committee, Workers' League, and Unemployed Councils—only the Borders leadership of the Workers' Committee has tried to split the Federation.

The most important task of the Columbus Conference is unification with the National Unemployed Federation.

3. This Conference must go on record favoring affiliation to the National Federation. This will be the greatest step in the direction of establishing unity in the unemployed movement on a national scale.

4. Our objective should be the amalgamation of all the unemployed organizations into one. This can be accomplished only after the various unemployed groups learn how to work together in a united front or federation which at first gives each participating organization organizational autonomy. This course must be followed because amalgamation is a far more advanced step than affiliation to the National Unemployed Federation.

5. Finally, efforts must be directed towards the unification of the struggle of the unemployed workers with that of the employed and in cooperation with all working class organizations. July 3rd, 1933.

The Death of Com. Klara Zetkin

The death of Klara Zetkin removes from the revolutionary labor movement one of that diminishing handful of true founders of the Communist International still left in its ranks. More than half a century of undivided devotion to the cause of working class freedom lay behind the great militant whose last public act was her appearance a few months ago in Berlin to preside, as senior member, over the last session of the Weimar Reichstag before its dissolution by those same snarling brutes in brown shirts whom she compelled to listen to the eloquent defiance of a tongue which proclaimed the inevitable revolution in Germany.

Born more than seventy-five years ago, on July 5, 1857, Klara Zetkin became a socialist at the time the Iron Chancellor launched the notorious Exceptional Laws against the social democratic movement. Her activity in the party not only began with its heroic period, but unlike most of her contemporaries, she carried forward the best of the traditions of those days throughout the rest of her life.

Klara Zetkin—Women's Leader

For more than a quarter of a century, her name was prominently associated throughout the Socialist world with the movement to win the working class woman to the standard of revolution. To her, more than to any other single force, goes the credit for the rich educational and cultural work among proletarian women which was carried on for decades in Germany. Virtually by her own efforts, she founded the socialist women's periodical Gleichheit (Equality) and edited it uninterruptedly from 1892 to 1917, when the social patriots summarily removed her from the journal which had become synonymous with her own name. If a socialist woman's movement came into existence in Germany, distinct and separate from the feminist and other bourgeois movements, it was in no small measure due to the unremitting labors of her brain, her pen, her tongue. Little wonder then that the Executive Committee of the Communist International, after its foundation, confided to her the direction of Communist activity among the working women throughout the world.

Her activities, however, were not confined to this specific field. Klara Zetkin was a party woman, above everything. And in the party, she stood unwaveringly on the side of that small band of warriors who constituted the Marxian group from the very outset of the internal struggle. She stood elbow to elbow with the Left wing of Rosa Luxemburg and Franz Mehring in their fight, made in common with Kautsky, up to a certain point, against the revisionist program of Bernstein, David and Co. which finally devoured Bebel's party. And even when Purvus turned gray and munitions agent for the House of Hohenzollern during the war, and Kautsky effected his touching reconciliation with Bernstein, Klara Zetkin remained with the now reduced group of Marxists who defended proletarian internationalism by deeds, while others were drowning it in fratricidal blood or else giving it sufficient formal acknowledgment to enable them all the more easily to continue attacking Spartacus.

Opposed the Social Patriots

The solemn decisions on the question of imperialism adopted by the Congresses of the Socialist International and of the German Party retained their significance for her even after August 4, 1914. Standing at the head of the Wuerstern party organization, together with Crispian and Westmeyer, she vehemently opposed the treacherous action of the Reichstag fraction in voting for war credits, and demanded that it adhere to the decisions of the International. Nor did she rest content with a formal gesture. When Rosa Luxemburg and Franz Mehring issued the first number of Die Internationale in April 1915, delivering those crushing blows at chauvinists and Kautskys alike, the name of Klara Zetkin was to be found on this roll of honor together with Karski, Jogiches, Thalheimer and the other internationalists who subsequently founded the Spartakusbund. Like Rosa and countless others, she was thrown into prison during the war, to the great relief of the Kaiser's socialists. An illegally distributed Spartacus leaflet of that time commemorated the contrast between the two camps in the social democracy by showing three pictures: Rosa Luxemburg and Klara Zetkin, each in her prison cell for anti-war activity, and Scheidemann, Noske, David and other social imperialists photographed at a discreet distance behind the front, fraternizing with army officers in front of their quarters; the pictures were eloquent enough without comment—nor did the leaflet supply them with any.

To Klara Zetkin falls the distinction of having initiated the first successful International socialist conference after the outbreak of the war and the collapse of the Second International. Upon her own responsibility, the International socialist women's conference was convened in Bern, Switzerland, in March 1915, with representatives from all the important belligerents on both sides. There were not many in those black days of treach-ery and reaction who were ready to speak and act for internationalism, but among them was to be found the already aging but tireless German revolutionist. At that time, it is true, she did not yet stand on the side of the Bolsheviks. The latter's delegates to the Bern Conference, Inessa Armand and N. K. Krupskaya, were the isolated extreme Left wing, whose resolution, to the Conference, edited by Lenin, was overwhelmingly rejected because it put the question of the break with all patriots and Centrists, in the sharpest and most unmistakable manner. Not even Zetkin was at that time prepared to consummate the rupture. But even though Lenin submitted the Armand and Inessa resolutions to the Conference was nevertheless the first European milestone along that road, marked later on by Zimmerwald and Kienthal, which led directly to the founding of the Communist International in Moscow in April 1919.

The first years of the Russian revolution and the Communist International undoubtedly marked the high water mark of Klara Zetkin's development and activity. The great period of stormy revolution, a flood brought out all that was best and most positive in the Communist leaders of the time. Despite her years, she put at the disposal of the German and international movements those talents which distinguished her. A fervid temperament, a sincerity of devotion, kept alive in her a luminous flame which dimmed only towards the last. An abyss lay between her age and that legion of others, fawning careerists and stock-market revolutionists, who came to the Comintern in its early years like so many tourists and soon left it to write apologies for their momentary aberration.

In taking her position in the constructive internal disputes of the Comintern, Klara Zetkin did not, alas! always distinguish between the revolutionary Left wing and the adventurist or infantile ultra-Left.

Of late there have been numerous reports of the arrests of oppositional Nazis—in Frankfurt a. M. several hundred mutilated and are supposed to have sung the "International" in the course of the fight; in Rautzen 72 Nazis had to be transferred and in Berlin-Charlottenburg 20 men were interned in the barracks on General Pappe Street, etc. The latest report speaks of the arrest of the 4 high Nazi officers in Berlin and of their transfer to a concentration camp.

In the ranks of those who are prophesying the immediate collapse of Fascism in Germany, both in the Comintern and its sections as well as in the social democracy, these incidents of rebellion among the Nazis are interpreted as symptoms of impending disintegration. After all their hopes had fled, after all their organizations had been destroyed, the trade unions—even those under the Christian firm shield—"equalized", the Stahlhelm, the National Front, the Center prebened—all this, all this bureaucracy which still cannot realize what has happened or why, set all their hopes on a rebellion among the mercenary troops of Fascism.

Conflict in S. A. Ranks Expected

That, after the seizure of power, there would be and had to be conflicts between Hitler and the lower layers of his following—this was predicted long in advance and is only to be expected. For certain groups the seizure of power by Hitler was very profitable, namely, to all those who were placed in the state and administrative apparatus and in other functions and posts.

Despite all anti-Jewish and anti-Marxist incitement, despite discharging and "equalization", there are nevertheless strata in the Fascist camp who cannot be satisfied, above all, those lower rank S. A. (Storm Troop) men who in the past number of months lived from purely criminal theft and plunder at house raids and in the course of making arrests. But pillaging cannot be carried on indefinitely and even the anti-Jewish boycott does not suffice to satiate all the hungry peasant sons and petty bourgeois. For a period of time they can be used as auxiliary police or auxiliary border guards, etc., but only for a definite period of time and only in a limited capacity. The rest of the S. A. men, on the other hand, are subjected to daily drill and to the drab life of the barracks court. But they do not fail to see how their upper "party comrades" feed on fat little posts, ride through the streets gloriously in elegant autos—and they want their share of the booty.

Therein lies the elementary explanation for the S. A. mutinies today: they are the wage strikes of employed retainers and could be overcome for a period of time, if the mutinous hordes were once again let loose on expropriation activities against Jews and Marxists. But even in this respect only the least meat remains, the fat has been chewed off long ago, for the most part.

Her gift of oratory, warm with a rich inspiring prose, was not always combined with the quality of profound and original political thinking. In this respect, she had learned very heavily upon the sturdy and surer Rosa Luxemburg throughout the years before and during the world war. The political firmness and strength which she gained from this heavy association did not, unfortunately, grow in the years that followed.

The young Communist Party of Germany was cruelly deprived of its central staff immediately after the war. Left without the gifted brain of Luxemburg, the popular and tireless revolutionary spirit of Liebknecht, the organizing talents of Tychko, the leadership of the party slipped by default into the hands of an inferior stratum of the Spartacists, whose qualities were not exactly enhanced by the accession of the motley Left wing that joined it after the splitting of the Independent Socialists at Halle. She who had once drawn her strength from the wells of a Luxemburg, now turned to Paul Levi, who proved to be more skilled in the collection of rare pottery than in the leadership of a revolutionary party. In the party crisis that followed the luckless "March Action" in 1921, Zetkin marched at Levi's heels together with the group of Daemig, Brass and the others who finally went back with Levi to the social democracy. With Levi, too, she balked at Lenin's struggle against G. Serrati, whose fatal attitude in the Italian Socialist party impeded so markedly the development of a mass Communist party for the sake of unity with a coterie of shrewd opportunists. Still, unlike both Levi and Serrati, she never broke with the International and after each crisis, with her position increasingly compromised, she was to be found in its ranks.

In taking her position in the constructive internal disputes of the Comintern, Klara Zetkin did not, alas! always distinguish between the revolutionary Left wing and the adventurist or infantile ultra-Left.

Other, one S. A. rebellion followed another, so that the C. P. G. and the S. P. G. for years never stopped shouting about the "increasing disintegration of the Nazis." And at that, these rebellions were never really more than scandals and tiffs between "criminals" and "loyalists" who came into the S. A. in bands and were often lured by Hitler on salary bases. This accumulation of anti-social and lumpen-proletarian elements was confronted with the S. A. (Schutz-Staffel, defensive corps) as the socially and politically reliable, picked guard—which did not contribute to raising the morale among the S. A. (Storm Troops, offensive corps). Today the S. A. is a sort of military police and is rigorously utilized against Storm Troops.

Naturally the disillusionment of the Nazis who rebel today is much stronger than heretofore, when it was still possible to find consolation and cause for self-negation in all sorts of promises. But in the meantime the Hitler dictatorship has become more and more entrenched.

All opposition parties and organizations have been liquidated and the rebellions of the dissatisfied Nazis simply have to evaporate into empty space for the time being. Or else—crash down in the face of resistance from the satiated strata in the Fascist camp, in whose hands the means of power are concentrated.

No Faith in S. A. Mutinies

It would be an error, with disastrous consequences to follow, to put great hopes and expectations today upon the S. A. mutinies or even to see in these elements trustworthy allies. The proletariat is faced today with a different question, namely, that of a new gathering of forces and the formation of new revolutionary cadres from the various camps of the working class.

This process of clarification and of regroupment must in no case be hampered by a revival of the old Stalinist legend of the "revolutionary S. A. man" and of the "brotherly hand" (to the "Nazi proletarian"). Even today the C. P. G. is publishing a little sheet, "The Revolutionary S. A. Man", by the distribution of which the safety of active Communist members is endangered in an irresponsible manner, while at the same time the Otto Strasser and "Black Front" people, long, endorsed and nurtured by the C. P. G., today once again repose under Hitler's and Goering's kindly wing. And the well-known "Police Lieutenant Giesecke", who was dragged around from mass meeting to mass meeting and got a good insight into the military apparatus of the party—works today in the emigration centers for the construction of a Fascist stool-pigeon and provocateur apparatus.

In her defense of Levi against Bela Kun, Pepper and Froelich, as in her defense of Serrati against Bordiga, there was a noticeable distinction between her position and the position, let us say, of the Lenin who so demonstratively proclaimed himself a member of the "Right wing" at the Third Congress of the International. As became even more apparent in later years, Zetkin was unable to adjust herself to the requirements of the revolutionary epoch. Her interventions against ultra-Leftism were essentially actuated by a distinct leaning to the Right.

This weakness she revealed most tragically throughout the whole period of the October 1923 struggle in Germany. Trotsky's arguments that it was possible and necessary to set a date for the insurrection and to orient the strategy and tactics of the party towards it—that is, his application of the experiences gained in the Russian October to the German situation—she regarded as a species of Blanquist heresy. The protests of the militant and Left wing sectors of the party against the dilatory and headless policy of the Brandler Central Committee always encountered her ardent resistance. Even after the catastrophe, she came to the defense of Brandler, Thalheimer and Radek, not in the spirit of placing the responsibility on the international leadership, where it belonged, but as an apology for the calamitous course of the Right wing combined with a bitter attack upon the Left.

She was linked with Brandler from the earliest days of the Spartakusbund, and the Left wing socialist movement before it. And those bonds were strengthened by her violent reaction against those whom Zinoviev, Stalin and, Bucharin helped to impose upon the German party as its leadership in place of the discredited Right wing Central Committee. The characterless ultra-Leftists of the type of Ruth Fischer, A. Maslow, Katz, Schwartz and the camarilla around them, aroused her contempt and deepest mistrust. If she reconciled herself somewhat to the post-1923 leadership, it was not due to the change of heart on her side. Rather, the contrary. After the removal of ultra-Leftist leadership in 1925, the party and the International engaged upon that protracted course towards opportunism in which Klara Zetkin felt herself far more at ease than during the period of the dry sectarian ponderosity of Maslow's literary effusions and the wind and fury of Fischer's clamorous oratory. Brandler and Thalheimer, virtually marooned in Moscow up to that time, commenced a bolder factional activity inside the party and for the time it appeared that the pitiful Thaelmann leadership was to be "sanitized" by the rehabilitation in the party of the Right wing exiles. The latter counted on Zetkin's support, nor was it withheld.

It was only when the dawn of the "third period" sealed the fate of the Right wing for a second, and apparently last time, and the expulsion of Brandler, Thalheimer and their supporters was consummated, that all hope was abandoned. The ultra-Leftist wrecking crew, considerably inferior to the group of Maslow and Fischer, which was given the helm of party leadership, practically completed the elimination of Klara Zetkin from all active participation in it. It cannot be said that it was an event entirely distasteful to her. She had after all once worked by the side of a Rosa Luxemburg, a Franz Mehring, a Karl Liebknecht. Even in later years, her party had at least been under the leadership of a Paul Levi who, no matter how much his defects impeded and finally put a stop to his political growth, nevertheless had a head on his shoulders, as Lenin said. How could she now subordinate herself voluntarily to the direction of such shoddy, even if internationally advertised, products (the artificial campaign must have revolted her) as were put at the head of the party, of a Helmut Neumann, whom she never ceased to regard as an irresponsible adventurer and a sinister figure in the party? But by this time the regime in the International had reached a point where she could no longer speak her mind openly. The old militant no longer appeared on the tribune of the party or the International. Her bitter protests against the treatment of Brandler and his friends, against the abominations

Whither the Y.P.S.L. Insurgents?

Several months ago, a few circles of the Young Peoples Socialist League of Chicago, were expelled. The immediate issue which caused the expulsion, was the united front, concretized at the time around the national Mooney Congress and the question of the participation of the Socialist party. The change in line of the Stalinists, driven by the events in Germany, offered the possibilities for a genuine united front and the creation of a mass movement for the freedom of Tom Mooney. But the despotic role of the Socialists and their "Socialist" agents in the labor movement, prevented the enlistment of this movement to a mass character. The plan in which the movement for Mooney's freedom was finally organized, established the treacherous role of the Socialists and enabled the Left wing and "progressive" socialists to wage a struggle within their organization for participation in this movement. Because of this, and their eventual breaking of party discipline by entering the united front conferences prior to and including the national congress, these circles by the Y. P. S. L. were expelled. (The bureaucracy of the S. P. maintain that no expulsions took place—only the charters were taken from these circles.)

It would be wrong to assume that the leftward turn of the expelled elements was a sudden development. This particular group has for some time now, carried on an agitation within the adult and youth organization of a Left character. They issued an internal bulletin, The Class Struggle, in which a Left wing and militant point of view was expressed and an effort made to force a change in the reformist line followed by the S. P. leadership. The intent of the group was to assemble all Left included members in the S. P., into a solid faction in order thus to wage such a fight. The tendency was distinctly a movement drifting towards Communism. The Left Opposition of Chicago, tried, in a modest way, to help the growth of this group both ideologically and organization-

On the Expulsion of Wollenberg

Moscow, USSR.—In spite of all the attempts on part of the Comintern bureaucracy to suppress it, the discussion around the expulsions of comrades Wolf and Wollenberg will not cease. It is nothing new for defeated, incapable leaders to turn with redoubled wrath against their critics. In the Wollenberg-Wolf case, their wrath is all the more painful since the majority of the German and Russian middle layer functionaries admit the justification of the criticism against the complete failure of the C. P. G. and the Comintern in personal conversations.

The reasons for the expulsion are, in brief, the following: Both comrades voted against the resolution of the E. C. C. I. on the situation in Germany. They declared that not only the C. P. G. but also the Comintern had collapsed and that the C. P. G. and the Comintern had to be rebuilt on a new basis. The criticism of both comrades did not refer only to the events of the last few months but went even farther back. For comrade Wolf, the Russian questions also played a big role. He linked these up with the behavior of the Comintern bureaucracy in his exposure of the collapse.

Great Indignation over Expulsion

The expulsion of comrade Wollenberg aroused great indignation among the critically inclined functionaries in Germany and especially among former members of the Red Front Fighters League. It will take on even greater amplitude when the comrades find out the reasons for the expulsion. (This much we know from letters coming out of Germany and from comrades who have recently arrived from there.)

Comrade Wollenberg joined the party as an active army officer in Munich in the beginning of 1919. During the existence of the Soviet Republic he was local commander of the Red Army of Bavaria. In charge of the main front at Dachau in the course of the struggle for Munich. He distinguished himself at that time as well as on later occasions by his extraordinary personal bravery. After his capture, he had to spend several years in jail and after his release he became party editor in the Ruhr district and in East Prussia. In 1923 he was put in charge of the military direction of one of the biggest German districts and was one of the few comrades who wanted to strike out in the fall of the year, against the will of the Central Committee. After the defeat of the party in 1923 he had to flee to the Soviet Union, because secret servicemen had been shot down in a police raid on the military direction.

In the Soviet Union Wollenberg entered the Red Army and soon received the rank of captain. He took a prominent part in the erection of the Museum of the Red Army, among other things.

Conflict with Thaelmann

The repeated requests of Wollenberg to be returned to Germany were continually denied up to 1932. In the summer of 1932 he became the editor of the Rote Fahne in Berlin. At the same time he was taken into the leadership of the League of Struggle against Fascism ally. It pointed out the need of an immediate national organization, and a campaign of education, because expulsion was inevitable—the bureaucracy awaiting only an appropriate moment to carry through such an expulsion. In the writer's opinion these elementary steps were not well taken, and because of this the movement remains to a large degree localized and stifled.

The Expelled Chicago S.P. Youth and the Three Communist Currents

Were these the only weaknesses of the expelled ypsels, they could, by intense labor be overcome to a large extent. But more important than these, the indecision and lack of a correct political outlook, or rather, the false political outlook and perspective of the leadership of this group (Larks and Saikina), is responsible for its weaknesses and confusion. What is the tactic of the group? The tactic is, to maintain the expelled group together until the conventions of the S. P. and Y. P. S. L. and wage the struggle in the conventions. And what kind of struggle will this be? Will it be for readmission to the S. P. and the Y. P. S. L.? This can hardly be considered a step forward by a group that is developing distinctly towards Communism. The struggle must be waged in the direction of winning greater numbers away from the reformist Socialist Party and towards Communism. Obviously a discussion of organizational tactics to be pursued in this connection, cannot be taken up in this article. But the broad general political questions as raised above can and must be put squarely so that no confusion can exist. It is in the above question that the real essence of the whole future of this movement lies.

What is the attitude of the expelled comrades to the burning questions of dispute in the Communist movement? Do the members and leaders of this group recognize that the Communist movement is split in at least three definite sections over questions that are far too important and fundamental to be overlooked? Such questions as: Socialism in one Country, Bureaucratic Centrism, the role and significance of the Stalinist leadership of the Communist International as the organizer of defeats, the question of the united front, the strategy and tactics of the international revolution (expressed now in the events in Germany), the role of the International Left Opposition—these questions are decisive and in determining one's position in the revolutionary movement, he must needs take a position on each one of these. He must be clarified and know precisely why he takes one position or another.

At independent existence for any group standing between Socialism and Communism is impossible, unless it is extremely temporary and as a tactic for struggle. But even then it cannot carried through unless the entire organization is aware of this and understands what should be its political direction. The history of all similar movements is a proof of this statement. Post-war events have established conclusively the inefficiency and inability of reformism to play a progressive role. It has sunk in the mire of reaction with a record as black as the proverbial darkness. The fundamental questions of revolution and the dictatorship of the proletariat have been vitiated a thousand times by these very betrayals of international social democracy, and more recently by Stalinism, which rests upon a fundamental revision of Marxism and lives under the cloak of national socialism. Thus the question presents itself: what is the perspective of the expelled ypsels and how do they propose to realize this?

It would not be correct to say that the questions of Stalinism and the Left Opposition have not been discussed by this group. They were discussed but not as a result of a systematic effort of serious revolutionaries attempting to educate themselves in order thereby to be able to decide where they belong. These questions, when they are discussed, as a result of a certain pressure of the members who desire to know what is to be done. In the course of such informal discussions a certain attitude is expressed by the leadership which is indicative of a false tendency.

The leadership puts the question very bluntly and crudely. After all, they say, the Stalinists have a big party and there is the possibility of doing a lot of "mass" work. The Trotskyites are too small! This argument is not new, and it is as false as it is old. It is not numbers that determines the strength or course of the revolutionary movement. Political policy is the determining factor. What greater lesson is needed than the defeat of the German working class at the hands of Fascism. One must admit that insofar as numbers are concerned, both the social democracy and the Stalinists had sufficient not only to defeat Fascism, but also to soothe the dispositions of those who relish in arithmetical quantities and not Marxism. In spite of its numbers the German Communist Party not only could not defeat Fascism but did everything in its power through its false political policies, to help this victory. The consciousness or unconsciousness of this aid is not important. Objectively its policies led in this direction. When the Left Opposition demands an inventory on the situation in Germany, it does not request this of the Stalinists alone, but it is demanded of every revolutionary worker and those who would be revolutionaries.

Coincident with the expulsion of the Larks-Saikina group from the S. P. and Y. P. S. L., because of its struggle on the united front, Albert Goldman, and Lydia Bydel were expelled from the party and five members of the Young Communist League were expelled, for their struggle on the united front question, Germany and related issues. The struggle of the expelled ypsels against bureaucracy finds a similar struggle against a similar bureaucracy in the Communist party. Are not these facts of decisive importance to a Y. P. S. L. group which is slowly wending its way to Communism? Most certainly they are.

We believe that this group must recognize the extremely temporary character of its independent existence. Upon a recognition of this fact, it must begin at once, without delay, to probe the problems confronting the revolutionary movement in general and the Communist movement particularly. It must be prepared to take a clear and decisive position on these fundamental questions. The question of Socialism in one Country, the united front, Social Fascism, the Communist International, are as important for it as for the member of the Communist Party and the Communist sympathizer. The German situation is as significant for the social democratic worker as for the Communist worker. The organization of a systematic campaign of education should be instituted at once. The group should invite representatives of all the currents in the revolutionary movement for joint discussions, debates, etc., as a step in the direction toward a solution of these questions. Unless this is done, unless the group immediately develops a concrete perspective of its tasks and what it is to do, disintegration is inevitable and the splendid beginning will be lost.

upon how we answer the questions of trade union policy and tactics. The capitalists and their government hope to maintain the status quo among the working class. Where this is not possible they will attempt to guide the pressure of the class into company unions. Where the pressure reaches beyond these channels they will try to guide the force into safe and conservative channels such as the A. F. L.

The organization of the unorganized into industrial unions under Left wing leadership is our main task. The immediate practical task, which cannot be separated from the main task is the organization of a Left wing within the conservative unions. The revolutionists must work in the organizations where the masses are.

The Stalinist-Muscle bloc has not yet answered these questions. We have already lost years because of the Stalinist blunders in this field. The time is short. An answer must be given and should be presented before the Cleveland conference.

The call for the Cleveland Conference is signed by 82 individuals representing about 50 organizations. The representatives of the most important organizations have signed as individuals, which means the organizations are not yet backing the conference. Many paper organizations are officially represented.

Out of the 82 signers 42 are Stalinists and their sympathizers, 15 are Muscovites. They have obtained a few others whom they are using as a window dressing. In other words, the Cleveland call is a united front from above between Stalinists and Muscovites with a sprinkling of others to give it a good appearance. This is a continuation of their united front from above started at the Columbus, Ohio unemployed conference. A united front from above cannot be covered up by a list of 82 signatures. What counts is the political tendencies and numbers actually represented.

The conference is making a bad start and the call has failed to answer the most burning problems of trade union tactics. In spite of these blunders and shortcomings, the conference should be given full support. The class conscious workers and Marxists must fight for a correct trade union policy, in order to put life into our desire to fight the capitalist offensive which has taken on the form of the Industrial Recovery Act.

Slavery Provisions Revealed in Steel Code

taking from the workers every real means of enforcing their demands, making them completely dependent upon the tender mercies of their employer. And it is this plan that must be preserved and protected from any interference—especially that of any real trade union.

Even the Children Are Protected

As for the ways in which the steelmen will protect these delicate and useful children of theirs from the contamination of real unions—that is not stated in the code. There is no need of that. The past shows that there is no weapon, legal or illegal that the barons have hesitated to use against their workers. The Cossack state troopers, gunmen, the courts, enforced starvation by keeping the strikers away from groceries—all were used in the Great Steel Strike. Now with the national government behind them the arsenal of the steel barons will be even larger. That is what the hypocritical phrases of the code so thinly camouflaged.

And this code is not to be the only one of its type. Already the operators of the bituminous coal industry have announced their intention of following the lead of their fellow brigands in the steel industry.

The proposed steel code is a fair representative of the Industrial Recovery Act in practice. It permits the steel industry, at present the most centralized in America, to form a huge, solid trust, uniting the whole industry against the workers. It gives the barons the direct support of the federal government; now national troops instead of state troops are to be used to butcher striking workers. By the Industrial Recovery Act, a united front of industry and government is created for the task of driving down the standard of living of the workers. Against this only a united front of all workers organizations can fight that is the task of the hour. If the Communist party proves incapable and its leadership unwilling to use a correct united front tactic in bringing about such a united front, it is doomed to have even its small influence among the American masses destroyed.

were made to organize a united front movement against Fascism and War. In March of this year the United Youth Conference Against Fascism was organized. What was the result? After a successful demonstration before the German Consulate, those in control of the Committee—the leaders of the Young Communist League—dissolved the united front behind the backs of the other participating groups. Similarly with the National Youth Day's Conference, organized by the Young Communist League in May. Not only did the Y. C. L. violate the agreements arrived at in the united front, but they dissolved the permanent committee without giving any reasons to the affiliated groups. Are these the methods to be employed in the movement against war and Fascism?

The New York Conference will have to discuss the reasons for the victory of Fascism in Germany. You will have to understand the criminal policies of the Social Democracy and the policies of the Stalinist leadership of the Communist party which played into the hands of the Social Democracy and of Fascism. A realistic analysis of the present situation in Germany will show that all the organizations of the working class, including the social democratic party and the Communist party, have been smashed.

It is above all necessary for us to speak openly and boldly. The facts must be faced and not invented. To repeat that "the C. P. G. is not only not destroyed, but its influence on the masses is despite its illegality, greater than ever" (Varga-Impeccable—June 21st, 1933) is criminal light-mindedness and serves to cover up the capitulation of the Stalinists in Germany before Fascism without a struggle. The task of the revolutionary workers of Germany is to assemble their forces for the organization of a new Communist party on a Marxist program, on the basis of the lessons of the recent historical defeat.

The struggle against war and Fascism is the burning question of the moment. In the far east the Chinese people are being attacked and subjected by Japanese imperialism. The Soviet Union is being threatened by a frontal attack from Japan which can easily be converted into an offensive of all the imperialist powers against the workers' fatherland. In America, the government is going ahead with extensive plans for militarization. The London Economic Conference reflects the deep rooted conflicts of the imperialist powers which can be solved only by war.

Above all, the victory of Fascism in Germany, the imminent danger of Fascism in Austria, threatens to unite all the imperialist forces for war on the Soviet Union. With the best defender of the Soviet Union, the militant German proletariat lying prostrate before the Nazis—the defense of the Soviet Union is a thousand times more difficult.

All the more important therefore is the need for utmost clarity within the Communist and revolutionary movement on Fascism and War. A critical review of the past policies and practices of the Stalinist leadership of the Communist International should lead to the rejection of its revisionist program of Socialism in one country, social-Fascism, and united front only from below under revolutionary leadership.

The International Left Opposition has for many years clamored for a united front of the German social-democracy, trade unions, and Communist party against the danger of Fascism. This was called counter-revolutionary. Last February, after Hitler came into power, the Labor and Socialist International appealed in this civil war; that the heavy conditions of civil war would make the Nazis dependent upon their other bourgeois allies and impede their rapid entrenchment, giving Ilgenburg and Co. a certain balance of power.

The working class did not fight. We plead guilty: We assumed that it would. The Lovestonites accused us of this "error". Very well.

We have never read in the Workers Age, previous or during the German catastrophe, where they dispensed their wisdom to the effect that the workers of Germany would not fight. But we are quite ready to take their word for it post-humously. It only helps to characterize the Right wing swamp.

If they did not directly predict that the German workers would not fight, they might have just as well, for all the interest and agitation these national opportunists displayed in the German situation in the course of the two years in which the American Left Opposition persisted, through the Militant and in innumerable mass meetings, followed the Hitler danger step by step and warned against it, giving the exact Marxist analysis of each force represented and each step taken and calling for struggle.

But it is unnecessary to really take the Lovestonite fraud seriously, if one knows its purpose. It is only part of its bargaining process with the Stalinist bureaucracy for reinstatement. One of the chief prerequisites for peace with Stalin has ever been a fight against "Trotskyism". The Lovestonites are only doing their share.

As to the broader principle aspects of the question under discussion and the character of the Lovestone group at the present stage, we shall yet return to it on future occasions, for a more extensive examination.

national (Warski was another, for example) who confounded the Opposition's fight for party democracy with their own desire to "loosen a little" the rigid lines of revolutionary Marxist doctrine. When the gap widened between the Opposition and the party bureaucracy, when the program of the former unfolded to its fullest extent, when the precise nature of its attitude towards the Brandlerites became unmistakable—Klara Zetkin's support became lukewarm and then cold. Helplessly ensconced among the tarnishing frescoes that formed the facade of the bureaucracy, she had become a purely decorative figure in the International, her prestige and her authority, with the heroic revolutionary memories attached to them, serving a cynical bureaucracy to conceal its malpractices.

Here was a revolutionist who had been accustomed to speak out fearlessly, to struggle against authority against the greater odds, to swim against the stream in the company of such proletarian figures as the founders of German Communism. A just cause had always found in her a courageous champion. Even in causes not so just she had never failed to express her convictions. In 1922, at a time when a member of the Comintern could still defend his views even when they were opposed by the most authentic leaders, she protested to Lenin and Trotsky against the death sentence imposed upon the counter-revolutionists of the S. R. party. But half a decade of Stalinist rule had reduced the Comintern and its leading figures to such a state that a Klara Zetkin, who once found words in behalf of those who had effected the death of Uritsky and Volodarsky, who had almost assassinated Lenin and blown up Trotsky's military train—could look on in silence while the artificers of the October revolution, the Rakovskys, the Trotskys and hundreds of others, were sent into prison, exile or banishment. But no, not entirely in silence. For with an eye to the renown still attached to her name, the bureaucracy assigned her the task of writing the scurrilous pamphlet for International consumption, in which she demonstrated that the Bolshevik-Leninists were really counter-revolutionists and that the banishment to Turkey of the organizer of the October insurrection was fully justified.

To resist a Lenin and submit to a Stalin—no, it is not some integrating force in the present regime, making for true homogeneity of revolutionary doctrine, that explains such a phenomenon. Such a humiliating fall was the inexorable result of that moral dismemberment to which an oppressive bureaucracy is compelled to resort to its own ranks. What a terrific arraignment of a regime that can preserve itself only at the cost of such unspeakable triumphs!

Silent on Slender of Luxemburg
If she violated her own conscience in a public assault upon the Russian Opposition, she at least maintained silence when others traduced the memory of Rosa Luxemburg. But it was a silence unworthy of one who was fortunate enough to have such a mentor and friend. When Paul Levi was beating a retreat to the social democracy in 1921-1922 by trying to portray Rosa as a Menshevik, Klara Zetkin came to her defense with magnificent vigor, and concluded by pillorying the defamer of the great Eagle. Later, too, even under the Zinovievian dispensation, when a Ruth Fischer was seeking to disseminate the idea that Rosa had been "a syphilis germ in the body of German Communism", Klara Zetkin still found sufficient strength of mind and purpose to exorcise such an abomination. But the triumph of Stalinism has meant not only the physical but the spiritual undermining of the International. In the last two years, the campaign launched against Rosa Luxemburg exceeded all imaginable bounds. It was not an undertaking calculated to analyze the defective parts of her doctrine so that the modern Communist movement might learn to avoid the errors flowing from them. In the mind of the bureaucracy, this aim occupied a remote and purely casual place. The tenor of the campaign was the commandment of the jealous deity of Israel: Thou shalt have no other gods than Jehovah, paraphrased to read instead: Stalin. A Kuusinen, a Bela Kun, a Kurt Sauerland, Stalin himself—people who never reached up to the hem of Rosa's skirts—left no mud untouched with which to besmirch her. Hundreds of "red professors" were let loose around the grave of the dead like so many desecrating vultures. The last Lenin-Liebknecht Luxemburg week was celebrated throughout the official world by poisonous attacks upon Rosa—more elegant in phrase than Ruth Fischer's, but no less despicable—and hymns of praise to Stalin.

Paralysis of Stalinist Degradation
And Klara Zetkin? In the corridor of the program commission of the Sixth World Congress, another of the old Spartacists, an educated Marxist, Hermann Duncker, almost wept with mortification before his intimates at the idea that the theory of socialism in one country had been inserted in the program of the International. "Must we now vote to include it in the program too?" Yet he voted for it, and did not voice his protest openly. Klara Zetkin must have asked herself a similar question when the detestable campaign was launched against Rosa. But this time, she on voted an open protest. The peculiar triumph of Stalinism which heralds its own collapse meant for her, as for all revolutionists who failed to choose the alternative of open struggle, a gag in the mouth, a paralyzing of the will, a terrible spiritual degradation.

Klara Zetkin was one of the half-dozen Spartacists left in the International, and with her death the best of the living is gone. She embodied in her finest days the link between the pre-war Left wing movement in the social democracy and the International that was reconstituted under the banner of Bolshevism. She brought with her the great tradition of that resolute group that formed itself under the name of the heroic organizer of the slaves' revolts in antiquity. Is it perhaps symbolic that Klara Zetkin should die just after the ignominious death of the Communist party which she helped to found? The tradition of the Spartacists, however, established in the dark days of the war, is not irrevocable. The new Communist movement in Germany, rising like a phoenix out of the ashes of the dead, will revive all that was glorious in the old tradition and the memory of the old warriors, and enrich it with the struggle for the liberation of all the oppressed.

—MAX SHACHTMAN.

It is needless to point out that the question: How do the philosophical views of a certain person or a certain group reflect themselves in the field of politics and of the organization?—always has a tremendous significance for the elaboration of a correct control by the party. Thus Lenin fought mercilessly against Gorky in 1917 when above all other considerations stood the necessity of a revolutionary overthrow. On the other hand, it must be considered as the greatest shame that the Stalinist bureaucracy is transforming Barbusse the novelist into a leading political figure in spite of the fact that it is precisely in politics that Barbusse marches arm in arm with Renner, Vandervelde, Monnet and Paul Louis.

I am very much afraid that I have not given you a satisfactory reply to the practical questions put to me. But what has been said explains, I hope, why I could not give such a reply which requires a concrete knowledge of the situation and the personal conditions. Just the same, perhaps these brief considerations will at least partially help in the working out of a correct policy in this complicated and responsible field.

With Communist greetings,

The Party in the Field of Art and Philosophy

Dear Comrades:
Your letter poses very important problems which do not, however, admit, in my opinion, of general and categorical solutions suitable in all cases. As an organization we have as the point of departure not only definite political ideas but certain philosophical and scientific methods. We base ourselves on dialectical materialism, from which flow conclusions not only concerning politics and science, but also art. Still, there is a vast difference in our attitude towards these conclusions. We cannot, to any similar degree, exercise the same rigorous control over art, by the very nature of this activity, as over politics. The party is obliged to permit a very extensive liberty in the field of art, eliminating pitilessly only that which is directed against the revolutionary tasks of the proletariat; on the other hand, the party cannot assume an immediate and direct responsibility for the declarations of its various members in the field of art even when it accords them its tribute. The maintenance of these two rules—the preservation of the liberty necessary for individual creation, and the non-transmission of the responsibility for all its roads to the party—is especially obligatory in those cases where it is a question not of theoreticians in the field of art, but of the artists themselves: painters, men of letters, etc. In addition, the party must be able to distinguish clearly the line where generalization in the field of art passes directly into the field of politics. Without making here any concessions in principle, the party must, however, confine itself in the case of artists to rectifications, firm but tactical, of any false political conclusions flowing from their artistic views. Marx expressed this idea in a jocular phrase about Kreilgrath: "Poets are queer fish." (Die Dichter sind wunderbare Fische.) Lenin applied different criteria to Bogdanov the theoretician and professional politiel and to Gorky the artist, in spite of the fact that for a certain period of time Bogdanov and Gorky were closely associated in politics. Lenin proceeded from the standpoint that by his artistic activity and his popularity, Gorky could endow the cause of the revolution with benefits far exceeding the harm of his erroneous declarations and actions which, moreover, the party could always correct in good time and tactfully.

Viewed from this standpoint, philosophical activity lies between art and politics, closer to politics than to art. In philosophy, the party itself occupies a distinct militant position, which is not the case—at least not to the same extent—in the field of art. Objections to the effect that the "dogmatization" and "canonization" of dialectical materialism, the party prevents the free development of philosophical and scientific thought, do not deserve serious attention. No factory can work without basing itself upon a definite technological doctrine. No hospital can treat its patients if the physicians do not base themselves on the established teachings of Pathology. It would be sheer folly to permit dilettantes to experiment arbitrarily in the factory or in the hospital, on the pretext that they consider themselves "innovators". Innovators must first prove their right to influence practical technology and medicine. The party must be especially vigilant towards those "innovators" who only warm up stale critical dishes, or towards those who are still in the period of investigating, with uncertain results. But least of all does this signify that in the sphere of philosophy the party can act as if all questions have already been resolved for it, and that it has nothing to expect from the further development of scientific thought. It is not an easy matter to find the correct political line in this field. It is acquired only by experience and by a flexible leadership. Just as in artillery fire, the target is usually hit by a series of shots which fall far and then short of the mark.

With Communist greetings,
—L. TROTSKY.

Austrian Labor Robbed of Rights

tion is very poor among the masses. "What good is a vacation, or the eight hour day?" says the unemployed worker, "what I want is work even if it's a twelve hour day!" But it is precisely because of these sentiments that it was necessary to make it understood with all means at one's disposal that the shattering of the eight hour day strikes at all—the unemployed, who thereby have even less of a chance to get work, and the worker in the factory, whose wage is going to shrink even more miserably.

Where there is a will, there is a way. If the social democracy wanted to conduct a serious and effective resistance against the disfranchisement of the workers and against the unlimited and merciless aggravation of exploitation, then they could find ways of making the masses understand the significance of the new labor regulations of the government. Not even the blue pencil of the censor could prevent them from doing this.

A Sterile Protest
"With the representation of economic interests in Austria," the Arbeiterzeitung weeps on June 10, "things stand thus: Before the issuance of a decree which digs deep underneath the living conditions of thousands of people, the working class hears nothing of the new decree. The workers' representatives are not asked for approval, the trade unions are not consulted. Parliament is simply out of the picture... But once the decree is issued, it is not even allowed to be criticized and if criticism is attempted, confiscation follows." Again the facts are stated quite correctly, but the workers are not served merely with a statement of the facts.

There is the argument that Fascism would gain advantage from serious difficulties of the Dollfuss government. Fascism will really reap its fruits from this capitulation policy. Decades of trade union work, the destruction of the monarchy, the example of the Russian revolution were all necessary for the Austrian working class to gain those insignificantly social-political protective measures which were just as tremendously overestimated in their time by the trade union "experts" as they are powerlessly surrendered by them today. The more we allow to be taken from us without a struggle today, the harder it will be and the more sacrifices it will require, to regain what is lost, in the future.

"It seems as if the government only has the bosses' desires in mind" (From an inquiry of the social democrats in the Federal Council).

Around the 'Recovery'

How the Boss Class Receives the N.I.R.A.

The Industrial Recovery Act marks a further step in the Europeanization of American economy, through its close coordination of industries for the purpose of establishing fixed policies as to prices, wages, production, sales methods, etc.; its foundation in class collaboration between industry and labor; and the drawing-in of the state authority into an intimate supervision of the whole process of coordination and collaboration. France of the Third Republic, Germany under the Weimar constitution and even under the Kaiser, afford much closer parallels to the "new deal" than Hitler's Germany or Mussolini's Italy.

Of course, it is a little hard for some of the "rugged individualists" to get used to the idea of exerting their influence over the industry through a trade association, instead of the "free competition" to which they are accustomed, and to solve their labor problems in collaboration with the Greens, the Wobbs and the Lewises. Instead of by the police club. Some of them have not yet understood that according to the presidential edict their highest aim in life is to provide "purchasing power" and to keep factories going—they keep thinking of profits and wondering if the Great White Father at Washington understands what business is all about. Many of them, on the other hand, have been quick to grasp the new idea, and the Standard Oil interests do not hesitate to put the power to fix prices and to allocate production right in the hands of the president. They understand that "purchasing power of labor" as carried out by a president who sets a wage scale of $1 a day for the reforestation workers, who cuts the veterans' pensions and the salaries of the Federal employees, is something that will not interfere with profits.

The first few weeks of the N.I.R.A. show however that this transition from the old methods of dealing with the workers, with the list, to the new methods, with the outstretched hand, has not yet been fully made. All the codes have to repeat the statements of the act about the right of collective bargaining, the workers' freedom from compulsion to join company unions, and the willingness of the manufacturers to comply with the regulations about hours and wages.

An analysis of the actual codes submitted, particularly by the larger industries, shows that the bosses want to keep their hands free in dealing with labor. The steel industry was the most outspoken, declaring that the form of employee representation which it has had for years, an empty and formal ceremony, does not need to be changed to fit into the "collective bargaining" required by the act. "This is not even a company union, but to take no chances, a number of steel companies have been organizing company unions as well. So have many coal operators, even in Kentucky. In any event, they know that they can 'bargain' with the A. F. L. fakers, who are the only representatives of labor recognized by the government. The A. F. L. is putting on a terrific organization drive, putting hundreds of organizers into the field, and reaching basic industries like steel, automobiles, etc., which have been closed to them up to now.

On the vital question of wages, the first few codes prepared so far show the same effort to seem to be doing something for the worker, while in reality making as few concessions as possible. The minimum wage provisions are in reality meaningless: in the first place, they apply only to one class of labor, the lowest paid, and even here they can be and will be evaded by classifying workers as "learners and apprentices" who can then be paid less than the alleged "minimum" wage. Second, the rates are figured by the week or the hour, while the real living standard of a worker is measured by his wages over the period of a year. Third, contrary to the government's promises, nothing has been put into the codes to prevent still further speeding-up so as to make it possible for employers to fire many workers, get the same volume of production out of those remaining, and thus keep their total wages paid unchanged, even while paying a higher rate per hour or per week. Fourth, if piece-work rates are permitted, what becomes of the minimum wage? Even the president had to recognize that the textile code was too raw in this respect, and to make the deal look plausible to the workers he had a statement inserted that hourly rates were not to be changed to piece-work rates in the effort to defeat the purposes of the code.

The provisions as to hours are also being left open to all kinds of juggling in the codes submitted so far. Not a single one of them guarantees a minimum number of hours or weeks of work in a year, as well as a maximum, which would be a concession in so far as it would set the year's earnings, not the week's or the hour's, as a standard. The provision for forty hours a week introduced by the textile code have been taken as a minimum, and the lumber code even provides for a forty-eight hour week. The Roosevelt enthusiasm for the thirty-hour week was once reflected in the Black Bill and in the provision that work on the new navy ships for which bids will be opened shortly must be on a thirty-hour weekly basis. Now it seems to have vanished.

Instead, there are a number of provisions whereby work can be piled up for a certain period, running as high as six months in some cases, far above the so-called "maximum" hours of the code, on the pretext that the industry is continuous, as claimed by the steel and the rayon employers. The whole question of maximum

New Boss Attacks in Britain Militant Strikes Mark Beginning of Workers' Resistance

Edinburgh, Scotland.—The British capitalist class is in an aggressive mood. Despite the pious protests of the parliamentary Labor Party, a scheme for the reorganization of the police force upon a military basis is now well advanced and middle class youth are being specially trained at Cadet schools for service as police officers. At the same time the number of special constables will be increased and the strength of the force raised to fifty thousand men under the supervision of the reactionary Lord Trenchard, now Commissioner of Police.

Along with this new police organization comes news of a new Unemployment Insurance Act, the outcome of the labors of several government commissions. According to semi-official statements made in the government press, the new act will contain at least one drastic change in the administration of unemployment benefit, namely, a scheme for the conscription of labor. At the present time, the majority of unemployed persons have exhausted their ordinary benefit and are now receiving transitional or temporary payments provided they can satisfy the authorities that they have no other means of maintenance.

Under the new act these persons would only receive benefit provided they are prepared to enroll at special work centers to be organized by the state. The state would then undertake to train the unemployed in handicrafts, trades and physical culture at a cost of 4 million pounds. The two schemes, reorganization of the police and organization of conscript labor, dovetail admirably into each other and is the event of any emergency, such as large-scale strikes or working class demonstrations, the state will have at its disposal a militarized police force and also an army of conscript strike breakers calculated to smash any form of working class resistance.

The British ruling class is looking far ahead and with a duplicity in the art of statism they seek to avert their intentions behind a mock attack upon German Fascism. They have backed up the protest of Lansbury and the Labor party against Hitler with their own protests mounted by the jingo Churchill and Chamberlain. The latter pair suggest that Fascism will never find a place in Britain as a system of government and indeed, at the present time, there seems no need of any great change in the traditional method of parliamentary democracy.

Cowardly Document of Labor Party
But this is only a superficial view of things and only the unwary could imagine that Britain can escape the Fascist tidal wave that is sweeping Europe. No doubt the swiftness of introduction will be peculiarly British, the mailed fist concealed in the velvet glove, but the dreams of a parliamentary majority still being indulged in by the leaders of the Labor party seem to be rudely shattered. At any rate, their recent manifesto denouncing both Communism and Fascism in favor of parliamentary democracy will go down in history as one of the most cowardly and hypocritical documents ever issued by a group of so-called leaders of a highly developed working class. They claim to be preparing for another term of

New York, N. Y.—A marvel of organizational effort was achieved recently by a number of young workers in the mirror novelty line, a branch of the pocketbook and ladies handbag industry.

The mirror novelty line is not a large one. Nevertheless it consists of some ten or twelve shops employing 70 or 80 workers, boys and girls, coverers, pasters, tippers, etc. who are the most exploited of the semi-skilled section of the working class. The industry was entirely neglected by the various factions in the labor movement. Although the Trade Union Unity League has at Gen'l Strike in Furniture Trade of N.Y.

New York, N. Y.—Four thousand upholsterers were called out last Thursday, July 27th on a general strike of the industry. The call was issued at the Manhattan Lyceum by the Executive Committee of Local 76 of the American Federation of Labor at a strike meeting of over 800 sitting under banners of 42 of the largest shops of greater New York. Demonstrations of enthusiasm and spirit swept the hall at the proposal of the chairman, Brother Albert, for a general strike in the morning for the basic demands of the 30 hour week and the minimum scale of $1.40 per hour. Irving Plaza, headquarters of the strike, was packed this morning with the first day's response to the call. Committees were organized to cover every shop in the city down to and including the one and two man shops. Preparations are under way for a kitchen to feed the strikers. All indications point towards a militant and determined fight to unionize the trade.

Caught completely unprepared by the general strike call, the party fraction of the Furniture Workers' Industrial Union met hastily last night, and without consulting the membership of the union, also called a "general strike" of the four or five shops over which it has "control". In contrast to the A. F. L., their demands are for the 40 hour week and for the $1 per hour basic wage. This is the culmination of the weak and confused "united front below" policy against which the left wing group has struggled over a period of months.

Two days ago, at a meeting of five shops called by the Industrial Union, the mask of unity behind which the Party bureaucrats had been hiding, was torn from their faces when they answered the demand for merging the rival unions with a "decision" from above that the Industrial Union will be maintained at all costs. For months the the A. F. of L.—a scanty few by T. U. L. organizations but generally they are spontaneous struggles without organized leadership.

The splitting tactics of the A. F. of L. bureaucrats, and the sectarian course of the Stalinists have together served to throttle the possibility of a real united struggle of all workers capable of smashing the slave NIRA codes and winning the five-day week and the six-hour day with increased pay.

Pocketbook Workers Win Conditions

New York.—At a mass meeting in Webster Hall, the Pocketbook workers heard a report of their manager Stein, that an agreement was reached with the Industrial Council of the Leather Goods Employers Association. After the manager's report a lengthy discussion took place for and against accepting the agreement. The majority of the workers listening to the heated discussion decided to accept the agreement with a majority vote.

It was the Left wing that made the fight to continue the strike until the bosses will grant all the demands.

St. Louis—Hotbed of Strikes Shoe Workers Rebel in Strike Without 'Leaders'

St. Louis, Mo.—Six months ago the majority of St. Louis working class tongues were wig-wagging: "Just wait till the breweries open up." Every other worker tempered his impatience to enjoy a decent standard of living with the rose-colored vision of the "good old days". To-day every worker knows from bitter experience that even 90 percent beer in 2 for 5c steels could not solve our situation—forced by 17,000,000 unemployed starving because of "over-production".

Rising prices have stimulated production, temporarily at least, in certain of the local industries: (Clothing, shoes, boxes, etc.). The increased cost of living has driven the St. Louis workers forward to union organization and to militant strikes for higher wages, shorter hours, etc.

The local AFL organization committee has organized over 3,000 workers into their various craft unions within a relatively short period of time, printers, shoe-workers, metal-trades workers, clothing, etc. The Needle Trades Workers' Industrial Union seems to have passed out of existence.

The International Ladies Garment Workers' Union, within four weeks time, has a rapidly growing membership that will soon have the mass of shops in St. Louis organized. This is an important achievement, even though the ILGWU is a Right wing union, when one considers that the St. Louis needle trades have been notoriously open shop for many years. Already many of the smaller factories are organized 100 percent; and inroads are being made on the larger clothing companies.

The count-on-your-hand membership of the sectarian NTWU has, correctly, individually joined

Roosevelt's Radio Speech Asks for Class «Peace»

The significance of Roosevelt's speech last Monday night cannot be overestimated. It constitutes an historical milestone in the downward development of world capitalism. It foreshadows the whole course of the American bourgeoisie in the coming period, both at home and abroad.

"I have no sympathy," said the head man of capitalist America after four years of crisis, "with the professional economists who insist that things must run their courses and that human agencies can have no influence on economic ills".

And the president went on to affirm the future utilization of "human" agencies by the bourgeoisie. What this means, he makes quite clear. It is the closer and more open merging of the economic interests of the ruling class with their political, state apparatus. In other words, a system of state capitaltism which is not unlike the benevolent despotism of the Seventeenth and Eighteenth century kings.

The idea of "benevolent" repression of the ruling classes is rebuffed in a new form, with the oppressed classes standing to gain even less than in the past; the part of the "despot" still sharper, that of "benevolence" even more shallow.

What is the particular "human" agency Mr. Roosevelt refers to? It is the so-called blanket code, proposed by the "National Recovery Administration". What are the "economic ills" this agency is to remedy? They constitute the organizational backwardness of American capitalism in relation to its outstandingly predominant position on the world market.

How will the support which the president calls for in regard to the code accomplish the task he sets himself?

It is intended first of all, by giving us the former, reckless "laissez faire" policy, to rally American capitalism to a breathing spell on the internal market which will permit a converted, national attack on the world market.

It is intended, in the second place, to forestall a powerful movement for the workers' way out of the crisis, by throwing a sop to the 17,000,000 desperate proletarians, whose elemental, immediate demand is a job with half-way tolerable pay, through the introduction of the stagger system, pure and simple; and furthermore, by coralling the forces of the working class, ahead of time, in service class collaborationist organizations, through the sponsoring of A. F. of L. activity in such a manner as to entrench the influence of capitalist's lieutenants within labor's ranks.

All in all, a scheme for the Europeanization of industry on the "American" mass scale, with all its benefits for the bourgeoisie and as little as possible of its drawbacks. This is the meaning of the Chief Executive's oration: the mobilization of the capitalist United States for a long range drive toward absolute world domination; a determined and carefully conceived plan to chain the working class to this drive.

It is necessary to realize the thorough running of this scheme, its far-sightedness. The approach towards its fulfillment is in itself comparable. Mr. Roosevelt calls upon "the employees of the nation to sign this covenant with me—in the name of patriotism and humanity".

He calls upon "the workers to go along with us in a spirit of understanding, etc." Patriotism is demanded of the bourgeoisie right off the bat. The whole nationalistic paraphernalia is set into motion. Badges of honor to be handed out to employers who "cooperate". Strong national agitation has already been broadcast, in all the stands the administration has taken on international affairs, in all the speeches. Mr. Roosevelt can already boast of achievements insofar as the bourgeoisie is concerned. Hasn't he reestablished the credit of the country when it lay prostrate? Haven't he put through the Farm Bill to curtail agricultural production and raise farm prices for the benefits of all the farmers' creditors? He feels that he threatens on sure ground here, that he can make demands of the bourgeoisie. He has been their man.

Of the workers he only demands that they "go along with us." In this field he is not so sure. For what achievements can he boast here? The miserable conservation camps, with their forced labor and their $1 a day wage slavery? This is not very likely to impress the workers. In the meantime, strikes of all sizes and amplitudes sweep the country. It is necessary for the capitalist strategist to go easy with the workers. They are in no mood for fanatics.

He merely pleads with the workers "that no aggression is now necessary to attain these (the workers') rights." He merely assures them that "nobody will be permitted to whittle... away" the rights which they have not got.

He prefers to wait and see how the workers will fair for the bag of the stagger system and the minimum wage—which every capitalist will have no trouble to transform into the maximum wage.

THE N.I.R.A.—SUMMED UP

The decay of world capitalism is the condition that prepared the foundation for the Industrial Recovery Act.

The Industrial Recovery Act can be summed up as follows:

1. It is an attempt to prop up a tottering and decaying capitalist system.
2. It is an attempt to organize production; instead it will enlarge all of the basic contradictions.
3. It is an attempt to regulate competition; instead it will intensify competition.
4. It has the elements of state capitalism.
5. The defeat of the German working class by Fascism has caused a political regrouping in world politics and has accelerated the American imperialists' attempt to reorganize the international economic forces in preparation for more effective international struggles and for war.
6. It reveals to a greater extent the true role of the state as an instrument of suppression for the dominating class. The partnership of government and industry is not new. Only the form of a relationship is changing, from a concealed to a more open form.
7. It will organize cartels through government aid.
8. It will result in a government subsidy to the big capitalists and the "sick" industries and is part of the plan to raise the price level of commodities.
8. It is a method of eliminating the small producers.

10. The establishment of the codes and the minimum wage for each industry, suitable for the big capitalists with large constant capital, modern methods of production and a high degree of exploitation, will eliminate the small producers who cannot live up to the new form of competition.
11. The right to curtail production through the code agreements is a weapon in the hands of the big capitalists against the small producers.
12. It will result in a lower standard of living for the American workers.
13. Speed up and rationalization will be intensified.
14. The real wages of the working class will be reduced regardless of what the money wage may be.
15. It will establish a low minimum wage which will become the average and then the maximum.
16. The reduction of hours as presented by the code is the stagger plan.
17. The 30 hour week is a denial of and a caricature of the six hour day and five day week.
18. It will establish a class collaboration machinery to hold in check the working class. Arbitration will be established for every industry.
19. It is an attempt to head off the class upheavals in the near future.
19. It is an attempt to prevent strikes. It will outlaw strikes. Strikes will be against the bosses' government. The capitalists will hide behind the American flag to a far greater degree.

20. The code makes provisions for a money wage increase of from 5 percent to 10 percent to prevent strikes due to the rapid rise in commodity prices.

21. The workers' "rights" under the code only begin after the employees threaten to repudiate the employers' slave codes—then the capitalists and their government will resort to arbitration to prevent strikes.

22. It is an attempt to side-step the dole and social insurance, absorbing some of the unemployed through the stagger plan and by the inauguration of a public works program for the benefits of the contractors' and capitalists' profits, to employ some of the unemployed for the equivalent of relief.

23. It is an attempt to prevent the establishment of class struggle unions and instead to maintain the status quo, or to establish company unions—or safe conservative unions such as the A. F. L.

24. It is an attempt to reorganize the surplus labor power to the high productive forces of American industries.

25. The Industrial Recovery Act is an admission of the bankruptcy of the capitalist mode of production and is an unworkable substitute for the solution—the revolutionary overthrow of the capitalist system and the establishment of a Workers' Government.

Lessons of the United Front

POLITICAL FACTIONS WITHIN AN ORGANIZATION

The united front is the tactic that enables us to bring together the combined pressure of various organizations of the working class. But one finds that a conference of many political tendencies or a trade union that has many political tendencies raises another problem within the broad problem of the united front. A conference or organization that has many different political tendencies will, in the main, divide between Right and Left and Centre. Working agreements, of a temporary measure, on one or more issues, within the conference or organization, will to a great degree determine which section of the conference or organization, Right-Centre or Left, will dominate the organization or conference. This united front is conducted on the same basis as any united front. However, the complicated situation causes intensification of contradictions between political tendencies which proceed at a more rapid tempo.

IS IT PROPER TO BREAK A UNITED FRONT?

A united front is only a temporary agreement on immediate demands in action and must be preserved as long as it functions for the CLASS INTEREST. If the development of the struggle and the united front for one reason or another is transformed from the basis of class struggle to that of class collaboration and the Right wing is about ready to betray or sell out—it is the duty of Marxists and revolutionists to point out, and to warn of the danger, and if it cannot be corrected, then the Left wing must break the united front BEFORE THE BETRAYAL. Such action will result in a temporary setback, not due to the break but due to the sell-out. However, if the Left wing has conducted itself correctly, broke away in time, and still retains the confidence of the masses, who could not see their position at the time of the break, the Left wing can lead in the reorganization of the forces, or in checking the retreat and preparing for a come-back.

COMPROMISE

The united front of different working class organizations, in the first place, is an attempt to increase the pressure against the capitalist class, and in the second, a give-and-take proposition between the organizations. In the final analysis it is a victory for that organization and its leadership which knows what to give and what to take. The representatives delegated for the united front conference and those who will do the negotiating must know in advance what the objectives of the united front and the organization are and within what frame-work they must work.

Compromises on secondary questions can and must be made and all the more so when friction is about to split the conference or organization. However, one must know how to distinguish between compromises and compromises. One must never compromise on principle, while one can compromise on other factors. It is up to the representatives and delegates to know the difference between these two words or compromises.

For example, at the June 1933 Unemployed Conference in Chicago the report of the program and policy committee was amended on the question of the united front, to first strike out the clause, "the right of political criticism," and second, to strike out and change the word "force," in the sentence which said "any organization not entering the united front must be forced into it." The committee compromised on the word force and changed it to a milder form, but the committee would not budge one inch or compromise on the question of political criticism. The question of principle but the question of modifying the word force is not.

LEADERS AND LEADERS

After a group of labor leaders have sold out and betrayed the workers it is often the style to condemn all leaders. One must be able to distinguish between different kinds of leaders. It is always in place to call for rank and file CONTROL and no revolutionist or Marxist is opposed to rank and file control. It is out of place and wrong to call for rank and file LEADERSHIP. Rank and file leadership is an empty slogan, yet as harmful as the slogan of the "united front from below." Both are inverted non-Marxist slogans.

SPARTACUS YOUTH CLUB ORGANIZED IN BROWNSVILLE

Last Thursday, July 20th, the Spartacus Youth Club of Brownsville was launched. Eight comrades attended and about a half dozen more will soon join. Most of the members are expelled comrades from the Young Communist League, American Youth Club and Student Forum. There is a healthy sentiment for the Spartacus Youth Club in the section which should insure rapid progress.

At its first meeting George Ray was elected as organizer, Joe Elliott, secretary-treasurer and Morris Kent, literature agent. Plans are being made to get headquarters for the Club in the near future.

FROM THE MILITANTS

I.L.D. Expels 3 Workers in Minneapolis

Minneapolis, Minn.—In March 1933, three members of the I. L. D.: Joe Ross, M. B. Dunne and Celia Cazanov. Upon our entry into the organization we found an almost total lack of activity, small membership, (6 or 7 active people) and no definite plan for immediate work. We soon became active, proposed work and helped to carry it out. Comrade Cazanov was sent to Chicago to represent the McDuffy branch of the I. L. D. at the Chicago Free Tom Mooney Congress. We also served as delegates at the May Day Conference. And in short conducted ourselves in such a manner as to gain the respect and approval of the I. L. D. member. New elements joined and old members, who had dropped out, did not escape the attention of the returned.

Our growing influence angered the Party bureaucrats, and a systematic campaign to isolate us was under way. Over the protest of honest members whom we had won to our support we were gradually removed from all activity. The real issue, which of course was Trotskyism, did not come into the open until the meeting of June 23rd. At that time it was brought into an educational meeting by Sam Bernstein, a Party bureaucrat. The charge was made that there were disrupters in the I. L. D., that the disrupting elements were the Trotskyites and he proposed a house cleaning.

A party worker took the floor and stated that if there are any disrupting elements they will be pushed out from activities and also from the organization by the members themselves. Fearing that the L. O. members might get a big support (yes, from Party members and sympathizers) if they were to continue the way they started, Bernstein then made a motion that the branch arrange another educational meeting for next Friday where any kind of a question can be discussed, "yes, even Trotskyism, if you please," pointing at comrade Cazanov. The motion also included a house cleaning at that same meeting. Comrade Ross then suggested that it should be an open meeting and this was accepted even by the bureaucrats Davis and Bernstein, and of course without any opposition on the part of the members.

All threats of exposing the L. O. all talks of expelling disrupters, came to an anti-climax Friday night. Comrades Cazanov and Dunne were met in the porch of the Workers Cultural Center by S. K. Davis. He stopped us at the door and stated that we were not to be allowed in the meeting. When asked for a reason, he said that it was a decision. We asked whose decision. He refused to answer. We started our intentions of going in and appealing to the membership. He responded by closing the door.

The Columbus Conference

2. The Stalinist-Muste Bloc at the Unemployed Gathering

II. The Stalinist-Muste Bloc

The main thing, therefore, to bear in mind, in seeking to understand the Columbus conference is the fact that the Stalinists in utter dependence over their inability to control the Federation mechanically, rushed into the arms of Muste and the horse-trading began. An agreement was reached between Muste and the Unemployed Councils that, since neither was satisfied with the Federation, for his own good reasons, they would both sabotage it. Muste therefore agreed not to affiliate with the Federation and to favor the committee of five-live, providing the Unemployed Councils would keep out of Muste's conference and let him establish his national organization un molested. The bargain was struck and each rejoiced in his own wisdom, confident that the five-live proposition as outlined by Browder before the Federation would work out to their own advantage. It would. A committee of fifteen, on which the Muste-Stalin bloc would have a mechanical majority from the start was sure to capture the hegemony at the January conference. As to the question which one of the two would get the best of the bargain after the conference, that question could wait. Both the Stalinists and the Mustelites know a trick or two about the fine art of packing conventions and capturing mechanical control.

Now, it must be remembered, that the original call for the Columbus Conference was addressed to all unemployed organizations, inviting them all to participate. But the Federation had been founded in the meantime and following that, the horse-trading bargain between the Stalinists and Mustelites struck. Muste therefore betwined himself the better and dedicated the Columbus conference to the founding of a national organization of the Unemployed Leagues.

Having arrived a day ahead of time, the writer was able to witness the proceedings of the last day of the state conference of the Ohio Unemployed Leagues. From the comments of the observers of the first two days of this conference it appeared that the central problem of the conference was the American flag. This surprising bit of information was entirely confirmed by the last day's proceedings, in which the greatest part was indeed spent in heated discussion of the place of the Stars and Stripes in the constitution of the organization. After wide inquiry the reason for this became apparent. In discussion with various delegates this illuminating fact was revealed: the Muste group, in its great haste to carve itself a place in the American labor movement, had gone into the field and built up mushroom unemployed organizations by catering to all of the prejudices of the backward small-town workers. It was not an uncommon sight during the recess periods, to see some excited delegates rush up to Mr. Budenz and demand of him "didn't you promise to organize us into a patriotic organization under the stars and stripes?" And Mr. Budenz would sheepishly have to admit that he had. This catering to the prejudices of the more benighted workers made it possible for the bourgeoisie's hirelings within the convention to shift the discussion from class struggle to patriotism and the American flag.

The following was the first resolution passed by the conference without a dissenting vote: "The Stars and Stripes forever. When right we uphold them; when wrong, we seek to right them." No comment is necessary. One felt very much like going over to the Party "General Staff" in the adjoining box and asking them if that did not somehow upset their theory of the "revolutionary upsurge." But then one could also save one's breath to cool one's porridge. Yet it was this reactionary mass that was to constitute the majority of the National Conference.

The National Conference

A heated debate followed the opening of the national conference. The point of dispute was the question of the status of the delegates who had come from the organizations that are not controlled by Muste. True to their bargain, the Unemployed Council delegation sought to be seated only as fraternal delegates. Other delegates, however, who had come from various states in response to the first-that a constant, daily stream of donations are received. Furthermore, I can safely say, as far as Glasgow is concerned, practically the sole party activity is the sale of the Daily Worker.

The "Red Clydeside" as we once knew it seems no longer to exist. The scenes witnessed such as May Day, 1918, when despite all threats 100,000 workers took the day off, marched in procession with bands, banners, red flags and revolutionary songs were the order of the day, are only memories. The sidewalk, on route, was at that time lined with sympathizers who raised approving cries. At the Glasgow Green every one of the 22 platforms commanded a crowd. Solidarity and struggle were the orders of the day, sectarianism was relegated to obscurity notwithstanding criticism and counter-criticism. Then again "Bloody Friday" (Jan. 1919) was a spontaneous expression of working class solidarity. These things happened when the patriotic war fever was still in the air and before the inauguration of the C. P. G. B. These items prove conclusively that the party has really failed in its approach to the masses. After being excluded from the Party for "Trotskyism" (before I knew the platform of the L. O.), naturally I felt despondent, for some considerable time, at my isolation, but now that one senses the definite growth of the L. O. in this country the mood has passed and once more we enter the fight.

I have never been a platform man but nevertheless I travel around the Labour Exchanges, streets and spots where "Reds" congregate and I take part in discussions and informal debates. At first the current against the L. O. position was strong and I used to have people on all sides "yapping" at me, but now the situation is gradually changing and I am definitely winning the support of many party members and sympathizers. So far we have not started on L. O. group, but that can be explained by the widespread poverty as many potential members are quite unable to buy literature, let alone pay subs to a party.

I am going through the back numbers of the Militant you sent and am collating material for reprinting. Previously I was able to get a comrade to cyclostyle material from the "Permanent Revolution" a copy of which I possess, but at present it is going the rounds of the comrades. Furthermore, I drafted material from the "Real Situation in Russia," a copy of which is in the library. The only other work of comrade Trotsky, in addition to the above mentioned, in the Glasgow libraries, is the History of the Russian Revolution, just recently added. The L. P. put into circulation a copy of comrade Trotsky's speech at Copenhagen (Nov. 1932), but the price charged was six pence and I am now endeavoring to arrange the print of this speech for sale at one penny.

I am pleased to see the points raised in the current (July 1st) issue of the Militant about the absence of any U. S. S. R. delegation (at the Paris anti-Fascist Conference). For some time past I have demanded to be seated as the regular delegates. After a struggle the Mustelites gave in and, with the exception of the Unemployed Council delegates, were declared regulars.

The Left Opposition was the only political group besides the C. P. L. A. that made its appearance as such at this conference, being represented by a fraternal delegate who distributed a statement stressing the significance of the Recovery Act and urging the Convention to affiliate to the National Federation. It seems to have become an established tradition that the first day and a half or two days of a three day working class conference should be wasted in windmilling oratory. The Columbus conference was no exception. The only important accomplishment on the afternoon of the second day was the adoption of a constitution and some minor resolutions which were neither here nor there since they did not affect the policy of the organization. True, on that same day amid much trumpeting and flag waving a Declaration of Independence couched adopted in a decidedly radical verbiage. It is also true that the whole assemblage stood up and sang "America" and waved more flags after the adoption of this windy Declaration.

Be it also said, that the Stalinist "General Staff" under Hathaway's personal command, to its shame, did not find it necessary to intervene and at least attempt to shift the discussion to proper channels. An agreement is an agreement—at least for the time being. The reciprocal double-crossing would come later in the haggling over the spoils.

The real question as to the course to be followed by the new organization in the direction of unifying the unemployed movement was still to be decided on. Resolutions on that point had been submitted by Oppositionist delegates. The aim of the Oppositionist faction was to have the conference go on record instructing the incoming National Committee to affiliate to the NATIONAL FEDERATION. The Mustelites also entered resolutions calling for the above described 5-5-5 proposition. This was the real heart of the argument, and the resolution committee was still divided on it at the end of the second day. Meanwhile, another resolution submitted by an Oppositionist which read to the effect that if a unification conference was to be called, all unemployed organizations have representatives on the provisional committee, and not merely the U. C., U. L. and the Federation as proposed by the Mustelites, was tampered with and an insertion made which changed the entire meaning of the resolution. That night the real struggle broke out in the meeting of the presiding committee in which the writer represented the Illinois delegation. The representatives of the Unemployed Council and those of the Federation had been invited to make a statement to this committee. Amter spoke for the U. C. and after a good bit of hypocritical demagoguery finally broached the 5-5-5 proposition. He spoke with great warmth about unity and the necessity of federating the various unemployed organizations on a state-wide scale. But his remarks on the National Federation were rather ambiguous. He poured out his tale of woe of how the Unemployed Council which is the biggest organization nationally with a membership of 200,000 (he didn't think when he said that) only has a measly two representatives on the national committee of the Federation, and generally characterized the Federation in very unflattering terms. Asked bluntly by the writer whether he, on behalf of the U. C., was proposing that the National Unemployed Leagues affiliate to the Federation or not, Amter evaded the question. Later, however, one of Amter's satellites, a certain notorious Frankfield, blurted out that affiliation to the Federation was unnecessary.

True to their compact, the Stalinist and Mustelite members of the National Committee of the Federation had acted to prevent a unanimous statement from being brought in by the Federation. Tom Dixon and George Leech—chairman and secretary of the Federation did however state that the majority of the national committee urged this conference to go on record for affiliation. But the Stalinists even contested this statement. It must have been a perplexing problem indeed for the members of the presiding committee who were unaware of the gentlemen's agreement existing between the Stalinists and Mustelites, to see the representatives of the U. C. which organization was a member of the Federation and has two members on the national committee, nevertheless appear and argue violently against affiliation to this same Federation.

A bitter struggle followed the dismissal of the representatives of

OHIO JOBLESS UNITED

Youngstown, Ohio.—Twenty-seven delegates from 13 unemployed organizations (4 Leagues and 9 Councils) met in Youngstown on July 23 and formed the Federation of Unemployed Organizations of Mahoning and Trumbull Counties. The present basis of representation is one delegate from each unit or organization, but it is likely that after other organizations have been brought into the Federation that the representation will be on a proportional basis.

J. S. Neff was elected chairman of the Federation. C. Walker—Vice Chairman, Henry Mack—Secretary, and Harold Newby—Treasurer. The Federation Committee, which includes 13 members now and will be enlarged as other organizations affiliate, was instructed to work out a constitution for the Federation in complete harmony with the policy and structure of the Federation of Unemployed Workers Leagues of America at Chicago. It was also instructed to work out a program for the Federation which will include the following points proposed at the conference: Immediate relief and employment insurance at the expense of the bosses and their government, the 6-hour day and 5-day work week with an increase in pay, an increase in wages and relief to meet the increase in prices, against forced labor, the money for unemployed relief and insurance to be raised by taxing incomes in higher brackets, against evictions and foreclosures. The Committee will probably find it necessary to recommend from time to time that other points be included in the program.

The first work of the Federation will be the participation of its various organizations in centralized August First demonstrations under the leadership of the Federation Committee and with unemployed slogans and demands. The second task is the immediate preparation for a strike against forced labor in the two counties. The Columbus Convention passed a resolution to go on strike August First but the National Committee of the National Unemployed League, according to one of its members Mrs. Mettee, has wisely postponed this action until the necessary preparation has been made. The Mahoning and Trumbull Federation will prepare put forward this point and drawn attention to the fact that no Soviet delegation was included in the Congress and that no statement had been issued to the Congress by the C. P. U. S. Despite the fact that several delegates went from Glasgow no public report has been given; needless to say the delegation was composed of paid party officials.

Nevertheless, we will yet tear down this barrier of reaction and hypocrisy with the hope that once more the L. O. will take its rightful place in the party and that the Comintern, inspired by new blood, will again be used as a guiding force towards world revolution.

Both organizations. The fight centered between the two Left Oppositionists who introduced a motion for affiliation and Muste who presented a counter motion for the committee of 15. The small hours of the morning came and found the committee divided over this question. The meeting finally adjourned to reconvene next morning and hear another statement from the Federation.

In the meeting of the national committee of the Federation which went into session after being dismissed by the presidium, the Stalinist-Muste combination again blocked off the possibility of a unanimous statement for affiliation. When the presidium convened the next morning Dixon again had to report on a division of opinion within the national committee. At this point Dennis Batt, a notorious renegade from Communism—a deserter to the Republican party, came to Muste's rescue by moving that the presiding committee shall not urge the convention to instruct the incoming National Committee on any certain policy of unification but that the entire matter be left to the discretion of the National Committee. After some wrangling the motion was passed by a vote of 20-5 and Muste's face lit up in a triumphant smile.

Since the strategy of the Mustelites was such, they naturally were very much interested in hearing no report from the resolution committee. A report on policy would certainly be embarrassing since that would bring the disputed question to the convention floor.

Accordingly, the chairman reported on the proceedings of the presidium and put Dennis Batt's motion to a vote. Were the convention to endorse that motion it meant that it would automatically invalidate any resolution that might be reported on later. The delegates of the Workers League and the Oppositionists put up a bitter fight against such procedure, and for affiliation. But just as the struggle grew the hottest, the Stalinists stepped in and in true Judas fashion saved the situation for Muste by playing on the backwardness of the delegates and urging them to vote against affiliation and for the motion. Reaction prevailed—the motion carried.

The final report of the majority of the members of the resolutions committee, which had somehow gotten together, recommended affiliation. But this was quickly steam-rollered out of order and the

for this strike by means of Federation mass meetings and demonstrations throughout the two counties.

It was announced at the conference that a Federation had also been formed in the Lucas County (Toledo) District, and that the Councils and Leagues in that area were cooperating very effectively at the present time in a strike against forced labor. It will be necessary in the near future, when various sections of the state begin to take similar action, that a State Federation be formed in order to direct this work properly. The fact that these local federations have invariably affiliated with the Federation of Unemployed Workers Leagues of America will help enormously to strengthen the National Federation which is the real basis for complete future amalgamation of all unemployed movements.

At the meeting of the Call Committee when the agenda for the Federation met was drawn up not one single word was mentioned regarding the Workers' Unemployment Insurance Bill but the demand that has been the central point in the local united front appeals was reinforced for the agenda—Immediate Relief and Unemployment Insurance at the expense of the Bosses and Their Government. Nevertheless, Mack, who was entrusted with job of working out agenda details, inserted under immediate action" the endorsement of the insurance BILL without consulting other members of the Call Committee. When this point came up, Newby pointed out that there was a great danger that centering the fight for Unemployment Insurance around this Bill would guide the movement into futile parliamentary channels; that details such as the $10 maximum relief might be used against the workers in the future and that such details should not be decided upon until the workers are strong enough to force such a measure through so that such details can be worked out to meet the needs of that time with real inflation, etc.; and that the provisions of the Bill providing for "the average wages in the respective industries and territories" was not something radical workers should fight for, that it was had enough to have class divisions based on wage differences which the bosses make, and that the workers should demand the same adequate relief for each adult and dependent regardless of whether he is a laborer, semi-skilled, skilled, office or professional worker. Mack put forth some explanations but a motion to refer the Bill to the Federation Committee for consideration was passed without objection.

rest of the day spent in making bombastic nomination speeches for the various members of the National Committee.

Here it is necessary to say a word about the conduct of the Lovestonites at this conference. Their role was truly characteristic of an opportunist group. The fact that two Lovestonites are members of the national committee of the Federation did not prevent them from drawing up a document called "Draft Program for National Federation of Unemployed organizations." From all indications the Lovestonites are also dissatisfied with having only two members on the National Committee of the Federation, and came to this conference ready to build a new federation. The only difference between them and the Stalinists lay in the fact that the former openly spoke against the existing National Federation on the convention floor and the Lovestonites did so in personal conversation only. Not once during the Conference did a Lovestonite take the floor and speak for affiliation.

At this time when the Roosevelt government is introducing elements of state capitalism with all its terrible consequences for the working class, at this time when a clear line of action must be worked out to enable the American proletariat to fight back, the blind empirical Stalinists can only think one thought—how to capture mechanical control of the unemployed organizations. This in the name of Unity. Yes the Stalinists are for unity—providing they have a stranglehold on the given organization. Let but a voice of dissent challenge their rule, and they will not hesitate to split that organization into smithereens.

The Left Opposition must learn from these experiences. We must seek to entrench ourselves in the unemployed organization. We must strive to raise the unemployed movement from its present level of "soup consciousness" to the level of class consciousness. We need have no fear of working as a small minority. Armed with the weapons of Marxism we shall in due time win the majority just as surely as did the Russian Bolsheviks who had for years constituted a minority.

Between Stalinism and Communism there can be no peace. The advances of Communism can only result out of the defeat of Stalinism. To this end let us bend our efforts.

L.O. Members in Eviction Protest

The New York branch held its regular Brownsville open air meeting last Friday with several hundred workers attending. George Ray acted as chairman, the speakers were Bill Matthews on Roosevelt's New Deal and Joe Carter on the lessons of the German events for the American working class. On previous occasions the Communist party members attempted to break up the meeting either by demanding the platform or starting a revival meeting across the street.

After a number of question from the audience, a Duesch, the party fellow who beat up one of our comrades the week before, asked the speaker to adjourn the meeting and call on the crowd to help the Unemployed Council stop the eviction of a jobless Negro worker, Bryan, several blocks away. The speaker replied by stating that such a request had been used on previous occasions to disrupt open air meetings but that we would have two more questions and then go as a group to cooperate with the Unemployed Council. The two questions were asked and answered. One of the party members "demanded" the platform to reply to the speaker. His demand was met with a reiteration of a call for a debate between the Left Opposition and the Communist party. The party members were advised to discuss with us not with their fists—this remark was particularly aimed at Duesch—but by arguments. The meeting then adjourned and the entire audience proceeded to the home of the evicted Negro worker.

The Unemployed Council opened a meeting in front of the house. We volunteered speakers but were told that the secretary of the Unemployed Council would have to consent—he was not to be found. Soon the emergency police squad yanked the speaker from the platform and waded into the crowd with clubs. A number of workers were hurt and had to receive medical treatment. Among those hurt were two members of the Spartacus Youth Club, Herman Gladstone, and Sam Shabel.

The branch will hold another open-air meeting at Bristol and Pitkin next Friday evening.

JULY ISSUE OF YOUNG SPARTACUS READY

The July issue of Young Spartacus is ready for sale and distribution. It contains articles on the American revolution of 1776, reconstruction, anti-war day, August 1st, National Industrial Recovery Act, antiwar youth congress, youth strikes and activities of the Spartacus Youth Clubs.

Branches of the Communist League and individuals who have been receiving bundles of Y. S. will have to pay for them at three cents a copy or communicate with us as to what they do with the bundles. Those branches who do not respond will be cut from the list beginning with the August number.

Moissaye Olgin as a «Historian»

"Lenin lives in an imaginary world in which he mistakes the creations of his mind for realities."

"It would seem that Lenin's 'radicalism' only blocks the road of the Russian Revolution by calling forth a reaction by adding to the disorganization of a country shaken to its foundations. Here, as ever, Lenin's tactics, seemingly extreme, are in reality weakening the strength of democratic Russia."

The Menshevik who penned the above lines (in Asia—Dec. 1917) is none other than the present Stalinist knight in the struggle against "Trotskyism", Moissaye Olgin.

His latest miserable attempt to carry out the teachings and dictates of Stalin takes the shape of a review of the collection of Lenin's writings from the July Days 1917 to the October revolution recently put out in two volumes, "Towards the Seizure of Power", by International Publishers in the theoretical organ of the American Communist Party, the Communist (May and June 1933). The occasion is utilized for an attack on the views of the Left Opposition and comrade Trotsky's "History of the Russian Revolution".

In typical Stalinist fashion Olgin confuses the relation between the democratic and the socialist revolution and the theory of the permanent revolution.

To appear objective, Olgin quotes a lengthy—and we may add, representative—section from Trotsky's "History" and comments: "Every sentence of this declaration is just the opposite of historical truth and only reveals Trotsky as what he is—a falsifier of history." No less! Let us quote the section.

"From the year 1905 the Bolshevik party had waged a struggle against the authority under the slogan 'Democratic Dictatorship of the Proletariat and Peasantry'."

This slogan as well as its theoretician, Plekhanov, stubbornly opposed the 'mistaken idea of the possibility of accomplishing a bourgeois revolution without the bourgeoisie.' Lenin considered that the Russian bourgeoisie was already incapable of leading its own revolution. Only the proletariat and peasantry in close union could carry through a democratic revolution against the monarchy and the landlords. The victory of this union, according to Lenin, should inaugurate the democratic dictatorship, which was not only not identical with the dictatorship of the proletariat, but was in sharp contrast with it, for its problem was not the creation of a socialist society, nor even the creation of forms of transition to such a society, but merely a ruthless cleansing of the Augean stables of medievalism. The goal of the revolutionary struggle was fully described in three militant slogans: Democratic Republic, Confiscation of the Landed Estates, Eight-Hour Working Day—collectively called the three whistles of Bolshevism."

Leon Trotsky—History of the Russian Revolution, Vol. 1, page 314.

"Every sentence" a historical untruth? Olgin raised the question of Lenin's view of the hegemony of the proletariat in the bourgeois democratic revolution in order to prove that the latter saw in this the transition of the democratic into the Socialist revolution. He quotes a number of writings from Lenin to prove this contention. But the basic questions still remain: Is it true that Lenin before 1917 considered the "democratic dictatorship of the proletariat and peasantry" as the culmination of the bourgeois democratic revolution?

Did he understand—as Trotsky in his theory of the permanent revolution did—that the solution of the democratic tasks would be solved by the proletarian revolution, through the institution of a proletarian dictatorship? And lastly—how did he itself solve this dispute—in the form of the "democratic dictatorship" or the "proletarian dictatorship"?

Olgin in his polemic against Trotsky quotes Lenin's "Two Tactics of Social Democracy in a Democratic Revolution" written in 1905 to prove his contentions. But it is precisely this source that the same Olgin used to prove the exact opposite in 1917. We read:

"In his Two Tactics he (Lenin) said, 'The stage of Russia's economic development (forming an objective condition) and the stage of consciousness and progress of organization among the masses of the proletariat (forming a subjective condition) intrinsically connected with the objective) makes an immediate complete emancipation of the working class (introduction of socialism) impossible.' Even Lenin would have to admit that both objective and subjective conditions have not changed substantially since 1905. (Obvious Nonsense—J. C.). Yet here he is, preaching the establishment of socialism in a backward impoverished Russia." (Asia—Dec. 1917—page 788.)

The quotation from Lenin proves the converse of what Olgin now attempts! We may add that his comment is not above level of his present writings!

When a group of Red Professors edited a "History of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union" under the guidance of the Trotsky killer, Yaroslavsky several years later recorded Lenin's change of strategic line between 1905 and 1917 only to bring on their heads the charges of "Trotskyism"! Yaroslavsky was forced to indulge in "self criticism". This "Leninist" now formulates the question in a new way: "The completion of the bourgeois democratic revolution was a by-product of the socialist proletarian revolution of 1917." (Communist—Feb. 1932—his emphasis). This formulation is in direct contradiction to the official Stalinist position on the colonial question.

To get back to Olgin. Many years ago, this gentleman translated a number of Trotsky's writings from 1905 to 1917 particularly treating with the theory of the permanent revolution. In his preface to "Prospects of a Labor Dictatorship" in "Our Revolution" Olgin wrote: "Whatever our attitude towards the course of events in the 1917 revolution may be, (his are revealed in the quotations from Asia—J. C.) we must admit that in the main, this course has taken the direction predicted in Trotsky's essays. There is a labor dictatorship now in Russia. It is a labor dictatorship not a 'dictatorship of the proletariat and peasantry'.... All this had been outlined by Trotsky twelve years ago. When one reads this series of essays, one has the feeling that they were written not in the course of the first Russian upheaval (The essays appeared in 1906 as part of a book by Trotsky, entitled, Our Revolution, Petersburg, W. Glagolev, publisher) but as if they were discussing problems of the present situation. This more than anything else shows the continuity of the revolution.... Twelve years ago those essays seemed to picture an imaginary world. Today they seem to tell the history of the Russian revolution. We may agree or disagree with Trotsky, the leader, nobody can deny the power and clarity of his political vision." The present day fulminations against the theory of the permanent revolution cannot change the essential accuracy of the comments made above!

Olgin however does not reach his real heights until he treats the question of the origin of the November insurrection. Here the gentleman finds Trotsky once again guilty of falsifying history. He quotes Trotsky as saying that the idea of an insurrection took form from the moment the order was given for the removal of the troops from Petrograd and the Petrograd Soviet decided to organize a military revolutionary committee. The meeting Trotsky refers to was held on October 22. "The idea did not take form before, because it was not advanced by Trotsky. The father of the idea was, most naturally, Trotsky". With this attempt at sarcasm, Olgin continues to cite quotations from Lenin where the latter called for insurrection before October 22nd.

Is it possible that Trotsky was unaware of this or tried to hide it? Is it true that even Trotsky first conceived of insurrection on October 22nd? One need but turn to volume III of the "History" and find a complete chapter on Lenin's continual proposals for insurrection from July upward! Olgin read this chapter. But he assumes that the readers of the Communist have not and will not do so! Even Olgin can easily understand that what Trotsky means in the quoted paragraph is that the idea of insurrection first took form at that moment among the masses in the Soviet Union and Trotsky. Further that the idea was then concretized that the Soviet rather than the Bolshevik party directly or a new organ, would be the official instrument of the insurrection—a question not definitely decided up to then. Olgin's ing of the dictatorial government by the general strike of the masses and the installation of a social-democratic government which will be the product of the extra-parliamentary struggle. It is possible, with the aid of this struggle, to rally great masses discontented with the governmental policy in the struggle against the present government.

I know that there will be objection that a social democratic government will merely change the mannerism but the policy will remain the same. This is not exactly correct.

A social democratic government coming to power by the struggle of the masses against the bourgeoisie coalition would be obligated under the danger of complete discredit, to carry out a policy of defense of the interests of the workers.

As timid as this policy will be it will come into violent collision with the brutal reaction of the bourgeoisie.

The class antagonisms will only sharpen, the class struggle will develop and the workers will themselves become convinced by the political experience which has been lacking up till now in Belgium, of the necessity of the use of revolutionary struggle to fight back the attacks of reaction and Fascism.

Let those who are not in agreement with this slogan reflect a little before saying that we are playing the game of the socialist leaders. What the latter fear most is to be carried to power on the wave of the direct struggle of the masses.

—L. LESOIL.

Summing up, the agreement of June 1933 continues the agreement arrived at between the socialist leaders and the Democratic-Christian leaders in July 1932 during the general strike at Helmut. With this difference: in 1932 the agreement was consummated in order to strangle the general strike and to save the government which was shaken to its pins by this movement; in July 1933 it is consummated to prevent a national general strike which might upset the dictatorial government by the direct struggle of the masses. If the Communists and the more conscious socialist workers understand the depths of this "agreement", if the distrust towards the Democratic-Christian leaders, it is no less true that the perspective of a socialist Democratic-Christian opposition to the dictatorial government nourishes the hope in the discontented masses in the abrogation of the vicious hunger-decrees without having to resort to a general strike.

We should take into account the parliamentary illusions of the masses, not in order to let up on our propaganda for the general strike against the application of the hunger-decrees, but so as to feed the aspirations of the masses, in the sense of a direct struggle against the government, to upset this government of social reaction and preparation for Fascism. While it is necessary to appeal to, to mobilize, to convince the masses of the need of the general strike in defense of their daily bread, we must give this struggle a political objective in order to avoid the breaking of the movement of the masses as was the case in July 1932 by the leaders of the P. O. B. (Belgian Socialist Party) and the Democratic-Christians, who become opponents of struggle in face of the actions of the bourgeois government which made some concessions and promises to the workers in order to save itself.

The political objective which must be given to the struggle that is in preparation, is the overthrow of the dictatorial government by the general strike of the masses and the installation of a social-democratic government which will be the product of the extra-parliamentary struggle. For a Social Democratic Gov't in Belgium - Why?

Brussels, Belgium.—The general discontent of the toiling masses who have been severely hit by the application of the hunger decrees of the dictatorial government, the anger growing in the workers ranks and the desire they manifest for struggle, the fear of being taken by surprise, as they were in July 1932, by the series of strikes which could rapidly spread over the whole country has forced the socialist and Democratic-Christian leaders to perform a maneuver on the political and trade union field which is designed to prevent a direct and immediate struggle against the hunger government.

The pact consummated between the socialists and Democratic-Christians at Charleroi which commits them before the workers to struggle jointly against the dictatorial government, to call for the immediate convocation of parliament in order to revise the financial measures of the government in a "democratic way" is the beginning of this maneuver. Politically, this agreement means the following: "Patience, workers, do not strike in any case against the application of the hunger decrees, we are going to struggle in parliament for a democratic majority and thus to revoke the measures which effect you so severely."

Summing up, the agreement of June 1933 continues the agreement arrived at between the socialist leaders and the Democratic-Christian leaders in July 1932 during the general strike at Helmut. G. Zinoviev on the Party Regime purpose is not the review of history. It is rather that of discrediting and slandering the present day Marxists.

Finally Olgin disputes Trotsky's statement that the official Stalinist historians present the question of the voting of the Bolshevik Central Committee (on October 23) for insurrection as though the entire party leadership except Zinoviev and Kamenev stood for insurrection. The constant re-writings of the history of the Bolshevik party for the factional purposes of the Stalinists are notorious. Olgin however finds a quotation to serve his purpose. We assume that he picked the strongest available.

"The course on insurrection taken by Lenin, however, met with resistance on the part of some members of the Central Committee. In the first place on the part of Kamenev and Zinoviev. This reads a history of the Russian party by Bukharin, present Commissar of Education. Who are these others? Not a word. They are revealed when the individuals fall in the bad graces of the present ruling regime, as Kamenev and Zinoviev have on a number of occasions!"

For the Stalinist historians to literally confine the disputes (on insurrection and other questions) to Zinoviev and Kamenev alone would require the suppression of about nine-tenths of Lenin's writings between July and November 1917. This has been found impossible even by the expert Stalinist censors. So they resort to anonymity with regard to the other personalities.

The world revolutionary movement will have to purge itself of the falsifiers and revisionists of Marxism, the extensive staff of official "historians" and "theoreticians" exemplified by Moissaye Olgin.

Every Day Conditions in the Life of a Russian Worker

Moscow, U. S. S. R.—I take this opportunity to write you a detailed letter. Just recently I returned from a trip to Ukraine and observed a good deal there. In Moscow, that is, in a city more privileged and better supplied, one cannot see in the course of many months that which astonishes one within a few days in the provinces. In the province one is immediately seized with a feeling of uneasiness and uncertainty.

Kharkov has grown excessively—many new enterprises, housing constructions, etc., and at the same time, tens of thousands of people sit in the dark at night (they sat through the whole winter in this fashion in flats which were barely heated, or altogether unheated). Entire sections of the city are not supplied with electricity. The flats are dark, the cinemas and clubs are closed. And this lasts for long stretches of weeks. There is no kerosene, no candles, so that the darkness is unbroken. Only fortunate from among the bureaucracy have poor kerosene lamps. No kerosene—although the output of oil in Baku has been increased so electricity—although the Dneprostroy has been built.... This absence of light has an oppressive effect, especially in winter. And what happens to be the case in Kharkov is also the case in many other places. The electricity is shut off suddenly and unexpectedly, and there is none for weeks. And the people live in some semi-barbarous condition, not knowing what to do with themselves and how to kill time which is so precious. Generally the ferocious disproportions between production and consumption are simply crushing. Despite a large number of machines, people live not better, but worse. Gradually one is seized by terror under the realization of the fact that is being created—are nothing but a slave of some tremendous blind force, the machine, because, while under capitalism, the machine was transformed into a monstrously directed against people, under socialism it should serve as an aid to people; the more machines, the better should be the living conditions of the worker, but it is otherwise with us....

I was at the Dneprostroy also. Needless to repeat—a gradiose creation of human thought and power. It looks like a plaything, everything radiates cleanliness. But out of the four power aggregates, three are not operating because the plants they are to supply have not been built as yet. There is "planned" economy for you! And while at the electric plant there rules cleanliness and everywhere there is felt attentive care, it is otherwise with the workers. The papers carried a great deal to the effect that Dneprostroy from a tiny village would turn into a city with a population of 70,000; there was such description of clubs, and workers' dining rooms; and photographs were printed of new houses. Is that a lie? No, all this exists. Only there is no mention made that the tiniest part of the workers is housed in these new constructions and lives in unbearable, humane conditions. The rest live in barracks. Filth, semi-darkness, in winter cold; the food—bad. Faces are surly, one senses not only dissatisfaction but despair. It is impossible to exist long in this manner....

Enroute, everywhere, unbroken pictures of terrifying poverty. Everything recalls the period of civil war. Lice, against which Lenin once declared merciless war, are thriving again. For days at a stretch people sprawl in railroad stations; men, women, children, all together, lying side by side. They are pushed, chased from place to place. Nobody to give them information about the departing trains. They climb into the first train that comes and depart often in the wrong direction. They are put off, and they are left on the road without a train ticket and without money. There is interminable waiting in queues; first at the ticket window ("The sale of tickets has not yet begun"); later at the entrance to the station ("The passengers cannot get in as yet"). But one attempts to rush the trains. At the entrance stands a lone militia man. All wait in silence. Where are they going? Why? Somewhere potatoes and bread may be bought, somewhere there are new constructions, somewhere there is a factory authority for an extra year, that is, of doubling the authority received from the Congress. And all this—despite the fact that the atmosphere of a rigorous civil war made the convocation of congresses much more difficult than now.

Secondly, under Lenin, prior to the Congress all members of the party were given the possibility to print in the party press their suggestions, theses, platforms, pamphlets and books and to appear before any party meeting.

Thirdly, all this was done so that all members of the party might really participate in the discussion and so that the elections to the Congress would really express the will of the party. There was never, under Lenin, a case of ward conferences, which really decide everything, being called first, and the "discussion" starting only after the convocation of state conferences. Under Lenin such a procedure would be laughed at and rejected as a wretched and disgraceful comedy.

Fourthly, under Lenin, in the pre-Congress period the shifting of comrades, in disagreement with the line of the CC, from workers' centers to distant corners not only never took place (under Lenin, exile in general was not heard of), but on the contrary, precisely those comrades, or groups of comrades who had disagreements with the majority of the CC were accorded fullest guarantee, of remaining in the large centers so that they might come forward with their criticism of the line of the Central Committee in the pre-Congress days as well as to the Congress itself.

There is no such thing now. Just the opposite is being done. The CC itself has prolonged its authority while remaining perfectly within the law.

He prefers to see how well his labor lieutenants Green, Hillman, Dubinsky and Co. will be able to fasten their stranglehold on the working masses. The patriotic paraphernalia—"for working class consumption"—will come later. He can bide his time. Capitalism is experimenting and its perspective is a long one.

What the worker can expect from the blanket code is evident from what he received from the grandiose public works scheme. Roosevelt is the sponsor of both. From the public works—the conservation camps—the workers had several hundred thousands of their own employed; at the meagerly wage of $1 a day.

The blanket code promises minimums of $14 and $11. That is to be the law for employers and workers alike, says the president. What is to prevent the trusts, the syndicates and corporations to mobilize their armies of flunkies lawyers to circumvent the law, as Morgan did with the bank laws? Nothing. The bosses make the laws, they have the "right"—their means, their resources—to break them just as well.

A French wit once said: "The state forbids both rich and poor to steal bread; the state forbids both rich and poor to sleep under bridges." . . .

The state: Roosevelt—that is the bosses' state. Its laws are the laws and the codes of the employers. Workers' rights must be fought for. They are not granted, they must be snatched from the boss class. The same holds true for the blanket code and the whole Roosevelt rignarole.

Those labor fakery who speak of the Roosevelt administration as "above the classes", who speak of the fairness of the codes, are preparing the workers for further and greater oppression and misery. They must be exposed. Every step of their must be watched, mistrusted. Every proposal carefully examined. The working class counter-proposals, the proletarian counter-strategy to the Roosevelt offensive must be prepared.

The need of the moment is the concentration of all Left wing and genuine progressive forces in the American labor movement for the elaboration of such a policy. The official Communist party under Stalinist leaderships and the Muscovite Conference for Progressive Labor Action have called a conference on the National Industrial Recovery Act in Cleveland for August. Whether this conference will accomplish this laudable task is questionable and yet to be seen. What is needed to accomplish this task is a well worked out Communist program, one that is based on principle and confirmed by experience, one that will stand the test. Not the least factor in such a program is a correct international orientation. The Left Opposition will be on hand with such a program, it will work with all its might to unite a solid Left wing movement, to make it the driving force within all labor organizations, in the A. F. of L. and among the unemployed. —SAM GORDON.

How the Bosses Receive N.I.R.A.

hours, in fact, is treated in the codes as only another form of spreading the work, the "stagger" system introduced during the present crisis on an unprecedented scale. By spreading out the jobs over a greater number of workers, the bosses benefit not only by keeping many of them from the miserly unemployment benefits which they might get but also by establishing the habit of an unprecedentedly low scale of living based on one, two or three days' work a week.

But the greatest immediate benefit of all, which the capitalists will obtain from the act, is its effect in shoving the question of organization into the background, among the masses of underemployed workers. "Roosevelt and the Recovery Act will take care of wages and hours—why do we need to take out union cards?" is the crudest form of this reaction. Another form is the acceptance even of company unions, as well as of reformist trade union leadership, by hitherto unorganized workers as a great victory achieved without a struggle. This will tend to lead off into "safe" channels the discontent of the workers which would otherwise flow toward the strengthening of the Left wing in reformist unions or the organization of new militant class-struggle unions. Hundreds of thousands of new workers are coming into the AFL from basic industry especially. These workers new to organization unfamiliar with the traditions of reformist bureaucracy, will form a broad basis for the future growth of the Left wing.

The revolutionary leadership of the workers cannot remain content with letting the workers find out for themselves how hollow are the illusions with which they are being fed. They must take the initiative in showing the workers that they are getting nothing from the Industrial Recovery Act, that the first codes presented already clearly show the intention of the bosses to give them nothing and of the government to back up the bosses, that the reformist union leaders are simply harnessing the workers rank and file of the trade, led by the Left wing, demanded the reintegration of the Left wing union into the American Federation of Labor and for a united general strike under one banner. We believe that the militancy resulting from a victorious strike would inevitably lead to the growth of Left wing strength in the merged union, towards the reestablishment of the Left wing in the leading positions of influence and control which they held prior to 1929.

C. P. Versus the Union

"The upholsterers are going back to Local 76 (A. F. of L.). They are not going; they are running. They are not running; they are already there." This is the private opinion of the majority of the Party fraction in the Furniture Workers Industrial Union. The overwhelming response of the workers to the A. F. of L. strike call sustains that opinion. One party member after another, in a meeting with the representatives of the Trade Union Unity Council, Overgaard and Worris, thus declared that unless union was achieved with the A. F. of L. in the coming general strike, we would find ourselves six months from now without a rank and file.

Notwithstanding this overwhelming sentiment in the Party fraction, the T.U.U.C. representatives put their foot down heavily against any further unity negotiations with the A. F. of L. "betrayers of labor" and ordered that the Industrial Union be maintained at all costs. The false face of unity behind which the T.U.U.C. masqueraded was finally ripped aside at a meeting of five shops held Tuesday July 25th to discuss the question of unity between the two unions. The Stalinists refused to give the floor to the representatives of the Left wing group, this time on the pretext that they were not members of those particular shops called to attend that meeting.

Why was this meeting called? Was it because the Stalinists wanted to hear the opinion of the upholsterers as to whether we should unite with Local 76 or not? No. It was because the workers, tired of being fed on empty and worn-out phrases, began to say that, if the Industrial Union does not join 76 as a body, they themselves, as individuals, would join Local 76. When the organizer of the Industrial Union, it appears, came to the shops to collect a three dollar strike tax, the workers, who naively thought that they were in the midst of unity negotiations, turned on him suspiciously, and said: "Let us wait until the unity negotiations are over. Perhaps we will have one union, perhaps other arrangements will be made, etc." Frightened by the fact that the Industrial Union was losing the little influence it had up till now, the organizer asked them to come to a special shop meeting that night to discuss the question.

The sentiment of the workers at the beginning of the meeting was to go into 76 as a body. The Stalinists were frantic. Demagogic speeches rolled off their tongues that would have shamed Tammany politicians and rabid socialist. Remarks such as: "Are you going to desert us now?", "I was in jail 25 days for you!", "I shed blood for you!", "I was always on the picket line", etc., etc., filled the air. Left Wing "Defeated".

The terrified "leaders" again "defeated" the Left wing by denying them the floor, thus preventing an open comparison of policies which they knew could swing the bulk of the membership in favor of unity. By tying the rank and file with speeches and appeals, in which only the Stalinist point of view was expressed, they finally put through a vote to "strike under the banner of the Industrial Union" in the coming strike.

Do the party leaders think this is an endorsement of their policy of obstructing unity? It was nothing but a vote of sympathy and confidence in those individuals who made the appeals, but in no sense can it be construed as approval for the policy of the party in the furniture industry. Let them not deceive themselves about their following. The workers in the shops want unity today, in the heat of the strike, even more than before the strike was called. It must be stated here that the Stalinists, by the calling of the general strike, have already lost the golden opportunity to unite the two streams in the movement, the Left and the Right. They will stand convicted, in the eyes of the entire movement, of complicity if not collusion with the reactionary bureaucrats of the A. F. of L. in preventing the achievement of what lies nearest and dearest in the heart of every furniture worker in the industry: one strong union.

to the losses' wagon by their policy of class collaboration, and that the workers will get nothing unless they fight for it. This means the unifying and strengthening of the Left wing in the reformist unions, taking advantage of the new changes in the position of the AFL; as well as the organization of broad class struggle industrial unions in those industries characterized by great concentration of capital and wide use of unskilled labor, which the A. F. of L. has up to now been afraid to organize and is now entering, thanks to NIRA.

All Out on the Picket Line!

Every shop in the trade, large or small, join the strike. The Left wing calls upon you to support the general strike and the following demands:

1. The 30 hour—5 day week in place of the 44 hour week now prevailing.
2. Minimum scale of $140 per hour in place of the 60c average now prevailing.
3. Abolition of the Piece Work System.
4. Provisions in contract for higher wages when cost of living rises—the union to determine when and how much.
5. Protect allied trades by AMALGAMATING them into one strong industrial union.
6. No collaboration with the bosses under the National Recovery Act.
7. A militant general strike, and a class-struggle union, for better conditions in the trade.

For the Left wing group, mands of the workers. The Left wing however, must be criticized for not asking for a referendum vote on such an important matter as a settlement of a strike. The workers of the Association shops were out on strike for three and a half weeks.

Through the militant struggle of the workers, the bosses had to yield to some of the workers' demands. If the strike would have been led by a militant leadership, and not by the "Praternal Club" administration, the other clauses, the workers would have won all their just demands.

Now let us analyze the partial demands the workers gained from the employers.

- (1) 40 hour week beginning September 1st.
- (2) Reorganization — readjustments under which the workers suffered for the last two years—has been abolished in the new agreement.
- (3) Manufacturers will not be allowed to send work out to contracting shops or buy merchandise while their workers are not employed in their shops full time.

For these concessions, the "Praternal Club" administration gave up one of the important demands: the unemployment insurance fund. Although the unemployed workers got very little out of the fund because the S. P. fakery, Dr. Heidlin, with the "Club" boys missed the fund for themselves, nevertheless, the employers had to pay over $600,000 a year to the fund. This money was given back to the employers as a present for the demands they were forced to give to the workers. Another important demand our officers in the conference committee gave up was a scale of wages for general helpers, and packers.

The strike in the Association shops is over, the strike in the independent shops is going on with more vigor until the employers will be forced to grant the demands, and to sign an agreement with the Union. The workers who will go back to the shops in the next few days must remember and see to it that the agreement is carried out to a hundred percent. For this it is necessary to elect the proper Chairman and committee men in the shops. The workers cannot rely on the present administration to carry through that agreement for them in the shops. The workers must organize and stick together in the shops as a unit as they did in time of strike.

G. Zinoviev on the Party Regime

No one in the party believes or will believe that all these inadmissible, criminal anti-party methods are applied only by accident. Were this the case, they would not have been so systematic, they would not be extended and, above all, they would not remain unpunished. A whole system is involved and this system of preparing the Congress, that is, the system of not permitting any normal preparation for the Congress, has, in the conviction of all, its centre: the Secretariat of the C.C., that is, the real concentration point of the "management" of the party. In reality the Secretariat stands above the C.C. and tries beforehand to impose its will upon the Congress, that is upon the party. Precisely herein lies the essence of the anti-constitutional, anti-party mechanism which has already been set into full swing for the "preparation" of the Congress.

St. Louis Shaken by Strike Movement

cesses of not less than 20 percent. Mayor Dickman will undoubtedly do his damndest to settle the strike, in his customarily picturesque manner, of appointing an "arbitration" committee and then soap-boxing to the strikers, telling them to accept the offer like good little children and "sit in no more".

Several hundred workers have been striking at Jackson-Heins Mfg. Company for almost a month. They are demanding recognition of their union, the United Metal Stampers and Assemblers Union, in addition to wage increases. This strike has the support of the Socialist party and the Young People's Socialist League, who are now having a rebirth in St. Louis. So far the manufacturer's attempts to use strike-breakers has not succeeded in crushing the strike.

The Shoe Strike

The strike situation that is the most important at the present time is a "wild-cat" spontaneous rebellion of boot and shoe workers. St. Louis is a shoe town. The organized shoe workers have taken wage cut after wage cut (50-75%) since the beginning of the depression. The Boot and Shoe Union officials are such perfect agents of the bosses that they endorsed the wage cuts, every time. Indignant, the shoe workers would vote en-masse against accepting the cut and spontaneously walk out of the meeting. The union officials would then "over-rule" the voting and would call another meeting and another and still another until finally the rank and file rebellion would change to a sickening disgust. No leaders, no program, everything looked hopeless. So the shoe-workers throughout St. Louis periodically drew in their belts a little tighter, retaining the bosses' sugary words of "as soon as business picks up, you'll get back the same scale".

Inflation—increased production of shoes—and the over-worked, under-paid shoeworkers began to demand the former scale. The workers just had to get higher wages, the cost of living was rising terribly. The shoe companies accordingly offered wage increases—but not large enough to offset their previous reductions. This rousing of the bosses' promise was the match that made the shoe workers see fire.

A Rebellion in the Union

750 Milbus Shoe Company employees met last Monday (July 17th) to consider the wage increases. The union officials, Mc Morrow, International Boot and

Not only must the agreement be carried out but an increase in wages must be prepared for, to be given during the season, to each and every worker.

Another thing the pocketbook workers must remember, is that they must build a strong organization in and out of town. In order that the bosses do not get a chance to use the workers out of town to undermine the conditions of the workers in N. Y., it is necessary to launch an organization campaign in the city and out of town. This job requires a leadership that is determined and willing to sacrifice. One present administration has none of these qualifications. It is up to the Left wing to start an educational and agitational campaign among the workers and to prepare the ground for onsting the "Praternal Club" administration. Otherwise the present agreement will remain a scrap of paper. The "Praternal Club" administration did not carry through 10 percent of last year's agreement. What assurances do we have that they will carry through the present agreement?

—N. D. F.

Shoe representative, and Phillips, business agent, urged acceptance of the company's "liberal" offer. The workers militantly denounced both the company and the union officials. They demanded, and insisted they were going to get, 33 1-3 percent increase on grade B shoes, 12 1-2 percent increase on fancy shoes, a forty hour work, and no overtime. The chairman fingered the speaker: "You strike and you get fired $25.00." The workers assented the chairman, walked out of the union hall, and went out on strike. They rented a separate hall and announced their intentions of striking for their demands till hell froze over.

McMorrow, the union representative, immediately telegraphed the National Industrial Recovery Administration that the union officials regarded the strike as a "violation of the arbitration agreement and against the spirit of Roosevelt's administration recovery plans."

While this was happening, 1000 shoe workers employed at Wolfe-Tober Shoe Mfg. Co. voted down the offer of a 10 percent wage increase and came forward with their own demands: 20 percent increase on B shoes, 12 1-2 percent increase on fancy, 40 hour week, no overtime. The shoe workers ran the union fakers out of the hall and conducted their own meeting. They decided to strike with the Milbus workers. Wolfe, the owner of the shoe company, however immediately got in touch with them and asked them to give him a week to reconsider. The shoe-workers decided to wait the seven days.

The week ends July 24th, when the Wolfe employees are holding a "secret" meeting to consider their action. The indications are that Wolfe will accede to their demands without a strike struggle. The Milbus strikers have, in the meantime, gained everyone of their demands, over the heads of the Boot and Shoe labor fakery.

Now Brian Bros. workers are considering "wild-catting" for their demands. The re-statement against the Boot and Shoe Workers' Union officials is so great that both Milbus and Wolfe-Tober shoe workers, en-masse, all agree to rent a separate hall for the purpose of holding "committee" meetings, separate from the Boot and Shoe. What will happen within the next few weeks is hard to foretell. —RALPH MARTIN

Mirror Workers Strike

one time tried to affiliate it with the Metal Workers Industrial Union, for one reason or another nothing came of this attempt.

The young workers of this trade, driven to desperation by the continuous slashing of their wages, the intolerably long hours, the filthy sweat shops without any of the improvements gained by workers in other trades, decided to take matters in their own hands.

A number of workers more energetic than the rest (notably among them Charles Aloia, aided by anyone) distributed a circular calling upon the workers of this trade to attend a meeting. The circular met with an unusually enthusiastic response. The meeting was attended by a majority of the workers in the trade. After some preliminary remarks by the author of the circular a strike was immediately decided upon. A list of demands was drawn up listing among other things, an 8 hour day—five day work week, a raise in wages and piece work rates. At the same time the union began to crystallize and take shape finally, evolving into the Novelty Mirror Workers Union.

As can be seen by the account thus far, the whole thing was done hastily, in the most haphazard fashion, unaided by any experienced trade unionists. Consequently a number of mistakes were made, namely, the demand for piece work and the failure to consider the workers in the other crafts in the same trade.

A member of the Left Opposition in the trade (whose craft was not considered) met with the strikers several times (after the strike was declared) and pointed out the absurdity of such a step—piece work—and that unless the union was organized on an industrial basis the chances of winning the strike would be greatly lessened. However the list of demands had already been handed in to the various bosses. Encouraging replies were returned which partially raised the price of mirrors although not the price of the mirrors themselves. The demands had evidently fired them with so much enthusiasm that it was impossible to sway them from their original plans.

However it was determined to organize and call out the whole industry in the event that the bosses remained adamant in their stand. The workers overwhelmingly voted to continue striking and immediately a strike committee was elected and picketing ordered in front of all shops.

Simultaneously with the organization of the union the bosses had quickly gotten together and formed an association. Negotiations went on directly with the association. To date a number of shops have already signed up, though no final settlements have been arrived at. All shops must be signed up before the workers will return to work. With all the inexperience and errors made at the start, it is reasonable to believe that the battle will not have been in vain.

On Some Misconceptions of Fascism and State Capitalism

In addition to the Stalinist practice of tagging everything and everybody not a member of the official Communist party (or close sympathizer) with the contradictory label of social-Fascist and Scott Nearing's amusing view of Fascism as a movement based on a retreat from the technological mass production economy of today to the village economy of the past, a new conception of Fascism has come into being. This conception has for its basic premise the belief that "State Capitalism" is a distinguishing characteristic of Fascist dictatorship. It sees in the growth of state control over industry and state monopolies a move toward Fascism when in reality such a process is a part of the evolutionary tendency of capitalism and has been developing for a good many years.

Increasing state capitalism is not a characteristic peculiar to Fascism but is a phenomenon present during the state of economic and political development which makes the rise of Fascism historically possible. It is an instrument of imperialism, being an advanced form of the mechanism by which competition between capitalist countries is carried on—a sort of a growing integration of the economic activity of a national or international unit as a whole.

By means of concentration and centralization, the credit system, issue of securities, financial pressure, directorships, ownership of stock, etc., a handful of finance capitalists have organized the economic life of the various nations into virtual monopolies. The parts of this system are ever in the process of drawing closer together, due to a certain interrelation of interests, thereby exhibiting a tendency to transform the entire economic activity of each of the leading countries into a single national enterprise under the control of the state which acts as an "executive committee of the ruling classes" regulating prices, production, distribution, etc. At the same time there is occurring the formation of actual state monopolies financed by large banks, as well as monopolies jointly controlled by the state and private trusts.

Between 1914 and 1919, under pressure of the demands of the world war, the move toward state capitalism went forward at a rapid pace. In Germany, for instance, in addition to state control of private enterprises and jointly controlled, "mixed" enterprises, state monopolies for the production of bread, potatoes, nitrates, etc. were formed. The financial system was centralized under control of the Reichsbank. In short, the entire economic life of the nation was consolidated, temporarily into a single unit, the same process being discarded in other belligerent nations and, to a lesser degree, in some of the non-belligerent ones.

Since then, although state capitalism subsided for a time, its growth has reached a point where emphasis must be placed upon the competition and antagonisms occurring between nations as national units rather than upon those occurring within the territorial confines of the various capitalist powers.

State control of industry or state capitalism, during the present period of capitalist decay, with its narrowing markets, is the mechanism by which individual national economies or countries are preparing to attempt to wrest from other national economies a larger share of the existing trade and world control. It is the mechanism by which the living standards of the workers will be driven further downward.

Nor is its development confined to Europe. On the contrary state capitalism is almost as evident in "democratic" United States as it is in Fascist Germany and to view the process as a move toward Fascist dictatorship is to create confusion.

The fundamental role of Fascism is not to form a so-called "corporatist state" but to prevent the workers from moving toward social revolution. Fascism will gain strength precisely at the moment when the workers begin to threaten—when the revolutionary movement begins to assume menacing proportions—and once it comes to power it will seek to destroy not only the vanguard but also all working class organizations and to sweep out of existence all elements of working class democracy.

To believe that it will "convert big business into an adjunct of the state", as is claimed in an article in the July issue of the Modern Monthly, is to reveal a failure to understand its real character. To see in the growth of state control a move toward Fascism is to create the illusion that the present administration of the United States is Fascist and tends to resurrect the theory of social-Fascism in another form.

In reality, Fascism is an instrument created and maintained by the big bourgeoisie to protect themselves against the march of the workers. As comrade Trotsky pointed out in What Next?:

"After Fascism is victorious, finance capital gathers into its hands, as in a vise of steel, directly and immediately, all the organs and institutions of sovereignty, the executive, administrative and educational powers of the state: The entire state apparatus together with the army, the municipalities, the universities, the schools, the press, the trade unions, and the cooperatives. When a state turns Fascist, it doesn't only mean that the forms and methods of government are changed in accordance with the pattern set by Mussolini—the changes in this sphere ultimately play a minor role—but it means, first of all for the most part, that the workers organizations are annihilated; that the proletariat is reduced to an amorphous state; and that a system of administration is created which penetrates deeply into the masses and which serves to fasten the independent crystallization of the proletariat. Therein precisely is the gist of Fascism."

better supplied. In any case everything revolves about a piece of daily bread. Because of it people submit to the monstrous sufferings of these journeys. "Leaders" and bureaucrats call them contemptuously "fly-by-nights", "kulaks", "speculators" sometimes simply "peasants" which should signify that their hunger is not real because they are not as yet real proletarians, but instead these people should be... fed... These "speculators"—are speculating only to get a piece of bread. These "fly-by-nights" fly from one factory to the next for the same piece of bread.

You know to what extent thievery has grown. The theft of collective property, even if it is potatoes or bread, is a capital crime. It has been completely forgotten that thievery is the product of conditions and not of evil character. Instead of destroying the causes and instead of education we have brutal laws. We are going backwards... All are tired, filled with despair. Only a small part of those who are absolutely well fed still believes in the leadership. The leadership demands courage and optimism. "We have not only lived through worse difficulties, but conquered! That is the ultimate wisdom of a bureaucracy that is entirely confused. But why pick on them, they are enmeshed in their own chains. One can say with assurance that out of ten party members eight are eaten with doubts. In private conversation they relate that in the nuclei and in the conferences all the decisions are accepted unanimously. Why? What's the use? If I rot in Siberia, I won't help matters any by it."

I have heard that Blumont had no group whatever, it was simply a case of four people a little intoxicated, sighing how good it would be if Stalin were removed. Outside of this insipid sigh there was nothing at all.

Wholesale arrests among those who had left the Opposition (in Moscow alone more than 150 were arrested and exiled) were explained as a prophylactic measure. Although many of the capitalists were passive, no confidence was had in them. Stalin evidently considers that it is necessary to exile a man before he succeeds to begin thinking. Better exile a thousand than leave a single oppositionist. That same goal was aimed at by the passivization; the fear was lest any oppositionist be left in factories who are capable of leading the movement, which could easily start up, on account of the general situation. Prophylaxis. And now the chinks have begun, they are getting scared more and more.

The wife of one of those arrested said to the prosecutor, "Why did you arrest him? He has completely lost his mind, he is absorbed in his work, etc., etc." But the prosecutor demanded of her that she divorce her husband.

They say that in the Soviet Union there is no inequality, that the highest "leaders" receive so much and so much. In my opinion there is no more distinct form of inequality than the inequality between the one who is simply well fed and the one who is simply hungry. Our bureaucracy is well fed, clothed, and lives in heated and well-lit apartments. But millions of workers live in barracks, in simply bestial conditions, and this has been going on for years on end. To the worker's need, to his complaint of hunger, and to this complaint of hunger, and to this dissatisfaction, the bureaucracy replies that this is no class-conscious worker, but the peasant of yesterday.

Not long before Hitler's assumption of power I happened to be present during the following conversation (in a train). A bureaucrat was talking about the approaching German revolution and the hard lot of the German unemployed. The first part was listened to with distrust, but the second part was rapidly interrupted: That's a lie. Why, then, do the German workers run away from us, one female worker said bitterly. Ironic remarks flew from all sides. The orator tried to defend himself, "It's all lies, there is nothing worse than the Soviet rule; our kids always throw it up to us that we chose such a government ourselves", the same woman retorted with extreme sharpness. Of course, that is only an isolated incident but it shows that in the backward layers of the proletariat the dissatisfaction at times goes a long way.

Foreign Developments

After the Collapse of the London Confab

The London Economic Conference, which opened less than two months ago to the accompaniment of a tremendous blast of publicity, hopes, promises and fears, has slipped quietly to an early grave. International cooperation among the competitive national organizations of monopoly capitalism has once again proved to be a utopian illusion, under which bankrupt democracy and aggressive imperialism can conceal their nakedness.

The keynote of the conference was the antagonism between American and British imperialism. France utilized the conference as a mobilization ground for its political and financial allies. Germany, which was in the position of merely asking for concessions without even the bluff of having anything to offer, was completely shoved into the background.

With the illusory hopes of common action thus shattered, national policies must again pull in different directions in accordance with the special situations and needs of monopoly capitalism in the different countries. All the major problems have been left unsolved—increasing production, dealing with unemployment, markets, currency stability. The efforts to solve them by reestablishing the unity of the world market having failed, the immediate next steps will undoubtedly further increase the dislocations and contradictions of the various sections of the world market, and the political expression of these contradictions in preparation for war.

Economic Trends in U. S.

The general background against which these efforts are taking place is one of mild improvement in the crisis on its way into depression, although nowhere is the improvement taking place at such hysterical speed as in the United States. The upturn here would have had to take on a violent character at some point, if only because of the extremely low points which had been reached on the downward swing of the crisis. A further stimulating factor was the zig-zagging character of the course toward inflation, which allowed both wild speculative upsurges and also severe speculative setbacks, depending upon the manner in which day-to-day events allowed the government's policy to be interpreted. Twice during the past two months the president had to intervene in a falling speculative market with the assurance that he had not given up the idea of inflation.

On this policy, of course, America was unable to swing Europe behind it; the post-war experience of most European countries was recent enough to remind them what a drastic surgical operation it constitutes. With all the more enthusiasm, then, repulsed on the field of international agreement, the Roosevelt government jumped into the activities of the National Recovery Administration, centralizing and coordinating American capitalism on its national territory before the next decisive leap at foreign markets.

The British policy has been one of aggressive competition for foreign trade on the basis of stabilized currency and slow, definite increases in price levels, production and financial basis in gold reserve and note circulation. The unexpected coup of the Argentine trade agreement, the removal of the embargo on Soviet trade, the steady increases in tariffs, all point in this direction. The repatriation of British money held abroad, and to some extent an influx of foreign short-term credits, have broadened the financial basis of these operations and have reflected the willingness of large sections of European capital to support England in the duel with America.

France and the Crisis

In France, the situation is complicated by the fact that the work of liquidation and deflation, accomplished by the crisis in most advanced countries, has not been fully achieved owing to a variety of causes: the delay of monetary aid, the prompt adoption of governmental measures to shut off France from the world crisis by trade restrictions and the maintenance of domestic markets, the special favors given to certain industries whereby they suffered less from the crisis but the government was burdened more, etc. The appearance of relative immunity from the crisis brought in large amounts of foreign capital for short-term investment in France during 1931 and 1932, thus still further adding to its apparent strength, but in reality contributing a potential element of great weakness. In international capital loses its confidence in the financial stability of France, the French financial situation will prove to be very vulnerable. In the meantime, the price level within France remains high, while wage-costs in general have not gone as deep as in the United States or Germany. This however puts increasing pressure on French capitalism, which will inevitably attempt to force its burdens on to the French proletariat and the petty-bourgeoisie. The budget has become unbalanced to a frightening degree.

Hitler Executes Four Altona Communists

The Nazi beast has struck again. This time he has brought down four heroic workers who took part in the defense of the working-class quarter of Altona, near Hamburg, when the brown shirts invaded them in a provocative parade last year. The Hamburg workers, steeling in the traditions of the fights of 1919 and 1921, bitterly resented the invasion and drove the uniformed gangsters out.

The authors of the Nazi massacre were at that time condemned to death the better to feed the then democratic illusions of the masses and conceal the preparations for Fascism that were going on throughout the apparatus of the German government. Now the hypocritical mask of democratic measures can be cast aside. The Nazi terrorists have been freed, pardoned and treated as heroes. The Communist workers who acted in self-defense have been beheaded. The last words of one of the four beheaded comrades were: "The death penalty is the largest honor for a revolutionary."

The congress of the S. P. I. O. (French Socialist Party) concluded after giving the Left wing an absolute majority (2,197 votes) over the Centrists (981 votes) and the Right wing (753 votes) and also over the 104 votes received for the resolution of the Socialist Action.

1. The congress was opened with a speech by Vandervelde, president of the Labor and Socialist International who begged the delegates not to disrupt the unity of their organization. The ex-minister of the Belgian king epitomized the confusion reigning in the leading circles of the 2nd International. This organization suffered a terrible blow by the victory of Fascism in Germany. All the organizations, in which the reformist leaders placed so much trust, collapsed without resistance like houses of cards. It is worthless to hope that the Vanderveldes and the Adlers will condemn their own policies; after having dispensed with several German social democrats who vainly tried to lick Hitler's boots, they recommended the Comintern to their organizations: Have the determination to remain united. But events are stronger than Vandervelde's tirades.

2. Split, more than ever before, is first on the order of the day. From the time of the black-white motions up till the declaration of war by the Right wing after the vote of censure hardly a month has passed. The Right wing not only exposed the conflict between the socialist and international party masses but also before "republican and socialist public opinion of this country." In other words, the unity of the Socialist party retains only a formal aspect; each tendency is opening the battle for influence over the masses of the country. Under these circumstances, the maneuvers of each of the tendencies to shift responsibility for the split are relatively secondary.

3. The Left wing won out in the voting; but the political advantage of the congress was inconceivably gained by the Right wing. And it is no wonder. Only the Right wing was decisive. The Left wing, on the contrary, in the process of evolution, was split into numerous tendencies and groupings. Also, the Right wing stated its program clearly and frankly at the Congress. It did nothing, it spoke to the whole country. We are not politicians they said, but statesmen. We are ready to give France an authoritative government which will assure internal order and the security of the frontiers. The fact that that pronouncement was not made in the old traditional verbiage caused a stir of "surprise" in Blum's camp. In order to retain their majority, the leaders of the Left wing avoided all votes on the USSR Accorded Recognition by Spanish Gov't.

Recognition of the U.S.S.R., by Spain as cabled to the New York Times is hailed by the Izvestia as a step taken when "the victory of socialism in the Soviet Union had been decided finally and without argument." "The extension of the international connections of the U. S. S. R. is direct evidence of the force of socialism. Capitalist governments are forced to reckon with the U. S. S. R. as a factor with which for their own interest it is better to live at peace."

To speak of the "victory of socialism" as "decided finally," and "it is better," for the capitalist, "to live at peace," with the Soviet Union is to confuse the real state of affairs and the danger of an imperialist attack upon the Soviet Union. Recognition does not flow from the capitalist desire "to live at peace" with the Soviet Union, not because of the "victory of socialism". The opposite is true.

The pressure of world conditions in the decay stage of capitalism and the quest for profits forces capitalist nations to trade with anyone, even with the Soviet Union. The Izvestia does not fool the capitalists with this kind of phrases. This helps disarm the workers to dangers to their own class and helps the capitalists cover up their war plans. The victory of Fascism in Germany and the victory of Japan in the East against China and the Soviet Union places the Soviet Union in the most dangerous position it has been in since the days of open intervention and civil war.

The realignment of imperialist forces since Hitler took power forces the Soviet Union to make amends with Poland, France, etc. and now Spain. To cloak these forced concessions as victories to prepare the way for greater mistakes and concessions.

Japan Provokes the Soviets Criminal Stalinist Policies Weaken Soviet Resistance

Shanghai.—There is a lull in military activities in North China following upon the conclusion of the Tangku truce which leaves Japan in virtual occupation of a huge "demilitarized zone" flanking the Great Wall. Japanese imperialism is now drawing back preparatory to a fresh leap forward, and it is commonly believed that their next objective is Outer Mongolia, possession of which would add to their strategic advantages in the event of war with the Soviet Union.

Out here, the view is widely held that the Soviet position vis-a-vis Japan and the entire imperialism world has been greatly weakened as a result of the capitulationist policy pursued by Moscow, notably in regard to the agreement to sell the Chinese Eastern Railway. The first shaken menacingly in the face of imperialism by Voroshilov is no longer taken seriously, since these gestures are not borne out in practice. "Not an inch of our territory," yell Stalin and Voroshilov in unison. But in the interests of their "peace-loving policy" they have adopted such a weak-kneed attitude before the political and military minions of the Mikado that they have virtually lost the entire Chinese Eastern Railway. If the line were not sold now, it would be seized. The negotiations going on in Tokyo are simply a face-saver for Soviet diplomacy, giving a formal character to a fait accompli. Both Moscow and Tokyo

BACKGROUND OF THE NEW DEAL

By the developments toward the much heralded national industrial recovery, which have taken place so far, it appears that the New Deal is getting on the way. Maybe this should give us an opportunity to determine just what this New Deal is. Undoubtedly the general idea behind it, the system of policies represented by that name, are quite clear. But the New Deal itself will be fully estimated only when it is put over and has become a reality. Today the first steps are being taken, it is set into motion, and we must view it in motion to forecast its final results. It is possible to say at the outset, however, that when finally put over, the New Deal will loom up to the working masses as something entirely different from what it appears to be today.

To the same extent the working class judgment will differ. Today there seems to be an attitude, and quite understandably so, that any change is sure to be for the better; that at least cannot become any worse. Many workers are even captivated by illusions of special benefits from the industrial recovery act and its industrial codes. Tomorrow when its scope is known we will find that the New Deal lends itself well to other more choice and more harsh names.

Crisis Creates New Conditions

One thing is certain; the system of policies centered around the industrial recovery efforts represents something new, at least to the extent that new conditions press for new methods. The new conditions are at hand. The crisis in its course of development laid the basis for them. It offered the possibility of the whole national economic structure in preparation for the next stage of the business cycle. Now the problem is to step into that stage and secure an upward economic conjuncture. And it was precisely at this point that many of the old concepts and formulae of capitalist business were found not to fit the new conditions or the new requirements. They were discarded. At the same time new ideas were sweeping the world, catchy ideas, ideas of planned economy. Why not try to apply some of them on a capitalist basis? And so, it came about that the ideas now identified with the New Deal are combined into a sort of a plan aiming at the "organization" of capitalism. A greater concentration and centralization of capital, a more gigantic monopoly. It is the proponents of "organized capitalism," appearing under the collective name of the brain trust, who are the moving forces behind these ideas.

Capitalist Economy Reorganized

But before we look further into the question of the industrial recovery policies of the Roosevelt administration and in order to gain a better understanding of them, it is necessary to first examine their background. As already mentioned, a crisis becomes also a period of capitalist readjustments. An immense reorganization of the whole structure of American national economy took place during the crisis. With a view to the future, this reorganization followed strictly along the lines of the motive

N.Y. Upholsterers Strike Spreads to New Shops

A spirit of militancy pervades the upholsterers who are in their second week of strike. Over fifty shops, large and small, have already responded to the call issued a week ago, Thursday by local 76 of the American Federation of Labor. The demands are for the 30 hour week and the basic minimum wage of $1.40 per hour. The manufacturers association have failed to bring the strikers back into the shops with promises to live up to the code, especially after the proposed conditions of the code were made public (44 hour week and $1.40 per hour). A roar of laughter went up from the men when this was read off by Brother Moskowitz, chairman of the strike committee. Code or no code, the men are in no mood to be tricked into any conditions below those demanded by the strike. Every day new shops are pulled. The notoriously scabby Trade shop on Long Island, the backbone of the open shoppers, came down 100%. With the determination the men are now showing the strike is bound to win.

In the midst of the solid spirit of the men, however, is to be found that apathy which is characteristic of men who are coming into the union and into the strike for the first time. It is easier to rely upon leaders than to take active responsibility yourself. Too much work and responsibility is being shoved upon a few individual at the top. As a result, the strike shops do not meet to consider the particular plans of their shop. The daily general strike meeting is not sufficient. The particular problems of the individual shops cannot be taken up there. For example—the "farming out" of work by Lewittes shop to a two by four dump, which threatens to demoralize the men of that shop, could have been avoided if handled by the shop committee. Also a closer tab should be kept by the shop committees on the location and activity of the men, so that at any time the union could put its finger on any sore spot.

We consider it our duty to express our opinion on the question of pulling signed shops during a general strike. The general strike takes precedence over all such agreements. Strikers do not understand why those union men who called them on strike, themselves go back to work on the basis of the old agreement, and not on the basis of the strike demands. The bosses always break agreements when it is to their advantage to do so. Union Art, for example, introduced piece work into their shop in direct violation of the agreement signed last September with the union. Greengrout and others all violated the agreement by paying single time instead of time and a half for overtime. A general strike of the trade in all cases takes precedence over extant contracts. No work should be produced in these shops. What About the Industrial Union?

The Industrial Union, with the calling of the general strike, has adopted an entirely new set of tactics. Knowing that the overwhelming sentiment of the men is for going into the A. F. of L., they have adopted the policy of "helping" the strike, under the slogan of "unity with the rank and file." In view of the cool reception that their strike demands got from the strikers, they changed them from $1 an hour and the 40 hour week to $1.15 an hour and the 35 hour week. In this respect they are still lagging behind the A. F. of L. The excuse of not knowing what

35,000 Pa. Mine Workers Strike For Right of Union Organization

Western Pennsylvania is again aflame with a miner's revolt growing daily in sweep and scope. The miners' wives from the outset joined directly in the battle taking the blows with their husbands and giving blows as the powerful picket line extended over a far flung territory. Death has taken its toll. One miner is reported killed in typical Pennsylvania steel trust fashion; shot down in cold blood by company plug uglies while carrying the American flag at the head of a picket line. Several other miners are expected to die from wounds received and many are suffering from lighter injuries.

Leon Trotsky Moves From Turkey to France

Comrade Leon Trotsky has finally obtained permission from the French Government to make a trip for his health to Corsica and Southern France where, he will stay, for an indefinite period. Around these simple facts a number of wild legends and conjectures have been built, both by the bourgeois and the Stalinist press. It has been stated for instance that comrade Trotsky will be sent to the United States, as first Soviet Ambassador, that he has made peace with Stalin and Litvinoff that the French government is willing to have him because he will help them against Hitler, etc.

It is not necessary to make any special answer to all these rumors except to point out that they are completely devoid of a basis in fact. When the Stalinists insinuate, however, as in a recent issue of the Daily Worker, that this is the reward of the bourgeoisie for comrade Trotsky's services to them against the Soviet Union on his trip to Copenhagen last year, we line extended over a far flung territory. Death has taken its toll. One miner is reported killed in typical Pennsylvania steel trust fashion; shot down in cold blood by company plug uglies while carrying the American flag at the head of a picket line. Several other miners are expected to die from wounds received and many are suffering from lighter injuries.

The strike started in Fayette Co., Pennsylvania's darkest corner and the scene of many labor battles. It started as a direct challenge to the H. C. Frick Coke Company for the right of union organization. This company is the largest producer in the county and a subsidiary of the United States Steel Corporation. In its further sweep the strike has embraced the adjacent counties of Westmoreland, Allegheny, Washington and Armstrong. The latest reports estimate a total of 35,000 miners involved. As it spread the issue became more than the one of right to union organization. It assumed the character, even though there is no set of specific demands formulated, of a general revolt against the intolerable open shop and semi-open shop conditions imposed by the Pennsylvania steel and coal barons.

It is significant that the strike has also embraced the mines of the Pittsburgh Terminal company which now has a contract with the United Mine Workers. This company was the very backbone of the onslaught which smashed the U. M. W. in the lost strikes of 1927-28. Later when the National Miners Union made headway and led the Western Pennsylvania strike in

Conditions in Fayette Coke Region

Between the black hills of Fayette county lie dotted numerous of the old type bee-hive coke ovens, stretching their low built structure for blocks with the rows of open fires resembling miniature open-hearth steel furnaces. Daily these ovens belch out smoke blackening everything in sight. A heavy pall hangs over the little mining communities. But that accounts for nothing compared to the heavy hand of the steel trust in evidence everywhere. Everything is company owned, the soil, the miners homes, the city and village administrations, the stores in which the miners make their purchases often in company scrip as the only reward received for their labor. The laws laid down by the steel trust are enforced by their own "yellow dog" deputies. For years the Fayette county miners have been compelled to work under these most revolting conditions. It is these conditions that the steel trust fights tooth and nail to maintain.

Many attempts have been made by these miners to organize a union as the only protection for their rights. Often they were sold out by the U. M. W. officials. We still remember the dastardly sell-out of the 1922 strike when John L. Lewis signed the Cleveland agreement leaving out 60,000 miners of Fayette and adjacent counties and sacrificing their budding organization. The miners were caught in a death trap; but they have been fighting on ever since. Now again they are joining the U. M. W.

What Does This Strike Indicate?

There is much to be learned from this present Pennsylvania miners' strike. It is offensive in its character. Perhaps that is its greatest significance. In that sense it is very indicative for the future, particularly when viewed in connection with many other strikes throughout the country, smaller but similar in character. Does it not bring eloquent testimony to the conclusion which we have drawn long ago that in the stage of recovery efforts the class struggle is bound to increase in intensity? In its further development these struggles are just as sure to immensely sharpen the class distinctions in the United States and serve to lead the workers toward political consciousness as a class.

The strike also indicates that during the recovery period there will be a decisive trend of the working masses toward union organization. The stream will head toward the conservative unions despite all their failures and betrayals. Perhaps one can say that in the Pennsylvania mine fields there is today no other union in existence anyway. That is true. The National Miners Union by its utterly false policies and methods long ago forfeited its right to existence and passed out of oblivion. But that only so much more proves the point and indicates the future trend. To keep abreast with that trend the Left wing must now take up in earnest the problem of lodging itself within the mass unions.

1930 the Pittsburgh Terminal Company again recognized the U. M. W. and signed a sort of a contract, though not one agreeable to the men.

Test of Recovery Act

This strike is one of the many expressions of working class attitude under the national industrial recovery efforts. It is a test indicating that the working class is ready to resume the offensive, not relying upon the clauses of the recovery act but upon its own mass power to enforce its right to union organization and to gain better conditions. While in progress, the spokesmen for the steel trust at Washington hypocritically eliminated from their industrial code the demand for company unions. Obviously their intention was to rely upon the police club and soldier bayonets to maintain this demand in practice. They have struck a snag. The miners gave the answer: Up to this point, but no further.

On July 29 the Pennsylvania governor dispatched National Guard troops to Fayette County—to "maintain order." How did the troops discharge that duty? It became the immediate signal for the H. C. Frick Company to declare its mines reopened, calling for scab labor and pledged governmental protection. A new bloody onslaught was launched upon the miners led by the company's privately armed deputies, of which the H. C. Frick Company is said to have—only 275. But despite these heavy odds against the workers they have stood their ground. The mines remained idle, the strike spread.

THE FRAME WORK OF THE UNITED FRONT

In the consideration of the united front, one must not only know the Leninist concept. One must, above all, apply this to objective conditions, and the frame work of the working class and its organizations.

Local, sectional, national and international united front action are complicated in their application. Defensive and offensive struggles call for different modes of working class action, just as periods of reaction, reform and revolution do. The immediate objective must at no time be isolated and separated from the direction of the objective. The Marxist is heading for.

THE REFORMIST REFUSAL OR ACCEPTANCE OF THE UNITED FRONT

The proper application of the united front tactic is a winning one for the revolutionist regardless of the acceptance or refusal of the reformist leaders. The degree of gain will be altered by the position taken by the misleaders. However, in turn, the position of the misleaders in refusing or accepting does not rest within their own hands. Their refusal or acceptance in the last analysis rests in the hands of the pressure of their rank and file. Insufficient pressure will enable the fakers to refuse and strong pressure will compel the misleaders to accept or stand exposed. This does not mean we revert to united front from below. We increase the PRESSURE from below, upon the organization to force them into the united front.

If the leadership is able to prevent the organization from joining the united front we expose such a leadership, not through slander but through political criticism. If the pressure is sufficient to force the leaders into the united front and "if" their program is not to the interest of the working class and their action opposed to working class interest than we EXPOSE THEM IN ACTION as part of the united front. A Marxist can expose an opportunist and reformist if they refuse action. It is far better and a more thorough job of exposure if it is done in action.

Workers do not have illusions only about certain misleaders in whom they still have faith. They also have many illusions about capitalism. In action, around the united front, the twofold process of disillusionment in misleaders and in the capitalist system can be developed. Only Marxist revolutionists can stand this acid test.

CALLING THE UNITED FRONT

The calling of the united front is not the simple task of sending a letter to all working class organizations. Many Right wing secretaries will throw the communication in the basket and the organization will in no way have knowledge of the projected united front. After it is decided to call a united front and before the provisional committee (whatever may be its composition) sends out the call these taking the initiative should organize their own forces to bring pressure from below on all other organizations and especially in the organizations that have labor fakers at the head. The rank and file of those taking the initiative must know about the call and its objective. They must set to work preparing the ground work for the call so when it is sent to all the working class organizations there is sufficient pressure from below to force as many organizations as possible into united working class action. Continued effort must be made to bring those organizations in the united front that at first refuse. Political exposure of those organizations must be carried on.

UNITED FRONTS THAT EXCLUDE COMMUNISTS OR HAVE WRONG PROGRAMS

There are many types of reformers who endeavor to carry on united front action between reformist organizations and exclude the Communists in order to keep the conference and action respectable. The relation of the Communist to this policy of exclusion should be that of breaking into the conference. This refers to united front action on immediate demands. We will consider all factors involved more than once before breaking into a parliamentary united front action of reformists.

The second question of importance in such a united front called by reformists is the question of what kind of a draft program they have presented. We must enter to oppose their class collaboration policy with a policy of class struggle. If we pass the first line trench and are seated but do not succeed in shaping the immediate demands into a program of action and class struggle we should not serve on the Executive Committee elected to carry out the reformist, abstract anti-working class, opportunist program of the united front.

The third important relationship to consider is the relationship of our entrance into a united front that is dominated by forces that adopt a fundamentally wrong program of action such as the Amsterdam Congress of the Stalinists or the Washington Continental Congress of the reformists. Under such a circumstance we expose

A Report from the Middle West

Davenport, Iowa.—The following is a report on activities in the tri-city (Davenport, Muscatine and Rock Island) and throughout the state of Iowa:

No doubt you are aware that the Unemployed Union which was organized on our initiative was taken away from us and we were expelled as the result of a combination of two party leaders and some unscrupulous leaders formed in a faction against us. The Unemployed Union then changed its name to the Cooperative League and became affiliated with the A. F. of L. The Unemployed Council was completely liquidated. And today a fight has broken out between the A. F. of L. leadership and the party. It is doubtful as to the outcome.

Now as to the activities of the party. In Davenport they are doing very little. In East Moline or Moline the Unemployed Council has been more or less captured by a reactionary element, according to our information. The party has organized a Workers School which is not making very much progress. The united front which they organized last spring blew up. No direct benefits were reaped as a result of the "change" of policy of the national leadership of the party on the united front. Now as to the A. F. of L.—As a result of the industrial recovery Act they are sweeping the three cities and organizing local union after local union.

Muscatine In Muscatine the party is practically non-existent although they have about nine members who do nothing. The party makes no efforts to educate such good elements as are in its ranks. The Unemployed Council exists only on paper. The Citizens Employed and Unemployed League has stopped functioning. We have some contacts in this city. Through them we will organize some open air meetings and try, in the very near future, to round up some of the elements that have ceased functioning in the party to form some sort of an educational group which will expound our ideas.

There is very little unemployment in Muscatine at this time due to the pick-up in the button industry which is working full blast. It would be very easy to organize a button workers union but the party has made no effort to do so. I am sure that the A. F. of L. will do it in the near future.

Des Moines The party got a very good start in this region but has isolated itself due to incorrect policies. There are about six Unemployed Leagues in the city. The party's Unemployed Council is non-existent. The I. L. D. never meets though they have some thirty or forty members on paper. While I was there a petition was circulated demanding that the branch meet and that the organizer be forced to call the meeting. The party had a chance to organize the cement workers but due to their astute methods they all went over to the A. F. of L.

The workers in Des Moines are more interested in meetings and lectures than I have seen anywhere in the state. Hundreds gather on the river front in front of the library and hear all kinds of speeches. The party is unable to make any impression on them. I was there for two weeks and held six open air meetings arranged by our sympathizers. It was claimed by everyone that they were the biggest and most interesting meetings held. I had a debate with an I. W. W. on tactics and policies. It was very well received. I had a debate with a socialist on the Industrial Recovery Act where the biggest crowd attended this summer. In both of these debates our group made a very good impression and was congratulated by the workers.

The different industries in the city of Des Moines seem to be picking up. If we can keep up our open air meetings and agitation in Des Moines there is no doubt that we can organize a group. We have spoken to many party members who are very friendly and we have met many times till late at night. The Wobblies are trying to make headway in Des Moines. The A. F. of L. has chartered several locals through the use of the N. I. R. A.

The following is the situation in the mining regions of Iowa: The U. M. W. A. officials got the miners a 22 1-2 wage cut. This was done without a vote of the membership. The miners are very much dissatisfied. Fourteen or fifteen local unions have already endorsed a call for a special district convention. Only sixteen locals are needed for this purpose. Meetings of miners are being held all over the district by opposition forces who are more or less corrupted by the influence of one time office holders within their ranks. Many old party members, especially south Slavs, are in the mines around Iowa. The party thus far has done nothing to crystallize a Left wing within the miners union.

Council Bluffs Here where a year and a half ago we had a splendid movement nothing exists now of the party or the Unemployed Council of the party except a few former disgraced party members. The party organizer does not even bother to do anything at all. The A. F. of L. has organized a Worker's Protective Association for the Unemployed which they claim has 2,500 members. We have plenty of contacts in Council Bluffs which could be worked up if someone were permanently located in this territory.

Omaha The party has moved the office of District 10 to this city. Many comrades are out of the movement who used to be the most active. We have many contacts with the old party comrades but they all seem to be demoralized and disgusted. The socialist party and the Y. P. S. L. are making big headway in Omaha.

Lincoln, Nebraska and Sioux City Lincoln, Nebraska and Sioux City are the most promising bright spots of the party. After considerable time in which nothing was done the party has been able to organize a big unemployed movement. This was mainly due to the activities of the local comrades who worked on their own initiative. The whole branch in Lincoln is very friendly to the Left Opposition.

Sioux City except that many comrades have been expelled from the party.

General Conditions The noticeable thing about general conditions existing around this region is that there seems to be a general revival of industry as to the number of workers being employed. And secondly that the A. F. of L. appears to be making considerable gains. On the other hand, the party is absolutely floundering about not knowing what to do. Many bright opportunities exist for the Left Opposition in this territory. —GEO. J. PARCUN.

Opportunism in N.Y. Food Union

The whole recent policy of the Stalinist leadership in the Food Workers Industrial Union constitutes a sharp zigzag to the right, which has resulted in great demoralization among the workers. It is hard to say whether this is a Left-wing or a Right-wing union, in the FWIU the 60-hour week with practice. In some shops organized wages as low as $12 prevail.

Still more outstanding is the recent action in the strike at the Savarin Cafeteria at 7th Avenue and 39th Street, in the heart of the garment center, a Left-wing stamping ground. When the strike was called, the Daily Worker announced that all workers would join to smash the injunction, which had been the main weapon of the bosses. The strike lasted two weeks—nothing was accomplished.

At the last membership meeting of the FWIU comrade Kramberg, organizer, gave a lengthy report on the achievements of the union in recent weeks. He told about the gains in membership, and the settlements with various shops. He criticized the past "extreme revolutionary" policy of the union and quoted, with approval, what the bosses were saying, "You are good fighters but bad settlers." "They are right," he added, "we do not know how to accept a good opportunity for a settlement when we have one!" He pointed out that one must take account of the crisis in making settlements, that of course one could not get as good terms as during the prosperity period. This is how he justified accepting terms that were no better than those of the open shops.

A worker brought up on the floor the question of the Savarin settlement, and workers of that shop expressed their objections to the terms. These were: wages raised from 12-12 to 25 cents an hour, and only three hours daily, in other words, 75 cents a day. This is less than the reforestation camp wage scale! Three workers were to be taken on as extras under this scale, another was to be raised $2 a week. Nothing whatever was done for the other workers who were left outside of the union, as there was no recognition of the shop committee or of the union. Nothing was said about the injunction of 1929 which still prevails, and can be used again should the FWIU attempt to reorganize the shop. On the basis of this injunction 18 workers were arrested during the strike, which lasted two weeks.

The following fact alone shows

The Savarin boss, taking advantage of the opportunity, has put up a sign in the window which is very tricky worded and reads, "The Strike Has Been Settled (With the Union)". This alone gives a black eye to the whole policy of the Stalinist leadership with its slogan of a "flexible policy," which is nothing but a tight-wing policy.

The only thing that made it possible for the leadership to act in this way was the fact that many militant workers have been discouraged, and have left or joined the A. F. of L. union. Those who remained have been terrorized by the threat of being thrown out of their jobs and discriminated against. There are actual cases where this has happened.

This membership meeting, called to celebrate the "victories" recently gained, attracted an attendance of only 50 or 60 workers, which sufficiently proves the emptiness of the boasts of victory. The members are not even interested enough to show up.

The Right-wing poison has crept through the whole life of the union. At the cooperative camps, only the kitchen men are members of the FWIU, and get $15 a week. The others are so-called "voluntary" workers, not members of any union, and get only $5 a week.

The situation in this union must be thoroughly exposed and cleared up in order to stop this degeneration.

Banks in 'Support' of N.I.R.A.

In the name of patriotism with the flag wrapped around themselves eleven large New York banks have issued a statement pledging help to the NRA by financing the production of goods. The statement says in part: "One of the principle functions of the banks is to finance the production and distribution of raw materials, food products and goods. Commercial loans made for these purposes are among the most desirable loans which a bank can make. Such loans should be granted, of course, only where the credit of the borrowers justifies it, and each loan must be considered on its own merits. We believe that in this manner the banks can and will be of the greatest help in assisting a successful recovery plan."

In other words, where safe and sound loans can be made on the financing of production, the bankers will give their undying support. The bankers, like the other sections of the large capitalists are in a mad scramble to pile up profits. The logical outcome of the NRA will be the accumulation of capital in fewer hands; with a lower standard of living and more misery for the working class. The patriotic action of the bankers to help themselves is no different from the patriotic action of any band of robbers in any period of the history of class society.

Latest Developments in the Textile Industry

Uncle Sam is vitally concerned with the sick textile industry and has shown this concern by first approving the textile code. Now the other sections of the industry are submitting codes. In the meantime wide discontent and strike struggles are taking place throughout the industry. At the same time thousands of Unemployed workers are joining the A. F. of L., controlled by Associated and the United Textile Workers. These workers are promised almost anything under the Industrial Recovery Act. An equal number of seasoned strikers will have nothing to do with the U. T. M., that is discredited from one end of the industry to the other.

On the other hand, the National Textile Workers Union is facing the new situation in the midst of the T. U. W. L. confusion, which reflects itself in the hopeless policy of the N. T. W. U. Many workers refuse to join the N. T. W. U. This is the reward of the third period blunders in particular and the Stalinist revisionism in general.

In Salem, Mass., the N. T. W. U. organizers were forced to organize an independent union. In Paterson the N. T. W. U. are forced to organize the warpers they have influence over, into an independent merger of different organizations and political tendencies into one political organization. One does form a united front on concrete issues relating to war and the overthrow of capitalism as temporary agreements in action.

On the other hand, the Marxists does not enter the united front forgetting the ultimate demands. The revolutionists always has in mind the relation of the immediate demand to the ultimate demand. The proper connection of the two, distinguishes the revolutionist from the reformist.

IN THE PARTY

Lydia Beidel Expelled from Chicago Dist.

The expulsion campaign of the Party in Chicago continues unabated. Starting with the recent expulsion of a half dozen Y. C. L.ers there soon followed the expulsion of Albert Goldman. Now the latest expulsion is that of a comrade with years behind her in the Party.

(Note: All quotations used are accurate, being taken from a stenographic record of events at the meeting on July 6, 1933.)

All the members in Section Seven Chicago were called together—to discuss. Beforehand nobody was told what should be discussed but the bureaucracy evidently had something new to blame on the membership.

A certain unfortunate party member, who had been a member even in the ancient and forgotten days when Lenin was alive, had begun to think on things in general, and on Germany and Chicago in particular and had begun to doubt and had expressed these thoughts and doubts to some youths who had been thereby inoculated with the virus of criticism. And so, this unfortunate party member had been told—devotionally and also directly by all those who had power—that her days within the party were definitely numbered (to seven at the most).

The situation in this union must be thoroughly exposed and cleared up in order to stop this degeneration.

Now this unfortunate comrade had once heard—but that was also in the ancient days, when Lenin was still alive—about various mysterious concepts called democratic centralism, party democracy, Bolshevik self-criticism and freedom of discussion; and in her foolishness she hoped to invoke those now in her hour of need, forgetting that all others who had also heard of these concepts and spoken in their name had been driven into exile. And so she thought of a plan.

Many times had their comrade seen what happened when those who thought tried to speak. So she put her thoughts on three long sheets of paper and made fifty copies of each sheet and put them into a briefcase and went to the meeting which was called to discuss.

All evening the bureaucracy flayed the membership, abusing them for everything done and undone, and being self-critical according to their lights. The Communist party was not functioning well; there was a four-year old crisis at hand and the party had not yet been able to make anything of it. By eleven o'clock it was clear to everyone that something was wrong; but, despite the loudness of the loud voices and the plainness of the denunciation of the membership by the bureaucracy, nobody knew exactly what was wrong.

Then the unfortunate comrade stood up with her briefcase before the membership of her section (of which she had once been organizer, and where she was well known as an active and competent agitator and organizer), she began to avail herself of the three minutes allotted to her to explain her differences with the bureaucracy, and to defend herself against her imminent expulsion. She very meekly suggested that maybe abuse of the membership would not help so much as an analysis of policies and tactics, and then made so bold as to mention Germany. From then on things happened fast.

"Germany is not under discussion. I move this comrade be forbidden to continue." This like machine-gun fire from one Ferguson, who for years had sat at the feet of Knusinnen and knows about many things including the invincibility of the party line. And in a grand reflex came the seconds from her henchmen.

"Very well," said the unfortunate comrade, "I expected this. So I wrote my speech and here it is." And she proceeded to pass out the three long sheets in fifty copies each. And it is amazing to record that the great political maneuverers there present lost fully three minutes before they could react and grasp the matter at hand.

At this point the atmosphere was rent by the piercing shriek of District Agitprop Director Shields. "What is this? Stop her, stop her! She's passing out a document!" And her valiant lieutenant Ferguson opened up and emitted, "Comrades, we forbid you to read this statement. It's a counter-revolutionary document. It is a platform against the party. Hand every copy up here to me. You are forbidden to read it." And the copies began forthwith to disappear from circulation although only three found their way to the desk of the bureaucracy.

Then stood up Agitprop Shields: "This comrade," she shrieked, "is expelled from the Communist party, and her statement is counter-revolutionary."

"But," said the unfortunate comrade from the back of the room, "You can't expel me and I was never told that anyone else had done it."

"Shut up!" said this leader of the revolutionary proletariat, "if you want to talk, go before the Control Committee and talk your head off, but the membership will not listen to your counter-revolutionary speeches."

Then stood up a new comrade, who seemed to be distressed, since he always had a very high opinion of the unfortunate comrade. "But I'd like to ask," he said, "why isn't the comrade allowed to express her opinion, even if it's wrong? I don't seem to understand this, but maybe that's because I'm new in the party."

"This comrade cannot speak here. She has counter-revolutionary intentions. She is looking for an audience. Let her talk to the Secretariat; they'll settle her." It was the High Priesthood of democratic centrism and freedom of discussion, Agitprop Shields.

Another bewildered comrade spoke up: "If this comrade has been expelled from the party, why is she here? Why was she allowed into the meeting?" But the bureaucracy has never yet missed an answer. "Her unit organizer was not notified of her expulsion, and he invited her." Ferguson rose to the occasion this time but she failed to explain why the omniscient secretariat itself was so lax about admitting expelled members. (It might be said, parenthetically, for the benefit of others who were party members while Lenin was still alive, that on other occasions, Section Organizer Ferguson, aided and abetted by District Agitprop Shields, summarily expelled members of the section at membership meetings.)

Came then some long-winded and highly intricate "enlightenment" on the German Situation and the United Front, which looked a great deal to the unfortunate comrade like an ideological hypodermic, especially when...

"Hurrah! Hurrah!" burst out the victimized membership. "The German party was not defeated."

And hurrah, hurrah, the ugly head of counter-revolution had been crushed in Section seven.

This ended the meeting that was called to discuss things.

Bosses Propose Starving Schools

The April 1933 issue of the American Teacher, official organ of the American Federation of Teachers in the A. F. of L., lists twenty recommendations for economy in education sent out by the U. S. Chamber of Commerce to all chambers of Commerce in the United States.

(4) Postponement of new capital outlay for buildings and replacements; (8) Shorten school day one hour; (9) Increase size of classes; (10) Increase teaching hours; (12) Suspend automatic increase of salaries; (13) Reduction in teachers salaries not to exceed 10 percent; (14) Shorten school year to not exceed 12 per cent; (15) Discontinue evening classes; (16) Discontinue kindergarten; (17) Reduce elementary school curriculums by consideration from eight to seven years; (18) Reduce high school curriculums by consolidation from four to three years; (19) Transfer one-third of cost of instruction above high school levels from taxpayer to pupil; (20) Impose a fee on high school students.

This program is already being carried out. In Ohio, California and other states the school year has been cut; in some states drastically. In New York City and elsewhere salaries have been cut; in some places more than once and more than ten per cent. New buildings are virtually at a standstill. Classes have been increased in size all over. Similarly with the other items in this bill of particulars.

It is clear at a glance that the burden of this economy will fall on the teachers and pupils. The teachers have already begun to struggle against it. The militant demonstrations in Chicago and the protests and activities of the Left wing in the Teachers Union in New York are laying the foundations for a teachers movement in the United States.

But the scope of the Chamber of Commerce economy proposals transcends the interests of the teachers as teachers. It is an integral part of the attack of the capitalist class on the working class. In New York City the backbone of the organized labor movement are the Building Trades. They have a direct and immediate interest in new school construction. Imposing fees on high school students increases the cost of living for the workers. Increase in the size of classes places hardships on the children.

Under capitalism labor struggles to assimilate the culture which science and the arts place at the disposal of society. The labor movement has to fight the poisonous ideology which the capitalists inculcate in working class children in the schools. In the United States labor has a stake in the preservation and extension of the free school system.

This economy move on the part of the capitalist class is a reactionary one. The teachers by themselves will not, cannot be successful in defeating it. The experience of the Chicago teachers proves this. They must ally themselves with the working class movement. The teachers movement must steer in this direction.

The Left Socialists and Our Tasks

At the present time the social democracy is everywhere passing through an acute crisis. In a number of countries more or less important Left wings have already separated themselves from the social democratic parties. This process flows from the whole situation. That it has not yet taken on a more developed character is due to the mistakes of the Stalinist bureaucracy. It puts a brake on the internal differentiation in the ranks of reformism and closes the door of Communism to the revolutionary wing. The appearance of independent socialist parties as well as autonomous organizations, is a vote of direct and deserving defiance to the address of the C. I.

The Stalinist bureaucracy calls the independent socialist organizations "Left social fascists," the most dangerous of all. That was especially its attitude towards the S. A. P. unexpectedly, after the 5th of March, and with extraordinary attention the C. I. met with the British "Left social fascists" as represented by the Independent Labor Party (the I. L. P.), once more revealing how great its confusion is in face of the decomposition of the social democracy, which unfortunately coincides with its own decomposition.

The International Left Opposition faces a new task: to accelerate the evolution of the Left Socialist organizations toward Communism, by injecting its ideas and its experience into this process. There is no time to lose: if the independent socialist organizations remain in their present amorphous state for a long period of time they will disintegrate; the political tasks of our epoch are so acute, the pressure of hostile classes so powerful—to this it is necessary to add the intrigues of the reformist bureaucracy on the one hand, and the Stalinist bureaucracy on the other—that only a powerful ideological bond on the unshakable basis of Marxism can assure the revolutionary organization the ability to maintain itself against the hostile currents and to lead the proletarian vanguard to a new revolutionary epoch.

The new situation facing the Left Opposition, unfolding new opportunities, poses new tasks to it. Up till now we have recruited members chiefly on the basis of individual selection. This was an absolutely inevitable stage, to that degree where the conservative centrist bureaucracy made impossible the direct and immediate influence of our ideas on the Communist parties in their entirety. It would evidently be a very big mistake to think that we have drawn from the official parties all that can be drawn from them. On the contrary, the passage of entire units and local organizations to the Left Opposition, etc., is still ahead of us. But our influence on the mass workers organizations cannot be achieved according to an order dictated beforehand. With a vigilant eye we must follow the live processes in all the workers organizations, so as to be able at the opportune moment to concentrate our attention in that field which promises of the most success.

The independent socialist organizations or the Left Oppositionist factions within the social democracy are either avowedly centrist organizations or they contain within their ranks strong centrist tendencies or survivals. Their positive sides lie in that under the influence of historic blows received by them they develop in a revolutionary direction. For us to seriously approach these organizations on a clear principled basis will signify a new chapter in the development of the Left Opposition and thereby of the rebirth of revolutionary Marxism in the world workers movement. A great international revolutionary organization inspired by the ideas of the Left Opposition would become a center of attraction for the proletarian elements of the official Communist parties.

It must not be overlooked that this path taken in its whole can open up the possibility for the creation of new Communist parties. The question is already resolved, so far as Germany is concerned—not by us but by the march of events—in a complete and final manner. The differences that existed on this subject in our ranks, particularly with the German comrades, have either disappeared completely or are reduced to secondary nuances. Everything that has been produced by the bureaucracy after March 5th—articles in the Stalinist press, the resolution of the Presidium of the E. C. C. I. on April 1st, the course of the C. P. G. as characterized in the anti-Fascist Congress at Paris—fully confirm the prognosis of the definitive and inevitable disintegration.

tion of the C. P. G. What has just been said can evidently be extended to Austria where the C. P. on a police order, disappeared without the sign of resistance from the face of the earth. "The oldest party of the C. I.", which so ingloriously disappeared from the scene, will not revive again! The threatening perspective of complete elimination of the old Communist parties. But at the same time the sections of the Left Opposition should manifest a much greater initiative than up till now, outside of the official parties, in the whole extent of the workers movement.

The transition from one stage of struggle to another and higher one has never been effected without internal friction. Some comrades, homesick for the mass organizations, evince a desire to gather fruits that are still unripe. Others, fearing for the purity of the principles of the Left Opposition receive all attempts to approach the larger mass organizations with distrust. "What good can be expected from Nazareth?" How can one approach organizations at the head of which are centrists? We are quite ready, they say, to unite with the rank and file workers, but we do not see any sense in approaching the Centrist leaders, etc., etc. Such a purely formal manner of posing the question is erroneous. They are greatly affected by propagandist sectarianism.

The 3rd International was itself recruited from 9-10ths of centrist elements who evolved to the Left. Not only individuals and groups but also entire organizations and even parties with their old leaders or a part of their old leadership placed themselves under the banner of Bolshevism. This was absolutely inevitable. The further march of developments depended on the policy of the C. I. of its internal regime, etc. In the camp of the workers movement today, if the Fascist, nationalist and religious organizations are deducted, one can observe the predominance of the reformist and the centrist; in this latter category we include official C. I. for good cause. It is clear that the rebirth of the revolutionary workers movement will take place at the expense of Centristism. Moreover, not only individuals and groups but entire organizations will place themselves anew under the Communist banner. The further development of re-education will depend on the general direction of politics, of the regime and finally on the march of historic events.

We have many times repeated in our literature how heterogeneous Centristism is: Centristism comprises all the transitory degrees between reformism and Marxism or—which is not the same thing—between Marxism and reformism. It is impossible to understand the centrist movement solely through its declarations and documents of today; we must keep before us the history of its development and the direction of its movement.

The Centristism of the Stalinist faction is characterized by a policy of convulsions and zig-zags or by a standstill and it is the most conservative of all the Centrist formations that have ever existed in the workers movement. This is explained by the fact that this time Centristism has found a powerful social support in the Soviet bureaucracy; the apparatus of the western parties are mere appendages. While the Stalinist bureaucracy in the U. S. S. R. is forced to defend the workers state against the bourgeoisie for the sake of its special interest, in the West it has become the instrument for the disorganization and the weakening of the proletarian vanguard. Without the slavish dependence on the Soviet bureaucracy the official parties of the West would have long since found a way to the correct road or they would have crumbled like dust, ceding their place to healthier organizations.

The personnel of the official parties maintain themselves today exclusively by faith in the U. S. S. R. and its leadership. Many honest Communists have a religious fear of criticism and new arguments to keep them from losing "faith" in the leadership of the U. S. S. R. It is that and only that which can explain the fact that grown-up people, often sincere revolutionaries, throughout years supported such monstrous things, which are a mockery of Marxism, of the advanced workers and of human thought. Those who free themselves from the fetishism of the Soviet bureaucracy usually sink into a state of indifference. As is known, the Communist parties have lost, in the last years, an incomparably greater number of members than the Left Opposition has won over.

The Centristism of social democracy is characterized by a movement from Right to Left—in a political situation which renders difficult all temporizing positions. The members of the independent socialist organizations are deprived, in their majority, of that revolutionary guide, that has more or less succeeded in gaining members for the Communist parties. But on the other hand, the independent socialist, not corrupted by fetishism to the Soviet bureaucracy, are free from conservatism are passing through an internal crisis, are honestly seeking for answers to questions posed by our epoch, are evolving to the side of Communism. At this time they are much more amenable to the ideas of authentic Bolshevism, according to all indications, than the members of the Stalinist faction.

Such is the odd combination of historic conditions, in a certain sense "unforeseen", which opens up new opportunities of activity and progress to the Bolshevik-Leninists. We must utilize it to the end.

Stalinist Policies Weaken S. U. In Face of Japanese Aggression

the C. E. R. without payment) has weakened the Soviet Union by encouraging Japan in the belief that whatever she does to Soviet interests, on a more or less minor scale, will meet with no resistance. One provocation has followed another. With a firm policy, steadfastly pursued from the very beginning, the Soviet Union would be immeasurably stronger in the Far East now and the Japanese imperialists would be much more guarded in their actions.

The Anti-War Committee set up by the Amsterdam Congress last year is sending out a commission to China, which is to organize a "Far Eastern Anti-War Congress". The best traditions of the Lytton Commission are being followed. This commission, hearing the stamp of Stalinist approval, is headed by the labor peer, Lord Marley, and otherwise consists of several pacifists, besides including the Communist renegade, Miss Ellen Wilkinson, the former Labor M. P. While the Communists in Shanghai are all agog over the forthcoming visit, it has remained for a petty-bourgeois radical like Mrs. Suo Yat-Sen, one of the presidium of the League against Imperialism, to express the view that the "commission" and the congress of liberals and pacifists which it will assemble in Shanghai (if permitted by the police to do so) to pass resolutions against the maraudings of Japanese imperialism, is a futile and nonsensical affair.

Strike Wave in China

The past two to three months have witnessed a general tendency toward revival of activity among the workers of China after a fairly lengthy period of dormancy. This tendency, manifested in strikes and other actions, is more or less general throughout the country, but is mainly observable in the larger centers, especially Shanghai.

It would be incorrect, however, to describe the renewed activity as due to a growth of militancy among the workers in the sense of that inevitable recovery which takes place as the accompaniment of a partial or temporary, economic recovery. Such action as has taken place is rather in the nature of a desperate rearward action in the face of ever-continuing capitalist onslaughts. Wages are constantly being lowered, the working week is being steadily cut, especially in the larger industries (sometimes as little as three days), and industrial enterprises are closing down one after another, throwing tens of thousands into unemployment.

But even the desperate rearward action that the workers are fighting amid steadily worsening economic conditions are beginning to engender a real fighting spirit—so much so, in fact, that the Kuo Min Tang is beginning to sit up and take notice.

The Trade Union Act of the Nanking Government, which became operative on November 1, 1929, aimed at the Fascistization of the trade unions, the strangling of their independent activity. The trade unions were converted into "safety valves", under more or less conplete governmental control and supervision. During the three years 1929-32, when the workers lay almost completely prostrate under the heavy defeats of 1927, this process of Fascistization was carried to considerable lengths, and the workers were largely deprived of any independent trade union organizations.

Due, however, to the disintegration of Nanking authority under the blows of external aggression, and the accumulated domestic difficulties of the government, control of the unions was latterly, to a certain extent, allowed to slip. The Trade Union Act suffered the same laxity of application as most of the legislative enactments of the Nanking government. Hence, some unions developed an independent leadership, free of Kuo Min Tang influence or control.

No move toward a tightening-up was required so long as the workers suffered without opposition the tyranny and intense exploitation to which they have so long been subjected. But lately, with the employing class frantically endeavoring to solve the economic crisis at the expense of the workers, the latter have once more begun to stir.

The obvious fact of this renewed activity has had a corresponding effect on the Kuo Min Tang organs, which, beginning with the Shanghai Seamen's Union, have commenced reasserting their control over the trade unions. This has led in many instances to sharp conflicts between the workers and the Kuo Min Tang, and if the present upward curve of workers' activity continues it might be expected that these conflicts will grow more numerous and more severe.

The Economic Situation in China Today

A few facts concerning the present economic situation in China, and the activity of the workers, will no doubt be of interest. During a period of approximately five weeks from mid-May, according to press reports, no fewer than 11 industrial concerns in Shanghai suspended operations completely, while many others went on short-time. Five of the eleven were silk-weaving and silk goods factories, 5 were rubber shoe factories and 1 a cotton mill. The eleven concerns employed between them roughly 4,000 workers; the cotton mill alone employed 1,400. In addition, 2,700 workers were discharged from a Japanese cotton mill in May, while some 400 seamen lost their jobs when their vessels were laid up.

At Tientsin, a cotton mill employing 2,700 closed down, and at Canton a rubber factory employing 700. At Tsinan, 1,000 workers at the arsenal were given notice of dismissal because of the projected removal of the arsenal to Hanyang, on the Yangtze.

On June 19, two large cotton mills in Hankow, employing between them approximately 10,000 workers, closed down, and the following day a third, employing approximately 7,000 followed suit. The unemployment situation in Shanghai, which may be taken as a pattern for the rest of the country, has assumed extraordinary no official records are kept, but it has been computed at anything between 100,000 and 200,000. There are approximately 50,000 silk fabric workers unemployed in the city, 98 of the 113 establishments being closed. So meager are the earnings of the workers that they face dire distress immediately they become unemployed, a distress only slightly mitigated by the existence in China of a closely-knit family system whereby there is a moral obligation for members of a family to assist one another.

Starvation Kamp

There is no doubt that starvation and semi-starvation are rampant on a scale unprecedented. So serious is the situation that the Shanghai General Labor Union has addressed a petition to the Nanking government urging that express orders be issued prohibiting the various Chinese factories from either suspending or reducing work. In this petition it is stated: "While it is true that some factories have been compelled to have recourse to such measures on account of the general economic depression, not a few of them have done so intentionally with the malicious purpose of breaking up certain labor organizations."

At the same time, the yellow Kuo Min Tang-controlled officials who drafted this petition issued a circular order to the workers which at once epitomizes their own degeneracy and reveals the vast gulf which separates them from the revolutionary fighting traditions of the Shanghai General Labor Union. In 1925-27. In the circular order, the workers are called upon to "work in whole-hearted cooperation with their employers and to devote their best efforts to their work in order to avert a total collapse of the native industries," and it is emphasized that "the interests of labor and capital are really identical and interwoven and that all workers must adopt an attitude of sympathy and cooperation towards their employers."

In May, in the International Settlement and Chinese-controlled territory of Shanghai combined, there occurred 16 strikes involving 13,372 workers and the loss of 106,806 working days. The corresponding figures for the preceding month of April were 9 strikes involving 1,939 workers and the loss of 3,349 working days. In May, 1932 there were 36 strikes involving 8,809 workers and the loss of 21,082 working days. These statistics are extracted from the monthly reports of the commissioner of police of the International Settlement.

As will be observed, ten times more workers were involved in strikes in May than in the preceding month of April and almost three times more than in May last year. The fact that while the number of strikes in May this year was the same as in May, 1932, the number of strikers was nearly three times greater, indicates a tendency for the larger industries to be drawn into labor conflicts. From the comparative figures of working days lost, the tendency for strikes to be of longer duration will be noticed, which may be taken as an indication that the workers are becoming more stubborn in their struggles.

Hitler Orders: 'Butter for People'

The speeches of the Fascist leaders, dripping with social sympathy, which are launched at every opportunity with great expenditure of lung power and thundered into the ears of the god—and hero-worshipping petty-bourgeois shopkeepers, stand in honorable contradiction to the practical deeds with which the "social service" bourgeoisie out of the crisis. The frightful, profound, crushing misery, which has been bearing down on the shoulders of the many millions of unemployed for years, which drives thousands each year to take their lives, and brings further thousands slowly closer to physical death by starvation, this misery in the ranks of the German proletariat is being intolerably sharpened by the government's large-scale campaign of robbery of the pockets of the broad masses in order to fill the purses of the bourgeoisie and the big landowners. And the disgusting accompaniment to which the Aryan scoundrels are staging the show, consists of infatigable tirades about the German "working class of brain and hand", with which they hope to stuff the mouths of those whose bread they are snatching away.

Margarine or Butter—Question of Taste or Question of Wages?

Unemployment and the pressure on wages since the beginning of the crisis has brought the standard of living of the German proletariat to an ever lower level, has taken away from the worker's table one by one all the "luxuries" which today include milk and butter as well as meat and vegetables. The forcible worsening of the living conditions of the proletariat, which has also embraced fairly broad sections of the petty bourgeoisie and of the white-collar class, has resulted in a special boom for those sections of industry which have arranged their production especially for the beggarly pennies of the pauperized people. The 25-pennig shops of Woolworth and Wohlwert of the Sera and the Epa, have been the beneficiaries of this development, which have also resulted in a few fat morsels for the margarine industry.

What was a benefit for the margarine producer was an evil for the peasant. The consumption of butter shrank rapidly as many consumers turned to the much cheaper margarine. The price of butter sank considerably, while on the other hand foodstuffs became dearer on account of tariffs, so that the German peasant production was injured in this direction too, especially by the foreign competition which is supplied with much cheaper foodstuffs. One evil resulted in another. The attempt was made to keep foreign competition out of the German market by ever higher tariffs. At the same time, the peasants turned in increasing degree to the use of oil-cakes as feed, in order not to have to use foodstuffs which had been made expensive by tariffs.

The New Measures

In order to help the big landowners out still more energetically than before, tariffs and subsidies are not enough; it is urgently necessary to secure the market for wheat production in Germany itself, on the one hand in order to prevent the excessive internal prices from attracting foreign competition which would skim off the cream, on the other hand, to prevent the German peasant from getting around the excessive price of foodstuffs by going over to the use of the cheaper oil-cakes. This is the kernel of all the well-played-up rescue measures of the German peasantry, whose purchasing power must be raised, according to Hitler. This gentleman has made many promises, and still certainly find it hard to satisfy behind him on a string. He will lead all kinds of human vermin everywhere, and at the same time take care of the interests of the bourgeoisie with the necessary energy.

To "reconcile" the contradictory interests of the little throat-cutters with those of the bigger profit-swallowers, requires, outside of Fascist terror, which will have to carry out its historical tasks here too, a large portion of demagogic and diplomatic trickery and maneuvering, for which Fascism has an almost inexhaustible gift.

Hitler promised to put the screws on the big trusts. And he is doing so in his own way—with the necessary respect. To allay the misery of the German peasantry, which according to the greatest pudding-head of our century is the cornerstone of the solution of the economic crisis, the most effective step would be to pick the pockets of the workers and white-collar class. The means are simple enough. One has only to increase the price of butter; limit the production of margarine, which currently must not exceed 60% of the production in 1932; and levy a tax on the consumption of these "artificial food fats".

The consequences of these "measures" to cheapen the cost of food fats", as this action of the government is modestly called on account of the issue of fat cards, have been no secret to anybody in Germany. The cheapest margarine has risen in price from 25 to 75 pennings a pound, and may be bought by those who are favored with fat cards at 50 pennings a pound—unless it just happens to be sold out. This 100% increase in the price of the cheapest kind, for those who receive relief or pensions and are entitled to buy "cheapened" margarine on their fat cards, is the clearest characterization of those honey-sweet words with which Hitler on "Labor Day" sought to win the favor of the toiling masses for his national-socialism.

Along with margarine, butter also rose in price substantially, the increase amounting to 35 marks per hundredweight against the lowest quotation in February of this year. Undoubtedly the milk-producing peasants are still rubbing their hands with pleasure, for the time being. But their joy will be short-lived.

The Government Needs Scape-Goats

The shortage and dearness of margarine and the price advance in butter have resulted in unpleasant surprises. The deep bitterness which took hold of even many adherents of Hitler, caused the government to look immediately for a scapegoat on whom the blame for these developments could be placed, to divert indignation against others, and at the same time to show the petty-bourgeois shopkeepers emphatically that they are mistaken, if they hope to chip off a little piece of this profitable business for their own pockets.

The government is by no means a stranger to this game with false cards. It had the announcement made over the radio that first-quality butter costs 1.20 marks a pound, while at the same time this grade was being priced at 1.60 marks in the shops. At the same time, in Munich and in port elsewhere in the country, several hundred little shops were closed for profiteering, the shopkeepers were arrested and brought to concentration camps, where presumably they have been cured for some time of their hopes in Hitler.

It is readily understandable that the difference between the price named officially by the government and the much higher one demanded in the shops caused anger and bitterness among the consumers, which was directed against the retailers. This anger and bitterness was further intensified when the government, in its "straightforward and honorable" manner, openly exposed and punished before the eyes of the world the profiteering maneuvers of a number of dealers. And precisely this was the object of the government's action. The radio, with its announcement of cheap prices for butter, thereby dropped a little poison into the ears of the masses, insinuating that the retailers were profiteering "to the extent of 40 pennings a pound and thus egging them on against the dealers."

It is a question of the strips which can still be cut out of the hide of the suppressed proletariat. Everybody wants their part. The big bourgeoisie will receive it, the petty bourgeoisie and the small farmers will be fed illusions which Fascism attempts to give a certain material basis. "It is the intention of the government that the workers should entirely dispense with the use of margarine, even if that means an increase of the budget of every individual household." Who will still doubt the social nature of Fascism? It demands: Butter for the People! It does not even give them cheap margarine.

National Recovery Act to Throw New Burdens on U.S. Proletariat

The good ship, American Capitalism, its hull battered and leaking, loaded with its heavy disarranged national economy is making its way into uncharted seas. Compelled by the necessity of attempting a solution of an economic crisis of unprecedented magnitude, the Roosevelt administration has adopted methods entirely new to the American scene.

The National Industrial Recovery Act, promulgated as an emergency measure, is the most important of the unusual steps taken since the present administration came into power. Its avowed purpose as stated by the President is "the reemployment of men and dollars." The Act provides for control of industry, the regulation of hours and wages of labor, the establishment of codes for "fair competition", as well as the putting into effect a public works program involving the expenditure of 3 billion, 3 hundred million dollars.

At the head of the administration of the Recovery Act was placed Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, a close associate of Bernard Baruch, the financier. The law provides the administration with sweeping powers and great freedom of action; all of its decisions are contingent on final approval of the President.

The Recovery Act, as we have said, provides for the establishment of codes for the regulation of hours and wages and "fair competition" in all industries. These codes are to be submitted by the industries themselves and when once accepted by the Recovery administration with approval of the President have all the force of law, violations of which are penalized. The objective is the organization of the entire industrial output of the country—in other words a capitalist "planned economy."

Quite a change from the traditional laissez-faire rugged individualism extolled by many ideologists of American capitalism. Nevertheless, although more than a month has gone by, only the textile industry has submitted a code which was accepted by Johnson and the President. Steel, coal, electrical manufacturing, transportation, lumber, utilities and other important industries have been rather shy about submitting their codes. So much so, in fact, that Johnson has threatened to write a code over their heads, and what is more to establish a general minimum wage ruling for all of industry, referred to as a "blanket code."

How have these innovations affected working class opinion? In various ways. There are some among the Stalinists who claim that this, like the Hoover administration and other events of the past, is Fascism. Again, the essence of Fascism is subtly ignored, proving that the recent German catastrophe does not necessarily teach any lesson to certain people. Then there are those, especially among socialists, who see a form of socialism being introduced in the U. S.

To dispose of this last view first it is sufficient to point out that the concentration of wealth and the means of production into fewer hands is not only facilitated but also accelerated by the Recovery

Act. The government is taking these steps purely in the interest of the capitalist system, trying to "organize" it so that it may survive the social cataclysm that awaits it.

However, to merely state that this is not Fascism without analyzing the social and political implications and the possible developments, would be incorrect. Of course, it is obvious that this is not Fascism. Fascism could not be imposed in this country or in any other without an immediate threat from a class-conscious, organized working-class. The capitalists themselves do not want Fascism because while this form preserves capitalism as a system a little longer, it restricts the individual capitalist enterprises within the rigid framework of a state organization. Fascism comes about, then, as a last resort and when all other means of holding power have been exhausted. The conditions prerequisite for Fascism in this country will not materialize in the immediate future, unless something unforeseen should occur. This does not mean that the workers should not look to all organizations of a Fascist nature without any apprehension.

But the economic organization of Fascism is state capitalism. State Capitalism is the final form of capitalist economy. Engels foresaw this development with remarkable accuracy in his "Socialism, Utopian and Scientific." Under this form, all industries become part of the State apparatus—the Corporative State, as in Italy. The enactment of any measure in any particular branch of industry by the "corporation" involved has all the force of law as this organization is a branch of the government itself.

Viewed from this standpoint, the striking similarity between the economic structure of Fascism and the set-up of the Recovery Act is apparent. The steps taken by the Recovery Act are to the tune of Fascist music. Let us not overlook this important aspect of the question.

What has happened in the meantime to the Sherman Anti-Trust laws? Without actual annulment by Congress, the Roosevelt administration has waved them aside. These laws had been enacted under the mass pressure of the petty bourgeoisie fighting against the inexorable growth and encroachment of monopoly industry, which has yearly wiped out increasing numbers of small establishments. Toronto Workers in Anti-Fascist Strike

Toronto, Canada.—No action on the part of workers in Canada since the Winnipeg General Strike of 1919 carries such tremendous significance as the mass parade and demonstration against Fascism which took place in Toronto on July 11th. For the first time in fifteen years working class solidarity found expression in a monster parade involving about 10,000 workers belonging to trade unions and political organizations. The United Front Committee had issued a call for the 2-hour strike and demonstration to begin at 3 o'clock on the afternoon of July 11th. An hour before that time large numbers of workers had already begun to assemble in Wellington Park in the heart of the clothing trades district. When 3 o'clock came, workers were pouring into the park by the hundreds, whole factories marching down together or hurrying to the assembly point by street-car, were seen everywhere. A spirit of enthusiasm pervaded the scene as the workers, freed from the drudgery of the factories, cheered each newly-arrived group, cheered their class brothers and sisters who this afternoon were joining hands in a mass protest against the bloody rule of Hitler in Germany and capitalist reaction all over the world. By 3:45 P. M. when the first section of the parade moved off, the park was a sea of humanity—more than that—a host of workers taking up battle against a common enemy. Ten thousand workers, three hundred banners, all raising the voice of proletarian struggle against the murderous regime of Fascism.

The parade moved off from Wellington Park through the clothing district on to University Ave., and past the parliamentary buildings to assemble en masse in Queens Park. In the front ranks were the workers of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, some 1400, followed by the ILGWU, the Industrial unions and other unions affiliated. Then came other mass organizations, the auxiliaries of the party, the Y. C. I. and finally the International Left Opposition, under whose banner marched the Toronto branch of the Left Opposition, the Spartacus Youth Club, the Unser Kampf Club—as well as a body of about 60 unorganized workers brought out on strike by the Left Opposition. The last banner in the parade, the parting shot, was "Forward to Victory Under the Banner of Lenin and Trotsky!"

As the revolutionary organizations left Wellington Park, the strains of the Internationale rose above the throng—sung with a spirit that is characteristic only of proletarians on parade.

In Queens Park, the throng created a scene unique in the history of the Toronto working class. Here the 10,000 paraders were greeted by a crowd of about 15,000, many of whom were workers anxious to participate in the demonstration while hundreds came only to see what was going to happen. It was a glorious spectacle. A closely packed crowd with banners waving overhead, mirroring all the phases of the class struggle. It was the class struggle and not a Jewish nationalist protest such as the elite of Toronto's Jewry had staged in Massey Hall in collaboration with the city bourgeoisie. The united front of workers aroused proletarians and bourgeois alike to a realization of the strength of a working class protest based on working class unity. The demonstration aroused the hopes and admiration of multitudes of workers and aroused the fury of the bourgeoisie—to which the latest police campaign against the marchers testified.

Taking up their stand at the base of the 48th Highlanders Monument a speaker from each organization addressed the crowd. When the L. O. contingent arrived, Charles Green of the Left Poole Zion, chairman of the Jewish Workers United Front Committee, was speaking. In the tumult it was impossible to hear him unless you were close at hand. When he finished, our comrade, Maurice Spector, took the stand. Comrade Spector flanked on either side by a trio of cops, opened with an attribute to the united front of the marchers for breaking through the police ban on meetings and raising the strong arm of the proletariat against the Canadian bourgeoisie. He urged the marchers to continue the struggle for free speech and assembly, for the repeal Section 98 and for the release of the eight leaders of the Communist Party of Canada who were now serving long terms in Kingston penitentiary. He went on to discuss the victory of Fascism in Germany, what a catastrophe it was for the German working class and the international revolutionary movement. Warning the workers that the Fascist victory in Germany presented the greatest danger to the continued existence of proletarian rule in the Soviet Union, comrade Spector urged them to maintain a solid fighting front against Fascism, to defeat Fascism and save the Soviet Union by the method of class struggle. He concluded with the ringing slogan: "Down with Hitler! Long Live the Soviet Union!" etc. A rousing cheer was the answer of the workers to comrade Spector's remarks as he stepped the monument. The cheering was echoed as our comrades shouted: Forward to Victory Under the Banner of Lenin and Trotsky. By this time several other speakers were being heard in various parts of the park. It was not long before comrade Jack McDonald, also of the Left Opposition, took the stand. He warned the workers not to be led into believing that this demonstration alone would mark the victory of the struggle for free speech in Toronto; time and again he stressed the necessity for continuing militantly the struggle for free speech and assembly and against the pernicious section 98. He continued with an analysis of the German events, speaking in greater detail than had comrade Spector.

Subotage of A. C. W. Leaders
No account of this demonstration would be complete without a few remarks concerning the activities of the affiliated organizations of the united front. From the beginning of the conference we had to contend with the efforts of the right wing reformist leaders to delay action and to give the conference a Jewish nationalist character. Especially anxious to get around the idea of a strike and a parade was Nesbitt, the spokesman of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers Union. He raised all manner of objections, ranging from the demand that the Industrial Union be shut out of the conference to a request for postponement of the strike on the ground that the locals had not yet discussed the question. All sections of the conference opposed Nesbitt on the first point with the result that in the actual working out of the demonstration the Amalgamated was not a formal member of the conference. Instead a committee of the united front conference worked out the mechanics of the united front demonstration with a committee from the Amalgamated for a two week postponement, from June 27 to July 11 was granted to take away from the union leaders any excuse for non-participation.

Stalinist Stupidity
The sabotaging tactics of the Amalgamated Union leaders produced a counter obstacle in the ultimate attitude assumed by the Stalinists. Promptly transgressing the boundaries of the united front by indulging in fierce attacks upon all and sundry, the Stalinists at first demanded as a first prerequisite for affiliation to the conference that all social democratic organizations admit their responsibility for the death of Rosa Luxemburg and Karl Liebknecht. Only that! Our comrades opposed this as did almost every other organization in the conference. The Left Opposition stated that while it was true that the social democrats, Noske and company, were responsible for the murder of Luxemburg and Liebknecht, a confession of guilt could not be demanded as a condition for affiliation to the conference. The Stalinists were swamped on this issue.

Again when the Amalgamated asked for the postponement of the strike, the Stalinists wanted to refuse the request and to call the strike without the Amalgamated. This was a criminal position, for it would have played right into the hands of the Amalgamated leaders and shut out of the conference the largest union in the Jewish section of the united front. When the request for postponement was carried against the Stalinists they went so far as to issue a special addition of the Kampf in which they naturally went out of their way to slander the Amalgamated but also made the Poole Zion and the Left Opposition targets for their lies and mud slinging. This editor of the Kampf might have split the united front. The Amalgamated leaders at first attempted to seize upon it as a pretext for non-participation. It was only the skillful tactics of the Left Opposition and the Left Poole Zion that overcame the damage done by the Stalinists.

It is no exaggeration to say that had the conference followed the policies of the Stalinists there would have been no strike and demonstration. The two hour strike and demonstration also dealt a crushing blow to the confused Stalinist theory of the "united front from below". The success of the genuine united front was apparent to all.

Results of Strike
What are the results and what conclusions can be drawn from the united front of the Toronto workers? The strike and demonstration is unique as the only working class protest, of a mass nature that has taken place in Canada, and possibly in North America. The workers of this city have learned that Fascism is not a regime that is distinguished by its pogroms against the Jews, but a regime that signifies the last efforts of decay capitalism to save itself from the exploited masses. They have learned that Fascism means destruction for the proletariat and that Fascism can only be fought by proletarian struggle.

Besides arousing the political consciousness of thousands of workers in a united front against Fascism the demonstration has been a vindication of the policies and tactics of the Left Opposition.

Los Angeles Unemployed Movement

The unemployment movement in Los Angeles is in many respects the most interesting in the country, from the standpoint of the number of workers included, the powers which the organization has won for itself, and the size and cohesiveness of the Left wing within the movement. The movement dates back over a year and a half, in an organized form, and sufficient experience with it has been accumulated to allow certain political lessons to be drawn. The Left Opposition has participated in a leading and initiating capacity in this movement from the beginning, and has clearly shown what possibilities of objective work are open to us in the elementary working-class movement, and what can be achieved by correct Communist policies carried out with energy and persistence.

The unemployment movement in Los Angeles got under way about January 1932. A committee composed of Left wing elements of extremely diverse character—anarchists, Communists, anarchists, syndicalists, Minstrelites, and others—was organized. After much discussion as to the basic approach to the question of unemployment, an agreement was reached as to the necessity of accepting as a fact the backwardness of the workers in this region, and a minimum program was worked out.

The objective situation in which we were working may be characterized by the following facts: Los Angeles is probably the most notorious open-shop town in the United States. Trade unions are exceedingly weak there, while the

N.Y. Upholsterers Strike Grows

The general strike demands would be no longer available. Their is no reason, except Stalinist disregard for the interests of the strike, to explain why they did not immediately adopt the strike demands of the majority. Workers are indignant and enraged at what appears to them to be an open bid to the bosses on the part of the Industrial Union for settlement on the basis of scab conditions.

And in this connection, we must note the ominous significance of the complete boycott of this strike in the Communist party press. Can this mean that the Party and the TULU intends to ignore a mass strike simply because it is not under their control? Possibly, since this is not the first strike that has been ignored by the Daily Worker, and major ones at that. But more probably the reason can be found in that they have not yet recovered from the confusion into which they were thrown by the striking upholsterers who voted with their feet to support the A. F. of L.

Now, the members of the Industrial Union, who in some respects represent the cream of the industry, have it as their duty to be among the masses of the trade, who are now moving into the ranks of local 76. Just as before the split in 1930, the Left wing can now carry on a much more effective fight for their point of view within the mass union, where they should constitute themselves as the Left wing, the nourishing leaven to the entire movement, leading it in the direction of class struggle and militancy. Especially now, after the mass of strikers have spoken, it is your duty to come back en masse—reintegrate yourselves into the main body of the upholsterers, local 76, in New York and similarly in other cities. Demand of your leaders to do likewise.

Win the Strike, Beat the Bosses!
We call on you men in the strike to close your ranks and fight for the realization of the full demands of the strike. You have every opportunity now, if you put your hearts into it, to deal the bosses' association a crushing blow, and to raise your conditions with one mighty sweep from the miserable status it is now into one of decency, with more leisure to develop yourselves towards a greater measure of control over the conditions of your lives. Fight in solidarity and you will win!

can only say that they are covering up an infamy with a calumny. Now they are using the concessions made by the bourgeoisie French government to a revolutionary fighter to distort the truth again, and prevent the workers from realizing what effective work for the revolution comrade Trotsky is doing, in the fields of propaganda and organization, in spite of the handicaps of physical isolation, Stalinist slander, and separation from the official representative of the October Revolution, the Communist International.

Every revolutionary worker and party member should demand that the necessary steps be taken for the reinstatement of comrade Trotsky and the International Left Opposition into the Communist International.

Chamber of Commerce, on the other hand, is intimately linked up with the local administrative apparatus, sending its representatives to meetings of local governmental bodies and maintaining a private anti-radical armed force, the "Red" Hynes squad. Second, the city of Los Angeles is included within an agricultural area, specializing in fruit and vegetables, and constituting together with it the county of Los Angeles. Because of the predominance of farmer elements in this region, the county as a whole is even more backward than the city. A further complication is the special exploitation of the Mexican workers, who constitute an important element in this region and have been separated from the native American workers by barriers of language, customs, and lower living standards. They have been used as strikebreakers on many occasions in the past.

The beginning of the unemployment activities were made in the working-class neighborhoods on the basis of the lack of attempts by state and welfare agencies to afford any relief. The first step was the organization of neighborhood welfare committees, which in turn organized committees to visit welfare and relief institutions to ask for relief action.

First Steps in Organization
The first attempts at organization were made by five people: Halstead, Pirth (a syndicalist), Meyers (of the Opposition of the Proletarian Party), Downing (of the anarchist wing of the I. W. W.), and Jane Rose. With the help of a sympathetic socialist, an assistant, principal, the use of a school for meetings was obtained. Leaflets were printed, distributed from house to house, posted up in the neighborhood stores, and after a week of these preparations a meeting was held. The first response was about forty workers, a number of whom had been in the trade union movement in the past, and one or two had formerly been socialists. The most developed of them were formed into neighborhood committees. More meetings were held, in the same district and in new districts, the attendance increased from 40 to 300-400. After about two months, six districts had been organized into units. Their first functions were to take up the cases of destitute workers who had been thrown off the relief, or had their relief cut, etc.

This phase in a few months assumed very large proportions, and posed before us the question of organizing mass pressure through a centralized and city-wide mass organization. With the first showing of growth, class-collaborationist elements, particularly former cooperative socialists, who are numerous in this region, and former trade union leaders, made their appearance. They proposed to solve the immediate problems of the unemployed through the methods of mutual self-help, offering labor to be furnished by the organized unemployed to the neighboring farmers, who had piled up an enormous surplus to be made in part of the produce. Similar arrangements were to be made with the working of this law. This constitutes one of these contradictions peculiar to American politics.

That the Roosevelt administration may be over-reaching itself in its Recovery program is the opinion of not a few industrialists. The frank skepticism expressed in the frank circles is reflected by Wm. Kiplinger, writing in the July issue of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce's organ. He says:

"We are building up a great system of government-directed artificialities, including inflation, government credits, government competition, government control. Every intelligent person wonders whether and when the system will fall down. There is no factual answer. There are merely sour theories of failure and sentimental hopes of success."

"A majority of well-informed thinkers think this: For the next year or perhaps a year and a half the new schemes will give an impetus to business so that there will be something resembling moderate prosperity. Meanwhile there will be great blunders, great new false relationships, and the cumulative effect of these errors will bring a new set of critical problems a year or more hence."

There need be no doubt that the critical problems that will arise shall constitute added burdens to the shoulders of the working class. Whatever increases in wages will be more than offset by the real wage losses through currency devaluation. Furthermore, there is no doubt that only a relatively small portion of the vast unemployed army can be reabsorbed into any of the occupations created by the application of the Roosevelt program. The unemployed problem will continue to exist as one of the most vexing and unsolvable problems of capitalism.

The American working-class is faced with the maturing of mighty historical contradictions in the capitalist system. The new turn in the policy of capitalism is a keen reflection of this. The new turn must be recognized by the workers and a Marxist estimate of present day conditions made. From the standpoint of class relations, the workers have much to fear from the new economic organization. The reorganization of the state productive and administrative apparatus signifies further weakening of the already weak class position of the workers. The big political and economic struggles are ahead.

of securing state aid. The progressive elements saw in this an opportunity to change the whole trend of the movement away from a semi-legalistic class-collaboration approach toward one of class pressure on the state and local authorities.

Class Collaboration vs. Mass Pressure

A central body, the County Council of the Unemployed Cooperative Relief Association, was organized, and offered affiliation to all the units. Units which at the beginning had attempted to solve their own immediate problems of food, housing, gas, light, water, etc., now began to bring them to the general body. In discussions held once a week, each unit electing a voting delegate and these delegates in turn electing the Executive Board and the officers of the County Council. At that time the class-collaborationist elements dominated the Council and succeeded in keeping the mass of the workers to a policy of dependence on formal legal methods, particularly stressing the preparation of a bill to be submitted to the State legislature. To illustrate the state of mind of the mass of workers at that time, meetings were usually opened with the singing of prayers and of the national anthem. The progressive elements not only joined in this, but by singing louder than any other group were successful in casting ridicule on the ceremony and eventually in getting rid of it.

though big industry has always of factually ignored these laws, except when they have been invoked against labor, now it will be provided with legal instrumentalities for the acceleration of trustification and monopoly at the expense of the small capitalist.

Despite the obvious fact that the Recovery Act favors the concentration of capital, the big industrialists have shown, as we have indicated, a certain reluctance in submitting to the provisions of this law. It concealed grumbling goes on in high places. In many of the large industries, production has been stepped up in order to build a large stock to meet the eventual price rise with a possibly reduced working force when the codes finally go into effect. The anarchic character of capitalist production is shown by the fact that the individual industries are looking out for their own particular interests even though they may be at the expense of the system.

The anomaly in the situation is demonstrated by the petty bourgeoisie which has been throwing its entire support to the Roosevelt program, although it will be driven closer to the edge of the abyss by the working of this law. This constitutes one of these contradictions peculiar to American politics.

That the Roosevelt administration may be over-reaching itself in its Recovery program is the opinion of not a few industrialists. The frank skepticism expressed in the frank circles is reflected by Wm. Kiplinger, writing in the July issue of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce's organ. He says:

"We are building up a great system of government-directed artificialities, including inflation, government credits, government competition, government control. Every intelligent person wonders whether and when the system will fall down. There is no factual answer. There are merely sour theories of failure and sentimental hopes of success."

"A majority of well-informed thinkers think this: For the next year or perhaps a year and a half the new schemes will give an impetus to business so that there will be something resembling moderate prosperity. Meanwhile there will be great blunders, great new false relationships, and the cumulative effect of these errors will bring a new set of critical problems a year or more hence."

There need be no doubt that the critical problems that will arise shall constitute added burdens to the shoulders of the working class. Whatever increases in wages will be more than offset by the real wage losses through currency devaluation. Furthermore, there is no doubt that only a relatively small portion of the vast unemployed army can be reabsorbed into any of the occupations created by the application of the Roosevelt program. The unemployed problem will continue to exist as one of the most vexing and unsolvable problems of capitalism.

The Background of the New Deal Policy

force of all capitalist production—the realization of surplus values, the realization of profits. To check the heavy tendency of the falling rate of profit by preparing for an increase of the mass of profit and an increase in the aggregate capital was the problem. It was tackled first by raising the intensity of exploitation of the workers. A higher degree of rationalization and standardization within industry, new efficiency methods to increase the output per man, together with direct speed-up and even longer working hours, were the measures applied. In a recovery, industry will thus start from a high level of intensity of exploitation. Secondly, an enormous depression of the wage level below the value of labor power was forced through ruthlessly. In this the drop in commodity prices naturally served as a means of facilitation, the heavy unemployment and its competition for jobs did the rest. The result is that on a whole the disproportion between value added by applied labor power and the actual wage paid is constantly on the increase. But what is especially to be borne in mind is the fact that industry starts today from an extremely low wage level.

These were the measures affecting the working class most directly. But there were others worthy of attention from the point of view of studying the background of the present situation. For example, the problem of expansion of credits. Undoubtedly the establishment of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and its billions made available for the bankers and big industrial corporations served this purpose admirably. In the main, however, the huge sums expended went to hush the large metropolitan banking institutions to help them in paying in settlement of previously contracted obligations. The funds expended did not become transformed into productive capital; for during the course of the crisis there was a generally constant drop in new capital emissions, in new financing. Nevertheless, financial capital faces the recovery stage with a greater fluidity of credits. Simultaneously there has been a cheapening of the elements of constant capital by the price fall of commodities and raw materials.

Concentration of Capital
Aside from these points mentioned there is also to be taken into consideration the reorganization of industry and banking already accomplished. With hurricane speed the crisis eliminated the weaker and more antiquated sections of the capitalist structure, countless of small independent producers whom they supported. Industrial mergers, rationalization and standardization were given more favorable conditions, subsidies were made ready for the monopoly enterprises, efforts were initiated to adjust the various sections of industry to better correspond with the whole and branch banking by the big metropolitan institutions began to make real headway. All in all these were important steps as a result of which the organic composition of American capital is becoming higher. But it still remains for the Roosevelt administration recovery policies to cap the climax.

Some pressing steps are yet to be taken by American capitalism to complete the adjustments of its structure of national economy. These are now in the making and those workers who may credulously believe that the departure of methods of the Roosevelt administration, from that of its predecessor, will in any way at all mean a departure from the capitalist imperialist and monopoly basis, will experience some rude awakening. To the extent that these methods are new, precisely to that extent do they also serve much more effectively to reinforce the imperialist monopoly basis of American capitalism.

Higher Living Standard an Illusion
What do these methods imply? First of all the completion and further rounding out of the reorganization program already initiated during the crisis. In this, two measures now on the way lend themselves particularly well, and are being utilized to the hilt, for demagogic propaganda fostering illusions of capitalist liberal generosity. We have in mind the question of a return and a stabilization of the purchasing power of the masses and the reorganization of labor power to the productive forces by reduction of working hours. In regard to the first question what is to be expected? Is it a matter of securing what is abstractly called a decent standard of living for the masses? Not at all as far as the capitalist rulers are concerned. It is simply a matter of securing conditions under which surplus values can be realized, and to that extent to stabilize the purchasing power; but on a level distinctly lower than used to be known as the celebrated American standard.

In regard to the second question, that of working hours, it should be noted that during the crisis with industry running at partial capacity, overproduction still resulted in short order. The relative decrease of employed living labor, compared to the amount of crystallized labor and compared to the amount of capital which it set into motion, became transformed into an absolute decrease of necessary labor power.

ing degree, and the bourgeoisie will fight and is fighting against higher taxes. The French government is being forced to the wall by a choice between reducing expenses, which means an open attack on the civil service employees, and inflation as the short and easy way out of debt. At the same time French capitalism is being forced to a sharper open offensive against wages in the effort to lower costs and prices, while in the other imperialist countries the effort is to raise prices. France may quite conceivably be later than other countries in turning upward from crisis to depression, as it was in entering the crisis.

The crisis in Germany shows little improvement, primarily because foreign trade continues to decline in spite of the most vicious attacks by German capitalism on the proletariat in order to reduce wages to a point where it can compete more effectively in the world market. The financial weakness of Germany is expressed by the fact that gold reserves are 9.2% of note circulation; this means high interest rates as a burden on profits, and increasing difficulty in offering liberal financial terms as a stimulus to exports, which was formerly one of the greatest supports for German trade expansion. Production figures and unemployment statistics (the latter being particularly reliable) show that a little, but very little, progress is being made, in spite of the enormous sacrifices which are being extorted from the workers, in meeting the actual crisis, Italy, in spite of the concentration of control of industry and labor in the "total State", has shown no more ability to deal with the crisis than bourgeois-democratic States; the only difference is that the working class has been ground down further and its resistance broken. Gold continues to leave the country, reflecting the inmost thoughts of capital as to the prospects of the regime. Budgetary difficulties are nearly as much of a problem as in France, and are further increased by the grandiose bluff of the "public works construction program".

for the productive forces. With a huge unemployed army this embodied prospects of the class struggle to develop at a rapid pace against the owners of private property. From this there need be no misunderstanding. It is not the welfare of the working class as expressed in shorter working hours which is the concern of the recovery policies. On the contrary; it is the aim to neutralize the unemployed army by taking off a part of the overcapacity and obtain a better working basis in the interests of capitalism.

The third measure in the way, and a keystone in the industrial recovery policies, is the increase of commodity prices. That is so essential for capitalism for its realization of the profits contemplated for the future. What it will mean to the working class, however, is an entirely different matter. It will form part of the bitter experiences which will be their lot under the New Deal. The rise in commodity prices proceeds both by the way of inflation as well as by setting arbitrary monopoly prices.

In this general program there remains still the one most essential step to be accomplished; that is to increase the ration of American capitalism in world economy. It is not at all out of sight in the New Deal. Granted the re-establishment of confidence, within capitalism, in the process of reproduction, which is now so valiantly aimed at, the conditions will be fully prepared for a gigantic offensive upon the world market. A dress rehearsal has already taken place in the London economic conference.

The period of increasing strains throughout international capitalism is preparing for a period of violent shocks and disturbance, social, political and military. As the Left Opposition has predicted, the cyclical upturn within the framework of capitalism is intimately connected with rising militancy and aggressiveness on the part of the workers. The huge wave of strikes in the United States in the most varied industries and localities, in spite of the illusions offered by the National Recovery Act; the mounting discontent in other countries (in England even the backward farmers are striking against the payment of tithes to the clergy, which have been going on for four hundred years), the growing shadow of approaching war, pile ever-increasing tasks on the shoulders of the Communists, the revolutionary vanguard of the working class. Now less than ever can sectarianism, futile gestures which waste energy, and splitting of the revolutionary forces be tolerated without crushing penalties in the future. Clarity of policy and unity in action are imperatively called for by the immediate needs of the world situation.

Civil War Shakes Cuba; U. S. Ready to Intervene

The political crisis in Cuba appears at last to have reached a definite climax. The pressure of the working class and the petty bourgeois masses aimed at the overthrow of "Butcher" Machado, has thrown a monkey wrench into the impasse by arbitration. Strikes initiated by the revolutionary workers in Havana as a protest against the intervention of Wall Street's viceroy as mediator in the island's politics, spread throughout the island affecting all industries and partaking of the nature of a general political strike. Even the Chamber of Commerce organizations in some places are giving their support to the movement. Mass demonstrations in Havana and other cities have created a situation that at this writing the police and military have been unable as yet to dominate.

Mass Murder

Machine guns are being used indiscriminately against all groups gathering in public places and the list of dead and injured mounts rapidly. While the overwhelming majority of the population is being brought into action, all of the bourgeois opposition groups which are united only in the demand to overthrow the Machado dictatorship, are exerting their chief energies to attempts to canalize the movement and keep it under their control. The Communist party, while not in any sense having the hegemony of even the workers on strike, counts nevertheless with broad sympathies among the masses.

For many months the American imperialists, who have a dominating control of the Cuban sugar industry and of most of the island's minor industries besides, have realized that Machado's regime was in its decay stage and incapable of further serving their interests effectively. Any one of the principal leaders of the opposition (Memecol, Menditea, Gomez), all of whom have extensive interests in the sugar industry themselves together with the imperialists, would be equally willing, given the power, to serve Wall Street interests, and would be able to do so in a less crude and more efficacious manner.

Behind the "Arbitration"

It was the realization that Machado's overthrow could only lead to a long drawn out struggle among those very elements now collaborating in the opposition, which might give the Communists and other extremist elements an opportunity for struggle and growth, that led the Roosevelt administration to seek a means of compromise through mediation. The revolutionary mass movement is not only the workers' protest against the arbitrary interference of the U. S. State Department, but is also an attempt on the part of the Cuban masses to seek the revolutionary way out of the political impasse and the economic crisis which has been continuing in the island ever since the collapse of the sugar industry in 1925.

The colossal failure of American armed intervention in Nicaragua and the scandals attendant on the occupation of Haiti, have made the State Department reluctant to intervene with armed forces in Latin American countries if other methods can possibly be used. However the situation in Cuba may easily develop to a point where Wall Street will demand armed intervention. Steps are already being taken to facilitate rapid movements of armed forces to Cuba on a moment's notice. Several U. S. marine and navy units are already prepared to embark. Washington dispatches indicate that the 1st Artillery Brigade, now in N. Y. State and about 1,000 marines stationed at Quantico, Va. would be the first to be moved.

In this regard the American Communists must raise the slogan "Hands off Cuba".

The Cuban masses require and Street's government in order to overthrow the dictator who until a few scant months ago was able to continue in power, thanks principally to the support of the American imperialists.

Correct Policy Decisive

Our party in Cuba has the opportunity to play a leading role in the struggles now developing in that country. Its influence in the coming period will depend almost entirely on the correctness with which the party reacts to the situation. If the proper slogans are advanced and the correct tactics pursued, the Communist party may well find itself in the direct leadership of the Cuban working class. In order to achieve this, however, a definite break must be made with the errors of opportunism and of adventurism, which find their expression in the confusion of national with class slogans and terroristic tendencies. The Left Opposition of the Cuban Party is conducting an intense struggle for the correct Leninist policy.

BULLETIN

As we go to press, we learn that a horrible machine gun fire from the roof of President Machado's palace moved down hundreds of Cuban demonstrators on the streets of Havana and has aroused the entire country. Martial law has been declared. There is danger of immediate armed intervention by American marines. The Cuban militia has been called out by Machado. The populace is urged to defend the country against "foreign imperialism". The Cuban tyrant thereby hopes to win the anti-imperialist forces to his banner.

The workers are beginning to assume the offensive, relying essentially upon their own mass power,

LABOR'S MIGHTY CHALLENGE

Only a few brief weeks since the Industrial Recovery Act went into operation and there is already a husky crop of powerful strikes such as the country has not witnessed for a long time. Are these the harbingers of coming greater, and more intense, struggles? Unquestionably that is the case.

The workers are beginning to assume the offensive, relying essentially upon their own mass power,

U. S. Anti-War Congress Socialists Withdraw from Arrangements Committee

On Labor Day week end, September 1st to 4th, the "United States Congress Against War" will be held in New York City. The official call of the Congress contains the signatures of the Communist party, a number of organizations which it controls, pacifist groups, the I. W. W., and the Socialist party. Recently the National Executive Committee of the Socialist party withdrew from the united front because of criticism against it contained in the Daily Worker. A few words on how this united front was arranged.

Under the paternal guidance of Henri Barbusse—who will be in the United States for the Congress—Sherwood Anderson, Theodore Dreiser, and Upton Sinclair, members of the American Committee for Struggle Against War, issued an appeal for the September Congress. Suddenly an arrangements committee composed overwhelmingly of Socialist controlled organizations was organized. The Mustelites joined in. Under pressure primarily of pacifist friends of Barbusse in the S. P., lead by Jesse Wallace Hughes of the War Resisters League, the National Executive Committee of the Socialist party joined the united front on the condition that it be given adequate representation on the arrangements committee. This was soon agreed upon. A number of Socialists, Norman Thomas, Julius Gerber, etc. were added to the Committee; a few more Socialists were put on.

Double Game of Stalinists

In the preparations for the Congress the Stalinists played a double game. In the press they continued their old attacks on the Socialists, for the consumption of their own members and "others". At meetings of the arrangements committee they spoke very humbly and even apologized for articles appearing in the Daily Worker attacking the Socialists. This was the picture several weeks ago when the Socialists took the C. P. representatives to task for an article in the Daily and Minor replied by stating that he had not read the article!

Instead of an open appeal to the National Executive Committee of the S. P. by the Communist party for united front against war, the Stalinists employ intermediaries, radical or liberal intellectuals. But this did not help them. The National Executive Committee of the S. P. withdrew from the Congress on the excuse that it was looking for a criticism of it in the Daily Worker of the Socialist leaders. The arrangements committee replied by appealing to the N. E. C. to reconsider its decision. On August 3rd it decided: "That this arrangements committee takes the position that in developing the united front no organization which is carrying out the purposes of the anti-war Congress should be attacked by participating organizations on fields of common work. That all participating organizations shall first place before arrangements committee or the sub-committee empowered to act for it, any and all differences of opinion between the participating organizations relative to the U. S. Congress Against War, before making them public. It is understood, however, that every organization shall be perfectly free to urge its own program with respect to the struggle against war. These assurances which the Arrangements Committee will make effective and which was agreed to by all participating groups including representatives of the Communist party should make fruitful co-operation possible. (Daily Worker—9-8-1933).

Meaning of Non-Aggression Pact

We quote at some length because of the importance of the section. The non-aggression pact could not be more simply written. No criticism "on the field of common work". Does not this mean no criticism of the pacifist and Socialist action and policies on war? Where differences of opinion arise they should first go to the united front committee. Editors of the Daily Worker take note: before writing critical articles of editorials on the anti-war Congress submit it to the arrangements committee! The Stalinists.

Perspectives of the Upturn

By LEON TROTSKY

This analysis by comrade Trotsky was written in August last year as an introduction to a discussion. It retains all its validity today except for the reference to the German trade union question. The demand contained, correct then, has now been obviated by events.

Business cycles in the post-war period have ceased to constitute the normal machinery of capitalist development, insofar as capitalism, in its entirety, is in a period of decay. But this does not mean that economic fluctuations belong to the past. Immediately after the war, it is true, they lost their cyclical and as to the recovery, at least, their universal character. Both these characteristics, however, up to a certain point, at least, are being revived before our eyes.

The present crisis is of world wide character. This means that world economy whose existence was

A.F. of L. Leaders Sanction N. R. A. No Strike Policy!

The American Federation of Labor, under the leadership of Wm. Green and J. L. Lewis, has entered into a no-strike agreement with the Industrial Recovery Administration. It came as an anti-climax to the numerous strikes in various industries, the most powerful being the one of the Pennsylvania miners which involved at the time of the strike some 70,000 men, threatening to extend to embrace several hundred thousand, even engulfing all the steel industry. That struck into the hearts of the capitalists and labor lieutenants alike. They hurried to reach the no-strike agreement. This is a desperate attempt to hamstring the American workers until the industrial codes with their class collaboration and compulsory arbitration machinery is firmly established.

The no-strike truce is to cover all unions and industries and to remain in effect during the period of recovery. How long that is to be no one can predict. It provides for an arbitration board of seven members headed by senator Wagner. On this board are two labor representatives, Green and Lewis—the very ones who lead in selling-out labor's right to strike. This is by no means the first base betrayal performed by these reactionary labor leaders. It is only one more added to the record.

We can still remember the no-strike agreement entered into between the A. F. of L. officials and the Hoover administration at the inception of the crisis. It was stipulated to remain in effect during that period of "national emergency". So there we have it. A no-strike agreement with the bosses and their government during the crisis and a no-strike agreement during the period of recovery. Chain the workers more solidly to the chariot of capitalist exploitation while their aspirations and their endeavors to attain a human standard of living are crushed beneath the wheels of the state machinery of suppression.

That is the policy of the labor lieutenants of capitalism. It hits right into the mitt of the Wall St. executives at Washington.

At the very moment when the truce was being signed the Pennsylvania miners lay bleeding, one killed and many wounded by bullets spewed from guns of private plug uglies hired by the coal and steel barons; striking Pennsylvania horey workers were subjected to tear gas attacks by the police; and striking up-state New York milk farmers were rubbing salt into their limbs, wounded and sore from contact with the state troopers' clubs.

No sooner was the ink on the signatures to the agreement dry than the I. C. F.rick Coke Company struck out from its contents all reference to the union which the miners had organized. It meant that the company has no intention whatever to recognize the miners' right to organize. But the government had no punishment to meet out to defiance from that side. The miners, on the other hand, have in this a clear indication of how their right to organization will fare in the coming arbitration. No sooner was the ink on the signatures dry than the non-union coal operators at the hearing of their code refused to withdraw their open shop qualification from the code.

It is no wonder that the capitalist representatives in the government were eager to obtain a no-strike truce. They recognize perfectly well a labor offensive when they see it. They have first of all the task to satisfy the powerful open-shop trusts which will insist upon moving heaven and earth to prevent unionism from entering their plants. In this the government was fully at the disposal of the trusts. The Washington merry-go-round was set into motion. Airplane to the Pennsylvania strike and, back to Washington to get the signature of the labor leaders, on to Crum Elbow for the approval of the President from his vacation retreat and back to Washington again. It was followed by the labor adviser to the Recovery Administration, McGrady, who covered almost the same route. The fear of an extension of the labor offensive oiled the machinery. It worked well and under high pressure speed. The labor lieutenants of capitalism can now repeat once again: "We do our part".

At first the miners were reluctant to accept the truce. They should not cause any wonder. They have had many bitter experiences of truces and arbitration, and hardly could there be found one example where this sort of intervention has not always served the interest of the bosses. Their reluctance set added machinery into motion. The federal government has opened an investigation into alleged Communist agitation in the Pennsylvania fields. It is to be led by Assistant Federal Attorney Lloyd W. Bryan. In this manner the powers that be are closing in on the workers to lay the basis for permanency of the no-strike policy.

This no-strike truce, by the time it is carried to its final conclusion, will be sure to prove another serious lesson to the American workers. The A. F. of L. leaders will stand out the more clearly in their true light. The role of the state powers as an instrument of coercion will become the more apparent. Its effect will inevitably be to further sharpen the future conflicts bound to develop on a yet much larger scale.

N. R. A. and the Trade Unions Question of Policy is Decisive in the Present Stage

We are entering a new stage in working class developments. This is verified not merely in the appearance of the N. R. A. and the new methods of capitalist co-ordination which it attempts to put into life, but primarily in the new relationship of forces created by the new economic conjuncture. These new methods of co-ordination express the efforts to find new ways of chaining the change in relationship of forces and maintain it within the old bounds.

It is a stage of developing economic struggles over a far flung field which is unfolding before us. At the present moment we see only its small beginnings, however, with a sharpness and acuteness fully indicative of the gigantic tremors which will ensue as these struggles enlarge their scope and intensity. The role that trade unions will play in this next chapter, to be recorded by history in this period, will become one of paramount importance. In the same measure, we can say confidently, will the question of trade union policy be the decisive question of the immediate future. Communists least of all can afford to overlook or ignore this.

No promises can be held out for the upward economic conjuncture. It can be expected only to be of a cumbersome, contradictory nature and heralding deeper plunges into prolonged and more turbulent crises. But that is a question of perspective for which the workers needs to prepare in this present stage. Meanwhile the sharper the action of the masses. The fact of the reduction of unemployment will correspondingly increase the self-confidence of the workers. Even a small change of economic conjuncture in one direction or another does not take place without leaving its mark. The change which is expressed in new workers being hired by the factories breeds a spirit entirely different from the one of the continual lay offs.

With all the efforts of capitalist co-ordination of its economic structure, of creating a gigantic monopoly, the competitive warfare does not cease. It only becomes elevated to a higher stage. On the other hand the workers find themselves in increasing measure united by the process of production. Their interests become constantly hampered down to a more unified level. In this sense the relationship of forces is changing in favor of the workers. The intolerable conditions, however, of the extremely low standard of living imposed upon them during the years of the crisis press ever harder for readjustment. But readjustments are not at all contained in the N. R. A. all demagogic plavoy of higher nominal wages and shorter working hours to the contrary notwithstanding. Readjustments mean struggle. That is what we see initiated today.

It is characteristic that the greatest of the strikes, that of the Pennsylvania miners grew from the demand for the right to union organization. That can be said also to hold true to a more or less degree for other strikes of a smaller scale. In other words under the N. R. A. the workers are taking advantage of the change toward a more favorable relationship brought about by the turn in conjuncture. The elementary instinct of the workers is to translate the fact of their being united by the process of production into unity in organization. Everywhere there is manifested the tendency of workers seeking organization and it is to be assumed that the new conditions created will immensely further and develop this tendency. But in connection therewith the important question arises: Towards which unions will this working class stream gravitate, towards the conservative unions or towards the so-called revolutionary unions, or will it seek new and independent forms?

It should not be difficult to answer this question. The answer depends in the main upon the political maturity of the American working class. And, in this respect we know that we cannot speak of a working class politically mature of having a tradition of socialist consciousness behind it. As a matter of fact we are not here concerned

Jackal Press Howls at Trotsky

The announcements that comrade Trotsky, held in Turkey for five years by Stalin's diplomats, is allowed to sojourn in France, has thrown the Stalinist bureaucrats into confusion. For a week, the editors of L'Humanite, organ of the French C. P., have filled its columns with a torrent of filth. Darnaud, one of the editors of L'Humanite, has been instructed by Stalin's agents to sling mud, to concoct detective stories—a stinking literature of provocation worthy of a white guard. The Political Bureau of the French party which was too impotent to organize the slightest action against Fascism, has stirred itself to hysteria to incite the apparatus against Trotsky.

These articles and these bursts of rage will do much to open the workers eyes to the real policy of the bureaucrats. And where do they look for arguments? They look to the Fascists, to Coty! (the arch-reactionary perfume manufacturer and publisher) Read the articles in L'Ami du Peuple (Coty's paper), listen to the cries of hate from the allies of L'Humanite:

"The traitor Trotsky is given permission to sojourn in France. 'One has the right to demand why the government has revoked its decision by authorizing the traitor Trotsky to sully French soil by his presence. . . .

"It is this wretched creature, who has shed French blood, that they receive in our midst, that they also authorize, it appears, to go to Marseilles and Corsica! (July 23).

Listen to Renaissance, the Russian monarchist daily, the organ of the Gerguloffs:

"The present state of things is such that it is likely that he (Trotsky) will have no lack of visitors. And moreover, perhaps there is reason to predict, that besides those who are expected, there will be others, quite unexpected. . . . July 25).

The Down with the masks! What is behind this campaign, these incitements to murder issued by the political bureau?

That Litvinov sojourns in Royat in the company of Tardieu, very good! That Lunacharsky is officially received on his disembarkment at Paris, perfect! That Muenzenberg obtains a regular passport and the right to carry on his publications, that Paul Schwenk has the authorization, as a Communist deputy in the Prussian Landtag, to organize public meetings in Paris, all very well! Still better, that Radek, a new defender of the Versailles treaty, the order for whose expulsion out of Poland has been cancelled by Pilsudsky, is officially received in Warsaw and entertained by the editor of the biggest Polish bourgeois paper. Yes, all that is very natural: "Socialism in one country" needs that.

France Friend of USSR--Litvinov

We beg our readers to compare these two quotations First is the declaration made by Litvinov in Paris (Le Temps, July 9.).

"Neither our political nor our economic interests clash with those of France in any part of the world. That is why we consider that nothing should stand in the way of the continuation of a political as well as an economic rapprochement."

Further down, it is announced that Herriot is going to undertake an official mission in the USSR. Peri, "theoretician" of the French party explains in L'Humanite, daily organ of the French Communist Party (July 17th):

"It can be said that the role of leader of the anti-Soviet crusade held for so long by French imperialism, has today passed into other hands."

What does this signify? We must affirm that this signifies that the USSR, weakened by the defeats of the international proletariat, is resorting to pacts, scraps of paper, particularly, with France the imperialist, the policeman of Europe and the guardian of the Versailles Treaty. Was it not that vicious enemy of the U. S. S. R., W. Churchill, who just said recently at Paris that the French army was the sole guarantee of the security of Europe?

Peri and Co. lie to the proletariat on the USSR in the situation; but the bourgeois press, all praise the Litvinov, does not conceal its opinion of the Soviet situation. Le Temps, of July 17th, publishes a

Roosevelt's National Police

In the Industrial Recovery Act the Roosevelt Administration has set up a united front between the national government and the capitalists for the purpose of driving wages down to starvation levels. In order to do this with the least possible commotion it is necessary for the government to have its own police, in addition to the army, to use against workers who presume to strike against the attack on their living standards. Such a national police is already being formed.

But it is not the blunt old Hoover Administration that is preparing this new weapon of the bosses. It is Roosevelt who has put through the National Industrial Recovery Act and is directing the capitalist offensive against the workers and now builds up a new machinery of coercion. This shrewd gentleman is now starting a campaign against crime, kidnapping, racketeering, extortion and blackmail. Laws are being prepared giving the government jurisdiction over all crimes interfering with interstate commerce and over all criminal activities involving operations in two or more states.

A liberal interpretation of such laws, and no doubt they will be interpreted with the greatest liberality, gives the government control over all labor disputes. At the time while these laws are being drawn up, the bureaus of investigation, identification and prohibition are being combined into a new Division of Investigation. This new Division will soon swallow up many other bureaus. Most important of all, the new Division of Investigation will have special squads of police to suppress all crimes coming under Federal jurisdiction. In short a national police department is being created. In view of Roosevelt's methods in the recent past, there is every reason to suspect that the main purpose of the new police is not that of stopping kidnapping and racketeering.

However guesses are not needed. The head of this Division of Investigation is John Edgar Hoover. This man was one of the most active of Attorney General Palmer's red baiters in the early twenties. He was responsible for the deportations of Emma Goldman, Alexander Berkman, Ludwig Martens, the Soviet representative to the U. S., and others. He has also served as head of the Bureau of Immigration which has always been notoriously ready to aid the bosses by deporting militant workers. There are few men as capable as Mr. J. E. Hoover for the job of leading a government attack upon the working class. It is clear that with such a man in charge the national police are intended to serve not against the gangsters but against workers who strike for the starvation pay of the N. R. A.

BEHIND CLOSED DOORS
United front plans for common action must be conducted in the open. The workers must fight against any plan to conduct negotiations behind closed doors. No leaders of the working class would ask for such a privilege, only misleaders or ignorant "leaders" would do such. The revolutionary Marxist has nothing to hide from the working class. They conduct their negotiations before the whole working class.

THE CAPITALISTS AND THEIR OFFICE BOYS

The task of overthrowing the capitalist system is a great one. The job of defeating the capitalist agents within our ranks is part of this task. If the revolutionary Marxist is not superior to the capitalist agents within our ranks then we are not yet capable of overthrowing the system that has sent these agents into our ranks. The tactic of the united front is a necessary step when preliminary battles between these two camps are fought. It prepares the ground for united action of the class for the overthrow of the capitalist system.

SITTING AT THE SAME TABLE WITH BETRAYERS

The united front action of the working class is not a moral question. It is a question of bringing about the greatest class pressure possible in order to obtain our objective. Misleaders will be exposed in action. You can talk about misleaders year in and year out and they will retain their followers, but once you get them in different united front actions they can be exposed—providing the Marxists know what to do.

That misleaders, betrayers, and fakers can be elected or self-appointed from their organizations to the united front only proves how capable these fakers are in fooling their workers and how important it is for us to put these fakers to the test of action so the rank and file can see their true worth.

The proper application of the united front is the most effective means of exposing misleaders. It is no crime to sit down at the same table with misleaders. It is a crime if you do not know what to give and take in the united front when you sit down with them.

PARLIAMENTARY AND EXTRA-PARLIAMENTARY ACTIVITY

When we speak of the united front we refer to activity in the extra-parliamentary field and not in the field of parliamentary activity. Participation in parliamentary activity by revolutionists is one of the most delicate and complicated problems. The general rule, in parliamentary activity, is to oppose united front activity. The exceptions are few and far between. Besides this, one must remember that parliamentary activity, as a whole, falls into the category of auxiliary class activity and even this within the framework of the question of when to participate and boycott.

THE QUESTION OF UNITY AND PRINCIPLE DIFFERENCES

Many non-Marxist, but sincere workers are for the united front because they believe we can all get together and become one party fighting the capitalist class. In other words, they propose to do away with all the different political groups and factions and the fight within the political tendencies of the working class. These workers are "half right" and "half wrong". They are correct insofar as the united front tactic brings together different working class organizations for common action against the capitalists. They are wrong, insofar as they think, this tactic will enable the working class to merge all organizations into one big organization. Principle differences are not solved by giving up principles and getting together into one hodge-podge big organization. We would not trade one small organization of active Marxists for the merging of all other organizations into one big hodge-podge. Principle differences are settled in struggle and in action and through the united front. These methods enable the organization and leadership with a correct program to gain the rank and file and expose those organizations that are based upon a wrong program and have misleaders at their head. The united front action puts all organizations to a test and by this test in action the majority of the working class are transformed into one gigantic organization, and the masses are won over to that organization which has a correct program.

If there were no principle difference between organizations there would be no need of a united front. The need would be to iron out the secondary differences and get together into one organization. United front action is the complement of the existence of organizations with principle differences.

We hear from Miss Hughes of the N. Y. Telegram that as a weapon against intervention a Soviet animal trainer is to train seals to divert the direction of torpedoes in marine warfare. The watery seals will probably prove as effective as the official Stalinist seal.

PINCHOT AND LABOR

New Bourgeois Methods in Pennsylvania Strikes

Both from the point of view of the number of strikes and strikers, on the one hand, and the militancy of the workers on the other, Pennsylvania occupies the center of the stage. Within this area are taking place the strike of the Reading hosiery workers and the struggle of the central western miners. In the eastern section of the state small strikes are occurring in the textile and manufacturing industries against sweat shop conditions. The strike of the miners marks the high water mark thus far of the developing working class offensive.

The capitalist class is moving in this area too. From Philadelphia to Fayette County there is the familiar story of police brutality and the viciousness of hired deputies. The armed forces of the state have also been brought into play. Demagogues in the high places of the state bureaucracy and in the ranks of organized labor have been trained on the workers to dull the edge of their militancy. Betrayal too plays its part. These are the time honored methods of "dealing with labor troubles".

But now for the first time a new element has made its appearance. The political hunkies of Mellon and Morgan have acquired a new weapon. They are beginning to use liberal policies which they accompany with deeds. Mrs. Pinchot, the first lady of the state, appears on picket lines and marches with the strikers; she bawls out the head of the Philadelphia police force for his brutality in dispersing strikers. Pinchot himself, after Roosevelt, appoints a lady to the position of state secretary of labor. She carries out a policy "in the interests of the workers" which brings down on her head the charge of being a "strike fomentor". Pinchot sends troops to the mine strike area to "protect the strikers against the deputies". He blamed the strike on efforts to deprive the miners of the rights guaranteed in the National Recovery Act. "The time has gone by when striking miners can be clubbed into submission by deputy sheriffs with the assistance of the national guard and the state police—and it will not come back while I am governor." (N. Y. Times, August 6, 1933.) Bravo! Bravo!

There are some unkind people who say that all this is not meant sincerely, that Pinchot is keeping up appearances and furthering personal political ambitions. They say that Mrs. Pinchot has her eye fixed on a senatorial seat. They say that the appointment of Miss Carr to the position of state secretary of labor was a blow directed at boss Grundy with whose machine Pinchot had broken in pursuit of a "liberal" reputation.

All this may be true. We are not in the confidence of the Pinchots and we cannot say. At any rate we are ready to believe that the servants of the capitalist class do not serve their masters out of altruistic motives.

The Daily Worker takes a somewhat different view from that of Pinchot's critics. The Daily holds to the idea that the Pinchot variety of demagoguery is the familiar brand the capitalists have been doling out for decades. It notices neither quantitative nor qualitative differences. It applies a correct ABSTRACT formula to all situations and gets the same results.

What is actually taking place in Pennsylvania is what Roosevelt is doing on a national scale—the reorganization of American politics from the capitalist side. The capitalists not only talk of labor's rights and needs. They make a sentence of doing something about it. And under cover of these "concessions" they plot and carry through further attacks in the workers.

The whole of the Pinchot policy fits into the Roosevelt labor policy as a finger fits into a glove. Roosevelt calls for class peace while he carries out measures "in the interest of the workers"—the NRA—Pinchot does essentially the same. Only through his wife he goes a step farther; he "intervenes" on the side of the strikers! Pinchot's methods are an extension of Roosevelt's. Why do they do this? They do it, because they foresee a rise of working class struggles. They understand that the workers will make attempts to recover some of the ground they lost during the years of the capitalist onslaught. As possible and where it is not possible they seek to prevent as far as they want to continue the results to a minimum.

At the same time the capitalists are trying to put their house in order to launch their assault on the world market. They need a further concentration and centralization of industry and its administration and a reorganization of labor to the reorganized industrial apparatus at the expense of the working class. To carry through this program they have devised the measures embraced by the New Deal, among them the NRA. And to carry them through they need class peace in a period of rising working class struggles. That is why they try to carry measures through under cover of liberalism. The key to the strategy is summed up in the formula: The Europeanization of capitalist politics to prevent the political development of the working class.

SPECIAL SUB OFFER

SUPPORT THE CLUB PLAN FOR TWO DOLLARS

The Militant Club Plan offers the friends and sympathizers of the MILITANT an opportunity to take advantage of a special talking point to obtain new readers and new supporters for the most important Marxist labor weekly in America. Units of the Left Opposition, workers' clubs and individuals should send two dollars to the MILITANT for four half year CLUB PLAN CARDS. These paid CLUB PLAN CARDS should be carried by each member and sympathizer of the MILITANT and should be used at every opportunity to obtain new subs. You resell these cards for 50c. As soon as the paid card is mailed to the MILITANT the new subscriber is placed on the mailing list.

The Friends of the Militant Club of Chicago and several units are active along this line. What about you? Attention-Workers Culture Club; Spartacus Workers Club; Militant Workers Club; and branches of the Left Opposition.

SUB PAID CLUB PLAN CARDS FOR EVERY MEMBER OF THE BRANCH OR WORKERS CLUB. EVERY SUPPORTER OF THE MILITANT SHOULD CARRY A PAID CLUB PLAN CARD.

CORRECTION

Two errors crept into the article by G. Gourou on the "Left Socialists and Our Tasks," due to a mistake in translation and faulty proofreading.

1. The sentence that reads "The center of the Stalinist faction is characterized by a policy of concessions and zig-zags or by a standstill and it is the most conservative of all centrist formations that have ever existed in the workers' movement" should be changed to read "It is the most stable of all centrist formations that have ever existed in the workers' movement."

2. Wherever the article refers to the Left Opposition within the socialist organizations it concerns the Left wings or Left socialist groupings in the reformist organizations and not the Left Opposition (Bolshevik-Leninists), affiliated to the International Left Opposition.—(Ed.)

A. F. of L. Federal Unions

Federal Labor Unions, chartered directly by the A. F. L., comprising all of the workers within the plant, instead of the organizing of these workers into the several crafts within the plant is the form of organization necessary to meet the new situation under the NRA, according to the A. F. L. labor leaders.

Speaking of the workers engaged in mass production Green says: "There is no way by which these workers may engage in collective bargaining except through the establishment of the federal labor unions affiliated with the American Federation of Labor."

What Green says in 1933 was true as well as in 1913 or 1903. These workers could not be organized effectively into craft unions. The question is, will the federal unions answer the new situation? Is the A. F. L. starting out on a new policy? Green says: "In following such a plan of organization the American Federation of Labor is not in any way departing from the form of organization and traditional policy which it has pursued from the beginning."

The labor "leaders" admit that the craft union is not satisfactory and state clearly they intend to continue the same policy of the last century. Then what is the purpose of the federal unions? The A. F.

L. leaders are blowing life into the Federal Unions as an attempt to substitute this form of organization for the industrial unions. To bring to life the old federal form of organization—to meet the demands of the present situation—which can only be fulfilled by the organization of industrial unions based upon the class struggle, is to use the federal unions as buffers and stumbling blocks for our class. When the Left wing and class conscious workers understand the purpose of the A. F. L. in its attempt to substitute the federal unions for the industrial unions, it can use the federal unions as a skeleton structure for the organization of industrial unions. The A. F. L. leaders will try to dissolve the federal unions into craft unions when they become a menace. The Left wing must use them as an enemy industrial unions.

The only effective answer to the NRA is the organizing of powerful INDUSTRIAL UNIONS with a class struggle policy inside and outside of the A. F. L. according to circumstances and conditions. Industrial Unions with a class struggle policy where Communists as well as other political forces have the right of minority and political expression are means of bringing class pressure upon the slave codes of the NRA.

Strikes Spreading in Massachusetts

Shoe Industry

Boston, Mass.—The New England shoe industry is so complicated that even those close to it can hardly keep up with the new turns that present themselves from day to day. The main cause of this is that there are five unions in the field. The Boot and Shoe (A. F. L.) completely discredited in 1929, has recently lost all but a few shops in Boston, but still remains strong in Brockton and the west. Its history is one of devoted service to the manufacturers. Recently it organized the strike-breakers by agreement with the boss in the Hyde (Cambridge) plant where the National Shoe Workers Association is conducting a strike which has now run into fourteen weeks. In Brockton, its stronghold, it is now losing many members and a new mutual group is forming.

Many Unions

The Shoe Workers Protective Union, strong in Haverhill and Lowell, despite its actions in the past, was able to save itself by militant words protesting its desire for amalgamation when the shoe revolt started.

The National Shoe Association, beginning in Lynn, took over practically all of Lynn, Boston and Chelsea (except two large and a few small shops). The leather workers have organized under the name National Leather Workers Association after the bosses refused to settle with a combined National Shoe and Leather Workers Union. The two unions are closely allied.

In Salem, an independent union exists. This is due to the fact that when they went on strike in January they kept the National out of Salem.

T. U. U. L. Union

And finally, we have the Boot, Shoe, and Leather Workers Industrial Union (T.U.U.L.), which has a small group in Boston, Chelsea and Lynn. In these districts, it settled a few small shops with slight increases, and while these victories (?) were blazoned in the Freiheit, the majority of the shoe workers joined the National.

As the crisis deepened, the shoe workers' conditions reached unheard-of depths. Speed-up, yellow dog contracts, ten dollars a week for skilled men, girls on two dollars a week, and forced deposits for the job. The Boot and Shoe Union legalized these outrages. Revolt was in the air. The Boot, Shoe, and Leather Workers Industrial Union (T.U.U.L.) tried to start a strike in a small shop in Chelsea, then they pulled out some workers in one Boston factory, only to have them return to work when they found out who was leading them. (The Party representatives had not impressed the shoe workers favorably in the 1929 struggles).

In Lynn, the National Shoe Cutters Association, under the leadership of reactionary Mahan, began a campaign to organize the Lynn shoe workers. The whole town turned to its support. Strikes were called and the outstanding feature was the militancy of the rank and file. The Boot, Shoe and Leather Workers Industrial Union (T.U.U.L.) settled one small shop the day the strike was called and then proceeded to antagonize the new union at every step. Instead of entering the new union or working with it, they campaigned for the T.U.U.L. union with the result that they were left with their original small group of revolutionary workers while the bulk of the shoe workers, now in the National were with radical leadership to fight Mahan and his agreements. While comrade Jack McCarthy in Labor Unity complains of the way in which Mahan put over the agreements, he should add that this was made possible by the fact that the party had kept the radical workers from being present. Mahan should publicly thank them for this.

The National Shoe Cutters Association now became the National Shoe Workers Association and proceeded to organize Boston and Chelsea. The response was remarkable. Instead of 1,500 workers as expected, 7,000 came out in answer to the call. Here again the Party comrades missed a great opportunity, and by maintaining a dyed-hard attitude found themselves separated from the workers. When the Protective leadership under the reactionary Nolan saw which way the wind was blowing, they hastened to propose amalgamation in the near future and so save themselves from extinction. They led the strikes in Lowell, Lawrence and Haverhill.

Prospects of Many Strikes

In the last few days the National has begun an attack on the few open shops left in Lynn and in Boston. Also some of the manufacturers are refusing to abide by the decisions of the state board of arbitration regarding back pay. This stand is taken at the same time that the August 1st agreement offered by the union discard arbitration and demand extensive betterment of working conditions. Thus undoubtedly the immediate future will be marked by many strikes.

T. U. U. L. in the meantime has shifted its position and the members have all gone into the National Shoe Workers Association to

FROM THE MILITANTS

Labor Shows Militancy in Los Angeles Conflicts

Los Angeles.—The seventh week of the strike at the Golden Broom Millinery Shop finds the workers with spirit high and ranks intact. Picket lines have been maintained in the face of the "Red" squad, which probably is the most degenerate collection of strikebreakers in the country.

Eight women have been arrested. The picket line has been subject to most brutal attacks, in which pickets, women as well as men have been slugged and beaten. The events of Friday, July 24, will give an idea of the activities of the "Red" Squad as well as the courage and valor of the strikers.

At 5 o'clock as the picket line was forming, Pfeiffer, lieutenant of the "Red" Squad began donning a pair of gloves. Every picketer knows what that means. The gloves cover brass knuckles. Unflinchingly the strikers maintained their ranks. Squad cars rolled up, twice unloaded from these cars. With face pale the picketers continue.

"Clear the Streets"

"Clear the streets, officers!" commands Pfeiffer. The street is "cleared". Fighting every inch of the way the picketers are forced down the street. On the corner of Eighth Street, the picketers resistance increases. Pfeiffer becomes polite-stricken. "Take your saps out officers—and use them," he shouts. No picketer is intimidated.

The chairman of the strike committee is punched. The picketers demonstrate. Brass knuckled fists strike and blackjacks fly. Comrade C. Curtis is knocked to the ground. He recovers his feet and is whisked off to a doctor where a number of stitches are taken into his scalp.

The picket line stands its ground. The next day all the picketers are there again, early in the morning. Spanish and English speaking, young and old, in a display of solidarity, that is making working class tradition on the west coast. Old time western rebels pay a tribute as the most militant strike in Los Angeles since the McNamara trial. In the heart of reaction in Los Angeles the "white spot" of Harry Chandelers Los Angeles Times to maintain a picket line is a heroic deed. The tribute is well earned.

General Strike Needed

Every militant in the entire needle trades is watching this strike. One thing becomes obvious and that is, that in order to firmly establish union conditions it is necessary to project the idea of a general strike into the millinery industry. Faced with the highly organized association it is absolutely necessary to organize all workers in the entire industry. In the millinery trade the New Deal is a joke. The minimum the bosses agreed to in their code is $2 lower than the minimum for women in California. The idea of a general strike will undoubtedly find a fertile field awaiting it in the underpaid, speed-up millinery workers.

Agricultural Workers Strike

The recent strike of the 5,000 agricultural workers has been ended with a "victory" for the strikers and the recognition of a union formed under the aegis of the Mexican Consul. Wage rates had been increased to a minimum of $1.50 for a nine hour day, with all overtime and part time paid at the rate of 20 cents an hour. Before the ink was dry on the agreement the ranchers began breaking the contract.

The situation is still ripe for an aggressive strike. The workers demands have not been satisfied yet—not by far.

T. U. U. L. Outwitted

The T.U.U.L. Agricultural Workers Union was completely outwitted by the Mexican Consul. The leadership of the T.U.U.L. while courageous in action was very weak in strategy. Now it is necessary to make a quick shift in the orientation of the Agricultural Workers Union.

The Archbishop Benjamin Again

About a month ago the Militant printed an account of a meeting held in New York by the local P. S. U. The feature attraction was a eulogy of the Soviet regime by the Archbishop Benjamin, a self-confessed, unabashed Wrangelite priest. At that time the exact nature of the services His Eminence had rendered the White Guard troops of General Baron Peter Wrangel was unknown to us. Nor did the meager notices of the meeting in the Daily Worker enlighten us in this respect.

Some idea of his faithful devotion to the Soviet cause in the dark days of the Civil War may be gleaned from a brief passage in a recent history of the counter-revolution and intervention. "The begin the uphill fight which they should have undertaken in the days of the strike. There they find a militant rank and file willing to listen to them."

Against this background the present problems are (1) those of amalgamation, (2) those connected with the agreements which terminate August 1, and (3) those presented by the federal government in its industrial code.

An Example of the New Deal

in Operation

Chicago, Ill.—In Chicago, the New Deal, with the N. R. A. as its principal weapon, is now in full swing, attended by much enthusiasm on the part of gullible workers and prosperity hungry employers. Many firms have signed up, and are now operating under the blanket code; while others are preparing to function under individual trade codes.

Where employees have been working more than forty hours, exclusive of certain types of vocations, it will mean shorter hours, with the promise of no reduction in pay and a possible increase in the near future. However, in actual practice, it looks like the same old marked cards are being used in the New Deal.

Hoax of Employment

For example, for many years, in the large Chicago Department stores, it has been customary to hire the great majority of the salesforce on commission basis. Until the great depression set in, some small drawing account or stipend was allowed, but in most cases, this has been taken away. The average customer, unfamiliar with this pay arrangement, on seeing the great number of salespeople in attendance, would naturally conclude the establishment had a large pay roll. Much credit has been taken by the owners and managers of these stores for employing large numbers of employees, with a resultant large pay roll. Merely cheap propaganda.

By working their help on the commission basis, the store paid nothing to such employees unless earned in sales. Even then, the reimbursement has been very small, little more than a bare living, and that gradually reduced by cuts in the commission rates. To add to these miserable conditions, during periods of large sales promotions, extra help has been added on a similar basis, thus making it difficult for the regular force to take advantage of such sales to increase their meager pay and make up for former losses.

300 Workers Laid Off

Now, the blanket code stipulated by the Roosevelt Recovery Plan is being forced on the workers. This means a minimum wage must be paid to all employees of the store. What has been the result? One large store, specializing in low-price merchandise, has accepted the code and has turned out approximately 300 salespeople, many of whom have been with the store for many years.

This same scheme is and will be perpetrated by other stores, offices and factories, resulting in the speed-up process, putting more work and increased responsibility on fewer employees. The administration has plainly warned against speed-up methods and assures the workers they will be protected against this evil. We must not be deceived by this sort of talk.

There is a promise of shorter hours and increased pay. In fact, a veritable paradise awaits the worker, whether he wears a white collar or blue shirt, if he will only rest his confidence in Franklin Delano and allow the great white prophets to guide his destiny.

How long will it take the average worker, especially those now on the Roosevelt bannwagon, to realize the awkward position into which he has been cast? How far distant is the time of disillusionment? While his hours are decreased, and his pay stabilized at the former figure, or possibly increased, he must be made to realize that all the policies of the present administration are pressing forward to a higher cost of living, resulting in a lower standard of living for the working class. Only when the worker begins to realize how little his pay is returning him in necessities of life and the few luxuries desired, will he question the fake altruism of the present government, spokesman for the ruling capitalist class.

While liberals, socialists and labor fakers are tooting their horns and shouting hymns of praise in support of Roosevelt and his New Deal, the Communist party and its factions, particularly the Left Opposition, with its correct Marxist background must rally to the fight to assist in the early destruction of this mirage now being foisted on workers blinded by the glib embellishments of a program to beat down the proletarian class and some elements of the petty bourgeoisie.

Strikes are being outlawed and discouraged. The now gullible workers must be taught that only by struggle can their lot be improved. This is where all organizations of Left and revolutionary tendencies must play leading roles in taking advantage of the bankrupt tactics of capitalism and prepare for its complete liquidation.

YOUTH CLASS IN BOSTON

The Marxian Youth Club in Boston, Mass., will begin a class on the History of the Left Opposition on Monday, August 7th at 8:30 P. M. The class will treat with the fundamental points of difference between the Left Opposition and Stalinism. All young workers are invited to attend and learn. The class will be held at 11 Kenwick St.—To get there take Beacon St. car to St. Mary St., and walk back one block.

Letters from Fascist Germany

From the Lower Rhineland.

June 28, 1933.

On June 26 the information department of the S. S. (Schutz Staff—Fascist Special Corps) succeeded in tracking down the district center and information service of the C. P. G. in the Lower Rhineland. Most of the persons connected with the latter were arrested. At the same time there were arrested in our city a former alderman and a printer. They were charged with the production of Communist leaflets—The Steel-Helmet (nationalist) Workers Camp was dissolved and several of the leading figures imprisoned. The arrests took place under the direction of the S. A. (Storm Troops—Fascist Regulars), who forced their way into the camp with loaded pistols.—The "red air raid over Berlin" is designated in these parts as a provocation of the government.—All workers are disappointed in the utter failure of internationalism. No support anywhere for the German workers! So it happens that sanctimonious protests of foreign social democrats, like that of Juhau in Geneva, is looked upon by many as a ray of light. Everyone is asking: Where is the Soviet Union?

Beginning of July 1933

Those who believe that the Fascist terror is declining, are mistaken. Today a big bicycle raid took place in the proletarian quarters here. Everyone suspected of being a Communist had his bicycle or motorcycle confiscated. The inhabitants here feel like prisoners. The police come every day, and under one pretext or another, sneaks from one worker's rooms to another's, makes arrests, sets the arrested free and then arrests them again, etc.—In a large concern, stickers considered "hostile to the state" were found on the walls of the women's toilet. 18 girls were arrested, three were held in prison for a long time in an effort to get confessions out of them.—In a suburb, six Communists were arrested by S. S. men right on the street, brought to an armory and from there, as heavily wounded, to the local jail.—Political prisoners are no longer allowed to receive visitors or mail, on the grounds of a "certain incident".—In Duesseldorf, several corpses were found near the Griefenberg woods. They were the bodies of persons formerly belonging to the Communist group "North-West Forward". An old comrade, Seif, who was over 60, and had one time been the leader of a workers' concert band, was found dead, with a fractured skull.

FROM SAXONY

At the time of the raid of the People's House, all red flags, books, safes were confiscated. Workers arrested were made to say the Lord's Prayer and to shout "Heil, Hitler!"

The S. A. troops clipped the hair on the workers' heads in the shape of the swastika. The workers were then forced to gather horse-manure over a distance of more than a hundred meters with their bare hands, to smear the walls with it and then to scrub the walls. In the course of this, they were beaten bloody, and forced to beat one another and clip each other's hair. A S. P. G. worker who put on a swastika emblem so as to be able to proceed to work unhindered was found out and sent to the hospital with grave injuries. A worker from a "Proletarian First Aid (Medical)" group has his hands cut up "so that, you jack-ass, you won't be able to bandage anyone any more". Gauze and medicaments were taken away from him.

Days after these raids, scraps of

Threaten Deportation of Penna. Militant

Antonio Bellussi, a militant Italian worker of Luzerne, Pa. is being held for deportation for his activities on behalf of the labor movement by the federal immigration authorities of the New Deal government. Once again it is clearly revealed that despite its liberal phrases the Roosevelt government differs only by a thin veneer from the open deportation policies of the Hoover-Doak administration.

The case of comrade Bellussi shows in bold relief that any capitalist government in the United States, irrespective of its public declarations, follows a policy of victimizing the foreign born worker, sowing seeds of race hatred between him and the native born worker in the factory, mine and workshop, and deporting him when he fights in the interests of his class to the Fascist land of his origin where he is thrown to the tender mercies of the butchers and murderers of militant workers that hold sway in those countries. Only the mass movement of the workers can cement the ties between the native and foreign born workers.

The workers must come to the defense of Bellussi, stay the hand of the deportation agents and keep him from falling into the hands of Mussolini's hangmen.

No Abatement in Terror, Workers Feel Effect of Party Failure books torn up, flags and papers destroyed, and bills of skin, strands of hair and large puddles of blood could be seen in the courtyards. A priest from Z., for many years a member of the Nazis, was thought to be a Rabbi because of the beard he had grown. The S. A. lugged him down from a street car and cut off his good Teutonic beard. Badly mangled proletarians were quartered with the insane. Their dependents were given to understand that they could get their release only upon signing a statement that they had not been maltreated. Workers put under "protective arrest" had to pay 2 Marks per day for "protection". In the concentration camps—constant torture, constant inquisitions. For food—mostly potatoes, to be peeled by hand. Any visitors allowed can see and speak to the prisoners only in the presence of Nazi attendants. In the evening the workers are made to stand at attention and to sing patriotic and Fascist songs, all under the threat of blackjacks. When the trade union headquarters and printshops were occupied, the social democratic workers were seized with panic. They had never

The Importance of the 6 Hour Day Slogan Under the N.I.R.A.

Under the pressure of capitalist rationalization of industry and the great swath which the crisis cut in employment, the organized labor movement in its larger part has turned toward the shorter work day as a means of absorbing into industry some part of the great army of unemployed.

The Socialist party and the A. F. of L. have officially gone on record for the six hour day, five day week. It goes without saying that the economic development of the United States makes possible not only a six hour day but even a shorter one.

The blanket code provides a thirty five and forty maximum hour week. Most of the codes submitted provide for forty hours. Thirty-five and forty hour maximum are stagger systems. They will not absorb the unemployed workers. The spokesmen for the electrical workers union stated that to absorb the unemployed in that trade an 11 hour maximum was necessary! On the other hand a forty hour maximum is an increase in hours in some trades.

The contradiction between the official position of organized labor and the labor provisions of the N. I. R. A. creates the condition for a struggle for a shorter day in the interest of the working class. But there is no struggle for the six hour day. Instead the labor fakers make a pretense of opposing the hours stipulated in the various codes. Sidney Hillman appeared before the National Recovery Administration and attacked the forty hours demanded by the bosses on the ground that the average number of hours in the men's clothing industry in 1932 was a fraction over 37. To put men back to work he proposed 35! Others like John L. Lewis have come forward as the champions of the thirty hour week. They are of two kinds. Those that qualify the demand for the thirty hour week by stipulating a five day week or a six day week are making demagogic use of the slogan to retain their leadership and their hold over their followers. Those who do not embellish their fakery with these qualifications are trying to put over a stagger system on the workers. For a maximum of thirty hours a week is not at all the six hour day, five day week. It may and most likely will be a three day week of ten hours.

The reasons for the absence of a militant struggle around the slogan of the six hour day, five day week are many. The A. F. of L. and S. P. bureaucrats are not going to conduct struggles if they can avoid them. And they will lead those workers force upon them only to sell them out or steer them into channels as little harmful to the capitalist class as they can manage. The illusions sown by the NIRA also tend to keep the workers in a state of expectant and hopeful passivity.

But, deeper than these reasons lies the failure of the Communist party to give a correct analysis of the situation, to foresee the blows of the capitalist class and arm the workers with a correct policy and the correct slogans. The party's trade union policy isolated it from the organized working class movement. On the other hand from the beginning of the crisis the party staked its cards on the unemployed movement and attempted to build it as a movement separate and apart from the struggles of the class as a whole and the organized trade union movement. In pursuing this orientation it made unemployment insurance its central slogan. Later it added immediate relief. But at all times in this period it rejected the slogan of the six hour day five day week.

In our thesis for our second na-believed that Fascism would step right over their trade union headquarters. Among the Communist workers, many said: "Good for them. It won't hurt the swine." But these sentiments of hatred were soon overcome by feelings of being deserted and betrayed. Although the main guilt has to be ascribed to the social democratic leaders, many Communists also accuse their own leadership. Many say that it was necessary to talk less about united front and to do more about it. In a united front, they feel, concessions would have been made from both sides. But the leaders did not want this and now we have: misery. Our cuss and say: "Yes, the leaders could talk big; but now when it is becoming dangerous, they take the money and beat it out of the country." Work in the party has in some parts ceased altogether. The comrades avoid one another. Many think that Fascism will rule only for a short time and that then they will find each other again. Others are afraid because of the Nazis. As to the slogans ordered to be smeared over the walls like "The Red Front Fighters League Still Lives", and the distribution of leaflets calling for a general strike, many have a great aversion towards them and consider them as provocations, because they always accompanied with new persecutions.

The Importance of the 6 Hour Day Slogan Under the N.I.R.A.

dional conference we held out the perspective for what was then the coming period of struggles by the workers against the capitalist offensive. We are now entering that period. The wave of strikes is assuming the character of an offensive. Nearly all of them center around wage increases, shorter hours and union recognition.

In its Open Letter to the Central Committee of the C. P. on February 15, 1931, the Left Opposition with regard to the question of a central slogan and its relation to the stage of the movement: "In each tactics must lay the basis for correct preparation and direction of the next one." And in line with this idea the Opposition proposed "The central immediate demand must be the six hour day without reduction in pay." (Today it is necessary to demand increased pay to keep step with the rising cost of living). And the opposition has consistently advanced this slogan as the means of uniting the employed and the unemployed.

The failure of the Stalinist leadership of our party to lay the basis in the past period for the transition to the present one is the reason the party has been unable thus far to influence the workers in their attitude toward the NIRA. It also explains the failure of the party to build a united movement of the employed and unemployed workers. But the Stalinists have learned nothing from their blundering. Yesterday the six hour day slogan was a propaganda slogan, a slogan of preparation for action. The Stalinists rejected it as counter-revolutionary. They adopted the slogan of the seven hour day. Later it changed its slogan from the seven hour day to the shorter workday with no reduction in pay (Daily Worker of April 8, 1933).

For a time the party was able to get by with this ambiguous and confusionist slogan. But the NIRA gave it its quietus. The codes are specific. The Stalinists who force nothing and reel under the blows of the class struggle were taken by surprise by the Act. In their reaction to it the bankruptcy of their position in the trade union question and the shorter workday was exposed.

Today they are trailing not only the reformists and the labor fakers but even the capitalists. Their policy on the shorter workday is entirely empiric. It varies with each industry and each trade and each code. And in nearly every case it trails the labor fakers. Dubinsky appeared before the NIRA and spoke for the 30 hour week. Hyman of the Industrial Union spoke for the 35 hour week according to the Freiheit and 33 according to the Daily Worker. McMahon of the U. T. W. spoke for a thirty hour week. Ann Burlak of the N. T. W. U. asked for a 30 to 40 hour week.

On the other hand Powers, chairman of a delegation of workers in speaking on the shipbuilding code, demanded the six hour day, five day week (Daily Worker, July 24, 1933). And two days later the New York Times and the Daily Worker reported that Alex Nara of the Lumber Workers Union of the Northwest in speaking on the lumbermen's code, demanded "That the six hour day and five day week be established for the industry as a whole."

The lack of a correct policy by the Stalinists on the question of the shorter workday should be clear. In this respect the party can record only failure. The party is unable to influence the workers in their attitude toward the NIRA. It is seriously handicapped in exposing the fakery of its provisions. It has allowed the reformist and labor fakers to make capital out of the shorter work day for their own

Powerful Anti-Fascist Front in Chile

(Below is an appeal of the National Executive Council of the Anti-Fascist United Front in Chile issued to the workers of that country which can very well serve as a model to be followed by the revolutionary movements of the more advanced countries. This united front was organized at the initiative of the Left Opposition of Chile and the ideas that it advances are primarily those of the Left Opposition.—Ed.)

"The working classes of Italy, Poland and Germany have felt the painful and bloody experience of Fascism.

"Workers: democrats, socialists, Alexanderists, Communists, anarchists or an other tendency—your elementary duty is to defend your family your wages, your class organizations and above all your right to life.

"Exploited comrades, against the feudal bourgeois united front of hunger, reaction, terror and war—strengthen the anti-Fascist united front wherever you work, build committees of struggles for your every day demands and against Fascism.

"The organization participating in the united front will hold preparatory meetings leading up to a great demonstration which will take place on July 1st.

"These are the objectives of the struggle of the Anti-Fascist front

"1. Dissolution and immediate disarmament of the republican militia.

"2. Abrogation of all repressive laws, full freedom of organization, press, to strike and assembly and amnesty for all political prisoners;

"3. For the six hour day, against the cutting of wages and for their proportionate increase to meet the needs of the working class.

"4. For better treatment and relief of the workers, the employees, the unemployed and their families.

"5. Abrogation of all taxes and tariffs on commodities of prime necessity.

"6. Put an end to the seizures of land from the peasants and Indians lower by 50 percent the taxes, the ground rents and the mortgages.

"This program is jointly signed by the following organizations:

"General Confederation of Workers—Workers Federation of Chile—Communist Left (Chilean Section of the I. L. O.)—Communist Party (Chilean Section of the C. I.)—Socialist party—Students Federation—General Association of Chilean Teachers—J. W. W.—United Building Workers Committee—General Union of Cabinet Makers—General Union of Bakers—Employees Federation—Leather Workers Union—Tile Workers Union—Carpenters Defensive Union—Journemen Tailors Union—Young Communist Federation—Founders Defensive Union."

ends and in the interests of the capitalists.

Serious struggles of the workers against the slavery which the NIRA will impose on them are ahead. If the party is going to discharge its duty toward the class it must break through its frightful sectarian isolation. At present it is travelling in the opposite direction. One of the first steps to change the course is a serious analysis of the past course and open admission that its policy on the shorter workday was false. Analysis like the bureaucratic whitewash of the Open Letter only make the confusion deeper. The party must adopt the slogan of the six hour day, five day week with increased pay and approach the A. F. of L. and the S. P. with a serious offer of a united front struggle for it. That is the road to defeat the attack which lies hidden in the wooden horse of the NIRA.

A Delegate Visits the Soviet Union

From the report of a foreign Communist, member of one of the May delegations which visited the U. S. S. R.

Reception at the station—music, the "Comintern" song (it is now being sung no less often than the Internationale), banners, dancing, pioneers, Comsomsols. At the same time, a crowd of more or less unconcerned onlookers, silent, passive, workers for the most part. Although I am joyfully moved by everything that is going on, I cannot overlook the difference between these two groups. One's attention is caught at once by the bad clothing; almost nobody has whole shoes. Those who are better dressed always have a briefcase in their hands. When we march in columns through the streets, with music and accompanied by enthusiastic Comsomsols—the same picture. Indifferent groups of people on the sidewalks, as far as I can see. One comrade tells us with indignation, "Trotzky is shown in a caricature next to Hitler!" Another says, "You simply cannot imagine how great the potential forces of the Opposition are!" He says it in a half-regretful tone. Fear!

Pessimism and Tiredness
A competent comrade, who works in the film industry, tells us that there has been no progress of late; the films have had to give up a great deal. The dominating tendency is: away from life, from reality; the public is also tired of "heavy" revolutionary subjects. "It is false to believe that slogans or directives come from above to this end; it is simply that pessimism and tiredness have accumulated among all, particularly the intelligentsia." And, after a brief interruption, "By the way, this reflects the economic situation!"

It was very difficult in the winter. Even the privileged foreigners received, for each two persons, eleven pounds of meat a month. The foreign worker is not able to stand the conditions under which the Russian worker has to work. Along with the fact that the Soviet Union had been painted to him as a Socialist paradise, it is not surprising that a number of workers and foremen who returned to Germany have joined the Fascists and are taking an active part in the struggle against Communism.

The difficulties of the newly-arrived foreign worker are especially enormous at the beginning. Only to secure his midday meal, he has to run for days from one office to another, from one organization to another. In general, one of the greatest difficulties in every kind of work is the red tape. It is still goul where there is some initiative from below.

At the Marti shipbuilding plant in Leningrad, thanks to local initiative, a sanitary organization was created. The plant itself built the necessary apparatus, including complicated radiologic machinery. This fact, which shows the extent of local initiative, also shows the disorganization of economy. The production of this apparatus in a factory not designed for it naturally caused tenfold higher costs.

We were brought into a bourgeois hotel with orchestra, waiters in rail-coats, etc. An unpleasant contrast to real life. The hotel is intended for the use of foreigners, but the guests are for the most part Soviet and party officials.

Poverty on Sidewalks
On the streets there is much poverty, many sidewalk vendors of matches and cigarettes many homeless people in rags, some as young as 15 to 18 years old. No one concerns himself with them. Even when they are taken away by the militia, they are released again in a day or two. Many peasants with bundles, and in rags, who have come on foot or by rail from the village, sit around on the steps, blocking the traffic with their bundles. They are waiting—for what?

Although I know the Russian language well, the interpreters and accompanying functionaries do not permit any contact with the "outside world". When one asks the interpreter, "Who are these people in rags?", he invariably answers, "Kulaks". A beggar approached our group! "What did he ask?" "He asked me to show him the way", the interpreter answered. Another poor fellow comes along. A woman interpreter steps up to him, takes his hand, and draws him aside. She is putting on a performance of "meeting the acquaintance". We, who came along as a front, understood this and were seized by a deep feeling of shame. We did not look at each other.

In Moscow there is more life than in Leningrad, and living is easier. The people are better dressed, and the shops are not so poverty-stricken. But hours before they open there are enormous lines standing before them. I saw such lines a hundred yards in length and more. The biggest lines are in front of the shops that sell bread without cards.

No Admittance

In Leningrad we wanted to visit the Putilov Works. On the excuse that part of the delegation was tired, this was refused us. The real reason for the refusal was as follows: The Putilov Works were for a time the scene of constant visits. A number of incidents took place. The Putilov workers saw many foreign delegates, who came from capitalist countries, well dressed, well fed. Pointing out that they were more poorly dressed and ill-fed, they put corresponding questions to the foreigners.

The show windows are poor and dirty. Many portraits of Lenin and of Stalin, more of Stalin than of Lenin. One of my acquaintances, a German Communist who has been working a long time in Russia, tells me, "Do you know, there are many people here who have no love for Stalin, there are very many for whom it is better not to speak of Stalin at all. But Lenin is holy, he cannot be touched...."

Why They All Climb On N.R.A. Bandwagon

1. The bankers support the NRA by agreeing to loan more money to obtain more interest.

2. The manufacturers agree to support the NRA by producing more commodities to obtain more industrial profits.

3. The wholesalers agree to support the NRA by selling more commodities to obtain more commercial profits.

4. The retailers agree to support the NRA by selling more commodities at higher prices to obtain more profits.

5. The landlords agree to support the NRA by renting more property to obtain increased rents.

6. The government, the state as the executive committee of the capitalist class passed the NRA in an attempt to save a sick and tottering capitalist system, to establish a class collaboration machinery to hold in check the workers, to eliminate the small producers, and to prepare for a greater international struggle.

7. The labor leaders support the NRA, because they are agents of the capitalists in the ranks of the working class.

8. The farmers will support the NRA if they can obtain higher prices for their products—so they can pay the bankers the money they owe them.

9. The workers—? If they don't support the NRA they are unpatriotic, if they strike they will be outlawed. The workers are asked to support the NRA to enable the capitalist to get out of the crisis—by taking the burden on their backs—in order to compete with the other imperialists on the world market.

economic activity.

The experience of the London Conference reinforces the Roosevelt policy of national concentration and mobilization, and at the same time indicates what its next phase will be. The policy in its full form is—to consolidate American capitalism nationally before proceeding to a new attack on Europe.

It is clear that this attack will take a wide variety of forms—financial, commercial, diplomatic, and military. Correspondingly the preparations for the attack cover a wide range—big navy program, reforestation camps, banking laws, railroad coordination, but above all, the NRA, the unparalleled agency of the capitalist State for the enslavement of the working class.

Roosevelt himself has let no opportunity pass to emphasize the connection between his program and the preparations for war. His inaugural speech openly asked for war-time powers; he linked up the reforestation camps with the army by putting the CCC (Civilian Conservation Camps) under the control of army officers, whose trade paper, the "Army and Navy Journal", boasts of the efficiency of the army in militarizing the untrained city youth; the one tangible result of the famous 3 billion-dollar "public works" program so far has been planning for the expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars for armaments, tying up war preparations and the Roosevelt way out of the crisis in a very significant manner; and the Peace Boards now being organized under the NIRA are modeled on the War Labor Boards of Gompers, and say so openly. Even the administration of the NIRA is entrusted to a man who represents the double exploitation of the worker, as a capitalist and as an army man, General Hugh S. Johnson of the U. S. Army and the Moline Plow Co., a true representative of the double face of the Roosevelt program. The American eagle, holding the olive branch of class collaboration in one claw and the arrows of war in the other, is the genuine symbol of NIRA, not the inflated bluebird which decorates the grocery shops.

The closing of the London Conference, and the manner of its closing, constitute a milestone on the road toward the international conflagration toward which all this preparation and mobilization is pointing. No class-conscious worker ever had any illusions as to the possibilities of success of this effort to solve the contradictions of the capitalist world, in the agony of its world-wide crisis, by peace and mutual agreement. But now the demonstration has been made, the academic possibility of international understanding has been eliminated. War has been brought by that so much nearer.

Just as the capitalist class, its executive committee, the State, in America recognize by their actions how closely the question of war is interwoven with the question of the issue out of the crisis, so must the American working class link its struggle against the NRA as a weapon of capitalist exploitation with its struggle against war. Against the class-collaborationism and social-patriotism of the bourgeois ideology which the ruling class is trying to force deeper into the ranks of the working class, with the help of reformist trade-unions and the Socialists, we must build up the working-class organizations of defense and offense, the militant trade union and the mass Communist party, posing the class demands: Higher wages and relief, the six-hour day and the five-day week, unemployment relief and unemployment insurance, the fight against Fascism and the fight against war.

The N.R.A. and Trade Unions

merely with the smaller section of skilled trades but with the broadest strata of the working class. It is the politically undeveloped workers, who are yet, at least to an extent, captivated by illusions of the N. R. A. who are just breaking away from their former capitalist ideology; it is these workers who are being set into motion and who are gravitating toward the unions. Their direction will inevitably be toward the conservative unions. That is already indicated in the Pennsylvania strikes. They cannot be expected as yet to take the step all the way to militant unionism, nor as yet to seek new independent forms.

Will this not imply a revival and growth of the American Federation of Labor? Undoubtedly it will. Moreover, to a certain extent it will change its basic character in that it will record an influx of proletarians from the heavy industries. What will emerge will be an A. F. of L. altered in composition and compelled to make certain organizational readjustments in order to measure up to new conditions. To a certain degree it will be compelled to give way to pressure from the ranks. Furthermore, a pressure in a militant direction will inevitably assert itself as the struggles grow, and stand as a heavy counter-weight to the capitalist ideology and policy of the leadership. The continued castigation of the A. F. of L. as a company union, and conclusions drawn accordingly, as performed by the official Communist party leadership, in no way solves the problem of attitude to this union. It only adds further confusion and isolation to the militants. It will be said, and well founded upon past experience: The A. F. of L. leadership will continue its policy of betrayal, it will continue its service as labor henchmen of capitalism. True enough, one cannot hold out any hope for a change of outlook in this respect. But betrayals have been facilitated essentially by being left unchallenged from the militants voluntarily remaining on the outside. Under such conditions the reactionary policies of the leadership remain entirely dominant over the mass movement. And, on a whole, that is just the salient fact, the leadership is still dominant in the movement and determine its ideology. The problem is to effectively challenge this leadership and infuse the mass movement with a new militant ideology and lead it to political consciousness.

This poses the old problem again before the Communist movement, but in a new and more pressing form. The place of the Communists first of all within the mass movement. It is therefore necessary to say to the leaders of the official party that now an end must be made to the suicidal and fatal T. U. U. L. policy. It is a splitting policy. It must be substituted by a unity policy. Trade union unity is becoming the paramount issue. The opportunities for its being carried into life are at hand. No one would propose an outright liquidation of all T. U. U. L. unions in disregard of the question of relationship of forces. But the general orientation must be for unification, away from the revolutionary paper unions and for the Left wing to function within the mass movement.

The prospects are excellent for the workers' struggles to deepen and broaden in the coming period.

The Suicide of N. Skrypnik

A Striking Revelation of the Degeneration of Stalinism

On the 7th of July, N. Skrypnik committed suicide. In 1901, Skrypnik, a student, joined the revolutionary movement and soon after became a professional revolutionary, a Bolshevik. He was exiled several times and escaped several times. He spent five years in Siberia. The official biography of Skrypnik states that he took an internationalist position at the beginning of the war and participated actively in the October Revolution. From 1920 up till his death he was Peoples Commissar in the Ukraine. He was not only a member of the Central Committee of the Soviet Union, a member of the Political Bureau of the C. P. of the Ukraine, but also a member of the E. C. C. I. Only a few months ago his sixteenth anniversary was solemnly celebrated in the U. S. S. R.

Member of Stalin's Private Faction

During the entire period of the internal struggle in the party, Skrypnik together with Kaganovich, Postyshev and others belonged to Stalin's closest and most intimate faction which operated in the Ukraine and set the pace in the struggle and the repressions against the Left Opposition. Consequently this is a matter not only of one of the foremost leaders of the Soviet Union but likewise of a member of Stalin's private faction. Several weeks before Skrypnik committed suicide a campaign was carried out against him in the press. On June 10, the secretary of the Central Committee of the C. P. R., Postyshev, a careerist and one of the most obsequious of Stalin's valets, said at the Plenum of the Central Committee of the Ukraine, addressing himself to Skrypnik: "The work of Ukrainization rests in the hands of all sorts of dogs. These enemies are hiding behind your big back as a member of the Political Bureau." Very little is known today of what Skrypnik said or did.

According to Postyshev, Skrypnik answered that the policy that he had carried out up till that time was correct but that the situation was now changing. To this Postyshev replied: "No, what you have done was as rotten six years ago as it is today." One has only to ask how it is that during these six years (!) none perceived or said that Skrypnik had relations with "bourgeois nationalist and anti-Soviet elements who carry 'party cards in their pocket', that Skrypnik defended these foreign and hostile elements", that he hid all sorts of dogs behind his back. And all that for six whole years!

If these charges have foundation then what has the Central Committee, the Central Commission and the party been doing during these six years?

What Is the Explanation?

The explanation of the Skrypnik case, which ended with his suicide, can only be made on the basis of the processes that are taking place in the Soviet Union and the Stalinist apparatus.

It will mean also an opportunity to justify Socialist consciousness to the masses. That is the task of the Communists. Only the Communists can lead in that direction. But it is not sufficient to proclaim the abstract right to this leadership; it is necessary to attain it by deeds. It cannot be accomplished only within the very limited frame of the party controlled independent unions but on the whole field of the class struggle. The essential starting point at this moment, however, lies within the mass unions.

—ABNE SWABECK

ist apparatus. Having lost the last remnants of its authority in the eyes of the masses, the Stalinist leadership is forced still further on the road of repression, of the further strangling of the party which reduces the Leninist vanguard to a soulless and formless mass of mere executors of orders. The growth of discontent and differentiation in the ranks of the party is reflected in the apparatus. The apparatus is no longer a full of itself and therefore cannot fulfill the role which Stalin sets out for it. Stalin is obliged to construct another apparatus in the cadre of this apparatus, that is, a narrow faction of loyalists. By the logic of its development the bureaucratic regime constantly undermines its own basis. For each of his mistakes Stalin sacrifices entire sections of his apparatus. They are branded as traitors, saboteurs or counter-revolutionaries.

Machine Devours Creators

The big as well as the small administrators pay with their head today for Stalin's policy and mistakes of yesterday—for the leadership is "infalible". It does not suffice for him to make scapegoats of culprits in the middle apparatus, he is obliged to reach out to the members of the Central Committee and the E. C. C. I. Stalin condemned Skrypnik without taking the least trouble to furnish any evidence at all in proof of the charges made against him. They say of a member of the C. C. and the E. C. C. I.—and this is not just anyone—"bourgeois nationalist elements, shielded by their membership in the party, were taken into his confidence." That is all the explanation that is made by the C. C. The more Stalin tightens the vise, the more cracks are disclosed. Skrypnik is one of these cracks. The Stalinist machine devours its own creators. And Skrypnik who has helped not little in the creation of this machine has been caught in its coils.

Greek Stalinists Support Bourgeois Party in Elections

Within six months two general elections have taken place in Greece. The last one, which was held in March, resulted in a narrow victory for the Populist party headed by Tsaldaris. A coup d'etat by the Venizelist general Plastiras failed and subsequently Tsaldaris formed a parliamentary government.

The Tsaldaris government proved itself capable of even surpassing its predecessor Venizelos in terrorist measures against the working class and the poor farmers. Nevertheless the Greek finance capital, represented by the Venizelists, could not tolerate a Populist party regime based upon the petty bourgeoisie and the remnants of feudal lords. The former have not yet found it necessary to resort to outright Fascism. But this is in the making, initiated by the Populist party. The latter has organized a combination of Greek nationalists which held its convention on June 26 at Athens. At that time the Greek workers, under leadership of the Archio-Marxists (Left Opposition), organized a counter demonstration in which our comrade Panagiotis was fatally wounded.

The Venizelists challenged the government to conduct a re-election in Saloniki. The challenge was accepted, and the re-elections were held on July 2. The Venizelists listed the support of the agrarians under the reformist Solanopoulos,

Socialists Back Out of Anti-War Congress

ists agreed to, or more accurately inspired—in line with the March 5, Communist manifesto—the above statement. They have traveled far from the policy laid down by Lenin for the Communists at the League anti-war conference of the Socialists and Socialists in 1922. Through the Barbusse Anti-War Congress held last August and all the subsequent "anti-war united fronts" they have blurred the line of revolutionary struggle against war in the direction of militant pacifism.

They are now appealing to the Socialist party branches to support the U. S. Congress Against War. J. B. Matthews, a member of the Socialist party who trails along with the Stalinists in its united fronts, has remained on the arrangement committee. One or two Socialist groups may support the Congress, but little more than that can be expected. The sabotage of the leaders of the Socialist party combined with the false course of the Stalinists and their anti-revolutionary position on the united front against war will result in keeping the Socialist workers for the time being away from common action with the Communists.

At the U. S. Congress Against War the Left Opposition delegates will present the revolutionary Communist program against war in contradiction to Stalinist confusion. Lenin's teachings on this important sector of the class struggle, his conception of the united front on war and the need of American working class action against Roosevelt's war program will be raised by the Left Opposition. This will aid in the clarification of both the Communist and Socialist workers and lay the basis for a genuine common action against war and the capitalist offensive.

But that Trotsky, true to proletarian internationalism, utilizes the right of asylum in France—no that will not do.

Who does not experience a feeling of indignation and disgust at the base provocations of the Political Bureau? Then it is necessary to look at another aspect of the question: The political bureau is organizing demonstrations against Trotsky, but what has it done against Fascism. What has it done against the Italian and German Fascist ambassadors, against the hounds of the white guards? Not a thing!

No class conscious worker can or will respond to these provocations. The Left Opposition will continue unswervingly on its path with new tenacity it will struggle for the banner of Marx and Lenin and against all revisionists and provocators.

A Marxian Analysis of Business Cycles by L. Trotsky

interrupted by the war years, has made its way in spite of all tariff walls and has proven its powerful reality in painful form. There is every reason to believe that the coming reversal of the trend, in the direction of a business revival—not simultaneously and not with equal strength—will likewise assume a world wide character. In other words, the cyclical movement of capitalism is resorted by the present crisis.

Naturally, we cannot expect full-blooded cycles in the future. In the last two decades before the war, crises had the character of short and not too profound interruptions, while each new upswing left the peak of the preceding one far below. But now we must expect the reverse; profound, long and painful crises, while the upward movements are weak and short-lived. If the old cycles were the mechanism of the broad upward movement, the new ones can only be the mechanism of capitalist decay.

Only, the influence of cyclic changes on the life of the mass of people remains enormous. In a certain sense, it is now more far reaching than ever before. The whole present status of capitalism represents a completed merely ripe, but overripe, pre-quisite for the proletarian revolution. What lags behind is the consciousness of the proletariat, its organization, its leadership. Because of the general instability of the social equilibrium, the conjunctural fluctuations lead to enormous shifts of political power, to revolutionary and counter-revolutionary disturbances.

The bourgeois world, and with it, the social democracy awaits the new upturn in commerce and industry as a savior. The theoreticians of the Comintern are afraid of such a perspective and deny the possibility of an upward turn in the business cycle curve. To us Marxists, it is perfectly clear that a new revival of business activity would not open a broad avenue out of the crisis, but would lead into a new, still sharper and more painful crisis. On the other hand, the inevitability of a more or less near by change in the business cycle is perfectly evident to us. We must equip ourselves theoretically for the next "post-crisis period" and assume correct points of departure.

The years of crisis have thrown and are throwing the international proletariat back for a whole historical period. Discontent, the wish to escape poverty, hate for the exploiters and their system, all these emotions which are now being suppressed and driven inward by the frightful unemployment and governmental repression, will force their way out with redoubled energy at the first real signs of an industrial revival.

Because of the general situation of present day capital, even in the event of a substantial revival, the employers will not be in a position to make such concessions to the workers as to confine the struggle within the framework of the trade unions. We can predict with assurance that the industrial revival will leave no room even for a return to those conditions of labor which prevailed before the present crisis. The economic conflicts will not only take on a wide scope but also inevitably expand into political movements of a revolutionary character.

The Comintern must strip off the last remnants of the theory of the "third period" must begin to investigate concretely, the economic and social terrain of the struggle, and no longer issue commands according to its own good judgment to the proletarian vanguard but through the latter, guide the real development of the class struggle. In the very first place, the work among the trade-unions. Lovovsky's "third period" must be discarded as well as the third period of Manilsky. Put an end to the policy of self-isolation. With the greatest sharpness must be posed the question of the restoration of the unity of the German trade union movement, through the integration of all R. G. O. members into the mass of the "free trade unions". Every party member who is able to must be obliged to join a trade union.

The development of the economic struggle will put enormous tasks before the reformist bureaucracy. The exploitation of the difficulties of the reformists can best be accomplished by a flexible and enterprising united front policy.

That the Left Opposition, in spite of its small numerical strength, can be in a position to occupy an honorable place in the mass struggle is shown by the experience of the Belgian comrades. In any case, it is the task of the Left Opposition to unfold the questions clearly before the Party, to outline the general perspectives, to formulate slogans of struggle. Now, less than ever, can the Left Opposition be permitted to remain a closed propaganda group, standing aside from the real development of the class struggle.

Every Bolshevik-Leninist must be a member of one mass organization or another, above all, of a trade union. Only under this condition will our organization keep their hand on the pulse of the proletariat and fulfill their role as the vanguard of the vanguard.

N.Y. Upholsterers Strike Bulletin

THREE small shops have signed up with local T. B. of the A. F. of L. This is an entering wedge into the united front of the bosses' association. In spite of daily ads in the papers for scabs, for two weeks, the bosses have failed to get them. The spirit of the men is accordingly high. Plans are under way for organized relief for the strikers.

STRIKE MEDIATOR FROM WASHINGTON IS THE BUNK! Pay no attention to anyone who represents himself as such. He is here ONLY TO SELL YOU OUT like MacGrady, the NIRA representative in the Pennsylvania coal fields. To the shame of John L. Lewis and the United Workers of America, the strike was broken and the men went back at the old conditions. Don't let that happen to you! Only the workers organized into a strong union can enforce your demands.

REGULAR STRIKE MEETINGS of the shops should be held. Not merely the general meeting each day. Men from the shops must be drawn into the strike activity.

Framemakers in the union shop controlled by 1204 of the Carpenters have refused to come out in support of the general strike of framemakers called by the Furniture Workers Industrial Union. Elementary solidarity of the workers in a strike which has become general (over thirty shops involved) demands that these workers be condemned for scabbing and that they be called out in sympathy and help win conditions.

To prevent any misunderstandings, a SITTING COMMITTEE must always accompany the officer of the union who meets with the boss for settlement. The chairman and at least one other member of the shop must be present. This rule must absolutely be adhered to or there is bound to be unsatisfactory results.

The strike needs a DAILY STRIKE BULLETIN posted in a conspicuous place in the strike meeting hall. Here all the news vital to the strike should be published. That will give correct information and pep up the men.

letter from the USSR which reveals the gravity of the economic situation. How does Litvinov answer this?

Thus: "In spite of their wishes, Mr. P. Berland and the 'Temps'—striving peculiarly to oppose the recent declarations of Paul-Boncour with regard to the USSR—will not be able to prove, by these calumnies, the collapse and the weakness of the Soviet regime."

What does this phrase between the dashes signify? Hasn't one the right to see here a discreet understatement with the French government concerning information on the USSR? How far will they go on this path?

We must explain to the workers that only one force is capable of helping the USSR surmount its difficulties, the organized proletariat, the Communist party. Treaties signed by the USSR are precarious portents; they will be ineffectual against imperialism's will to war!

The Development of the Los Angeles Jobless Movement and a Perspective

The Left wing, finding itself hampered by the predominance of especially backward elements from the county area outside of the city, took the initiative in the organization of the more progressive of the city units into their own center, the Council of City Units of the U. C. R. A. At first it was boycotted by the county organization, but in course of time it continued to develop strength, and while never formally affiliated with the County Council, it was later recognized to the extent of sending an advisory delegate to the weekly meetings of the delegates of the Executive Board of the latter. Delegates from the County Council would also visit meetings of the Executive Committee of the Council of City Units. At first only four of the city units were represented on the Left wing council, but this grew to 14 and at one time to 16.

All the progressive steps taken by the U. C. R. A. through the County Council finally agreed to demand $20,000. Later it compromised with the city and county—the amount to be reduced to $6,000 a month at first, and a representative of the Citizens' Committee of the Chamber of Commerce was permitted to sign all checks and thus administer the funds, although the U. C. R. A. did all the purchasing and supervised the administration of the Chamber of Commerce representative. The county also agreed to furnish gasoline and oil for the transportation of farm products from those areas where the self-help work was to be distributed by the U. C. R. A.

Meeting the Problem of Evictions

Another problem was presented by the rapidly increasing number of evictions, as well as shut-offs of gas, light and water. At a meeting of the Council of City Units, at which members of the County Council and the chairman of a State-wide unemployed organization (existing practically only on paper) with which the U. C. R. A. was affiliated, attended as visitors. The latter proposed that we try to legislate a bill to make evictions illegal. The Left wing elements counterposed to this the use of mass pressure, proposing to put the evicted workers back into their homes and to turn on again gas, light and water where they had been turned off. This to be done by a general mobilization of all units under the direction of the leading committee of the unit in the district where the action was to take place.

A resolution to this effect was passed, and the response was enthusiastic. At the first following eviction, over 20 units were mobilized, constituting practically all the city units, out of 65 units in the whole county. The police arrested the evicted worker on the charge of "breaking in". At the trial, several hundred members of the organization were mobilized as witnesses, and the case was handled, not as the defense of the evicted worker as an individual, but as a collective defense of the U. C. R. A. All members accepted responsibility for the action. After 150 witnesses had been heard, and costs of over $4,500 to the county had been incurred, the evicted worker was acquitted, and the jury (composed of small property owners) made a collection of $50 for him. In only one or two other cases was it again necessary to defend in court our mass resistance

Turning On Gas and Light

Later we changed our tactics, and instead of putting back the furniture, roped off the streets, pitched tents (which we immediately wired for light from the overhead street lines), made fires, and mobilized our forces with bands, street dancing, singing and speech making, thereby attracting the whole neighborhood and giving our action the widest publicity. This resulted in a rush by the welfare organizations to offer housing or cash, with the promise that if our members were evicted, all we had to do was to notify them and they would either pay his rent or place him elsewhere.

We also adopted the policy of turning on gas, light and water, where they had been shut off by committees. When the city (operating the electrical and water services) or the privately-owned gas company turned them off again, we came back and turned them on again. Where meters had been taken out, we would connect the house directly with the mains, maintaining our own plumbing shop for the purpose. We would put up a label worded as follows, "Do Not Shut Off—By Order of the Unemployed Cooperative Relief Association." These cut-offs amounted altogether to tens of thousands of cases, sometimes 50-60 in a single day. The committee consisted of the overwhelming majority of the members, who signed a pledge stating that they would continue to the end, even at the risk of arrest. Thousands of evictions were handled in the same way.

The Citizens' Committee of the Chamber of Commerce and the State, county and city authorities made frequent efforts, toward the end of 1932, to obtain a detailed registry of our membership. The Left wing consistently refused this, under the slogan of "no paperization—we are self-sufficient", and defeated these efforts.

We also drove off state intervention in the case of Pat Mays, a former trade unionist, who committed irregularities in handling the warehouse work. We insisted that his case, and its disposition, be handled entirely by the organization, whereas the Right wing elements wanted to take it into court, and the County Council, by a vote of 43 to 3, voted to expel Mays, one of our first victories in the larger organization.

The growth of Communist sympathies during this period as vividly illustrated by the case of Ezra Chase, who was arrested while heading a committee fighting an eviction. He was charged with criminal syndicalism, and the local press began a red-baiting campaign against "Communist leadership in the unemployed movement". After four weeks of propaganda throughout the organization, we brought the question of supporting him before the County Council, and succeeded in getting a resolution passed putting the organization in back of him. The state later dropped the case.

At about this time the Left wing caucus drew up a statement addressed to all labor organizations, pointing out the need of a united front of all progressive elements on a minimum program of substantial state aid to the unemployed, insurance, and support to all workers' struggles and strikes. The Stalinists fought and defeated our proposals for the six-hour day and for long-term credits to the Soviet Union.

Because of the lack of trade union organizations in this area, the response was practically nil. One result was the organization of a broad caucus of the Communist party (which had agreed to colonize members in the U. C. R. A.), the Musketiers, and non-party Left wing elements. This group worked effectively for a period of four months, and succeeded in building up the Council of City Units into a considerable force. More units were added, vigorous mass meetings were held. Out of the new strength grew the renewal of the old demand for $50,000 in cash a month for relief, and a demand that emergency work be furnished through the U. C. R. A. These demands were introduced to the County Council by 22 units. At a series of mass meetings, these demands were voiced, together with demands for an increase in the supply of gasoline and oil. The policy of fighting evictions and shut-offs was re-affirmed.

The city and county administrations compromised for a total of $30,000, the former supplying $20,000 and the latter $10,000 a month in cash for relief.

The party groups within the progressive council now began a series of sectarian adventures. They organized several paper organizations, one was called the Independent Organization of the Forced Labor Camps, another Organization of the Homeless Youth and a third the "County Workers' Protective Union". Following this party groups attempted to have the unemployed workers shift their allegiance from the U. C. R. A. in favor of these paper organizations. As a result of these maneuvers, the party was weakened and isolated within the general Left wing, especially as the Right wing by that time had consolidated itself into an effective working force.

After four months of collaboration within the broad Left wing caucus, the party ordered its members to withdraw. Out of about 150, some fifty to sixty remained, contrary to party orders.

A weekly newspaper was started by the Left wing in the second half of 1932, under the control of varied elements but bringing forward a class point of view. About 3,400 copies a week were circulated. While its political level reflected the backwardness of the movement in that stage, it nevertheless has been consciously endeavoring to raise this level. Its persistence was shown by the fact that, after the County Council had taken over the paper originally founded by the Left wing, the latter after a certain period again got out its own paper.

In the whole process of development of the Left wing, the Left Opposition elements played the leading role, posing the class issues, proposing concrete programs and conducting systematic propaganda for its class policies, similarly by constant visiting and speaking to the workers in the units, and above all by prolonged, systematic direct participation in an active and leading capacity in the practical work of the movement. In general, the policies adopted were those of the Left Opposition. The increasing influence of the Left wing over the entire U. C. R. A. is shown by a series of actions, in addition to those mentioned above and to the demonstration before the Board of Supervisors on the milk issue. Such were the resolution to support a farm hands' strike the vote of confidence in the women's milk committee, the resolution of thanks to the Communist lawyer who defended the first evictions case, the resolution against participation of bourgeois politicians in discussions. All were taken after resistance by the organized Right wing elements in the County Council.

Very important also was the work among Mexican and Negro workers who have developed a feeling of full class solidarity in the movement, and the breaking down of barriers among the white workers.

Lessons of the Los Angeles Experience

What general lessons do we draw from this experience in the light of the present perspectives as influenced by the Industrial Recovery Act?

1. We must adjust our strategy in the American labor movement to a short-term perspective, not to the long-term tasks of building a new leadership out of the youth. The State apparatus is being ever more closely intertwined with the class-collaborationist elements in the labor leadership, and first of all with the A. F. of L. The reformists are engaged in an enormous upswing, and have been able to reach fields which they have not formerly touched for a generation or more. They report enormous organizational gains in steel, coal, textile, auto, metal mining and oil fields.

2. In such a period of upsurge of the elemental labor movement, there is enormous room for Left wing labor elements, which are badly needed for the concrete work of organization. If a cohesive Left wing is built up, and is able to work together in spite of the basic political differences; if such a Left bloc is able to entrench itself into the rising movement, it will not be possible for the Right wing leadership as has been the case before, to kick them out after their organizations are consolidated.

3. If such a policy is not followed, the class-collaborationist elements will consolidate their position and block the road to further development of the progressives, isolating them even more than is now the case.

4. The question of relation of forces within the Left wing cannot continue to be posed as it has been in the past. Confronted with the tremendous scope of the tasks to be performed, the necessity of urgent speed in view of the danger of consolidation of the Right wing, and the weak forces of the individual political groupings out of which a Left wing can be built—whether Left Oppositionists, Stalinists, Musketiers, Wobblies or Anarchists, the Left wing elements must form a united cohesive bloc in order to be effective at all. In the course of the struggle itself, the energy, militancy, and correct policies of the individual sections of the Left wing will undergo profound modifications, as will the relation of their forces.

5. The Los Angeles experience has conclusively shown that even a small group of energetic elements, with revolutionary training and basing themselves solidly on a correct policy, can be very effective and gain great influence within a broad mass movement.

Fascism and Democratic Slogans

1. Is it true that Hitler has destroyed "democratic prejudices"?

The April resolution of the Praesidium of the ECCI "on the present situation in Germany" will, we believe, go down into history as the final testimonial to the bankruptcy of the Comintern of the epoch. The resolution is crowned with a prognosis in which all the vices and prejudices of the Stalinist bureaucracy reach their culmination. "The establishment of an open Fascist dictatorship,"—the resolution proclaims in bold-face type, "accelerates the tempo of the development of a proletarian revolution in Germany by destroying all democratic illusions of the masses and by freeing them from the influence of the social-democracy."

Fascism, it seems, has unexpectedly become the locomotive of history: it destroys democratic illusions, it frees the masses from the influence of the social-democracy, it accelerates the development of the proletarian revolution. The Stalinist bureaucracy assigns to Fascism the accomplishment of those basic tasks which it proved itself utterly incapable of solving. The theoretic victory of Fascism is undoubtedly an evidence of the fact that democracy had exhausted itself; but politically, the Fascist regime preserves democratic prejudices, recreates them, inculcates them into the youth and is even capable of imparting to them, for a short time, the greatest strength. Precisely in this consists one of the most important manifestations of the reactionary historic role of Fascism.

Doctrinaires think schematically. Masses think with facts. The working class perceives events not as experiments with this or that "thesis" but as living changes in the fate of the people. The victory of Fascism adds a million times more to the scale of political development than the prognosis for the indefinite future which flows from it. Had a proletarian state grown out of the bankruptcy of democracy, the development of society, as well as the development of mass consciousness would have taken a great leap forward. But as it was, in reality, the victory of Fascism that grew out of the bankruptcy of democracy, the consciousness of the masses is set far back,—of course only temporarily. The smashing of the Weimar democracy by Hitler can no more put an end to the democratic illusions of the masses, than Goering's setting the Reichstag on fire can burn out parliamentary cretinism.

2. The Example of Spain and Italy

For four years in succession we heard that democracy and Fascism do not exclude but supplement each other. How then can the victory of Fascism liquidate democracy once and for all? We would like to have some explanations on this score by Bucharin, Zinoviev, or Manuilsky "himself!"

The military-police dictatorship of Primo de Rivera was declared by the Comintern to be Fascism. But if the victory of Fascism signifies the final liquidation of democratic prejudices, how can it be explained that the dictatorship of Primo de Rivera gave way to a bourgeois republic? It is true that the regime of Rivera was far from being Fascist. But it had, at all events, this much in common with Fascism: it arose as a result of the bankruptcy of the parliamentary regime. This did not prevent it, however, after its own bankruptcy was revealed, from giving way to democratic parliamentarism.

WE NEED MONEY!

"I have a little shadow that goes in and out with me, and what can be the use of it is more than I can see!" runs a poem by Stevenson. And that is how it is with us. Over all our activities hangs a shadow, a financial shadow.

In the immediately past period our shadow was small. From the financial point of view we stood at noon or not far from it. But lately the sun has been going down. And our shadow has been lengthening. Last week it got so long that we couldn't see in front of us and the Militant didn't come out.

But that sun has to rise again and shorten our shadow. A desperate tug made it possible to get out this issue. But what about next week? And the week after?

It isn't at all a bleak future that faces us. Next week's issue or the issue of the week after will carry the details of our new expansion program. That will be the lever to lift us over this temporary obstruction.

In the meantime we need some assistance. And we need it quickly. Let us put our appeal on this basis: the expansion program as our long lever to raise us to a new level; immediate donations to keep us going. Send all funds at once to the Militant, 126 East 16th St., New York, N. Y.

One may attempt to say that the Spanish revolution is a proletarian one in its tendencies, and that the social democracy in alliance with other republicans has succeeded in arresting its development at the stage of bourgeois parliamentarism. But this objection, correct in itself, proves only more clearly our idea that if bourgeois democracy succeeded in paralyzing the revolution of the proletariat, this was only due to the fact that under the yoke of the "Fascist" dictatorship, the democratic illusions were not weakened but became stronger.

Have "democratic illusions" disappeared in Italy during the ten years of Mussolini's despotism? This is how Fascists themselves are inclined to picture the state of affairs. In reality, however, democratic illusions are acquiring a new force. During this period, a new generation has been raised up. Politically it has not lived in the conditions of freedom, but it knows full well what Fascism is: this is the raw material for vulgar democracy. The organization "Justice and Liberty" is distributing illegal democratic literature in Italy and not without success. The ideas of democracy are therefore finding adherents, who are ready to sacrifice themselves. Even the flabby generalizations of the liberal monarchist, Count Sforza, are spread in the form of illegal pamphlets. That's how far back Italy has been thrown during these years!

THE COAL OPERATORS' ORGAN FRAME-UP ON THE MILITANT

The Taylorville, Ill. Breeze, a旬body Coal Co. rag, in its July 20 edition printed a miserable scrawl headlined to give the appearance of an advertisement of The Militant. The purpose of the article was to further the ends of the coal company by adding confusion to the situation facing the miners of Illinois and to attempt to discredit the growing influence of our paper in the minefields.

The Militant of course never did and never could have placed an ad with the Taylorville Breeze and we do not expect to refer to it again until we announce that the coal miners of Illinois have thrown the Leabody Coal Co. and similar parasites off their backs and with them the lickspittle tools of the kind that edit the Taylorville Breeze.

U.S. Imperialism Holds High Cards in Cuban Situation

Machado is out. Cespedes is the new president of Cuba. Tweedle-dum has replaced Tweedledee. Both are from the same political party. The new cabinet intended at first to be a concentration cabinet, but is more "oppositional" character following the categorical demand of the ABC for political recognition, but is as exclusively bourgeois and agreeable to American imperialism as its predecessor was originally.

What is more important than its personnel is the program to which Cespedes has committed it. And the country: a reorganization of surplus labor back to the land; reorganization of enormous debt to the United States; and a trade agreement with the United States over the sugar crop which has been selling below the cost of production.

The details of this three-point program have not yet been made public but their character is indicated by the whole situation. There can be no doubt that all the high cards will repose, as heretofore, in the mitt of Uncle Sam. From Roosevelt to Welles to Cespedes the line is unbroken. The stake of the United States imperialists in Cuba has been estimated from a billion and a quarter to two billions. It reposes principally in sugar, tobacco, and government and private debts. Any program in Cuba will have to base itself on the careful protection of these investments.

Cespedes Welcomes U. S. Warships If confirmation were needed Cespedes has supplied it. He has welcomed the presence of American warships in Cuban waters and has been at pains to reassure the nervous men of Wall Street that he will play the game of serving Yankee profits according to the rules. In short the cast has been changed but the play is still the same. The capitalist press calls this substitution of actors a revolution.

That is how it is at the top of Cuban society. Below it is not so satisfactory to the American puppet masters. The whole nation was in

PROTEST FRAME-UP AGAINST YOUNG ANTI-FASCIST WORKER

Athos Terzani, a young anti-Fascist is being held in the Queens County Jail on a murder indictment which is more flagrant a frame-up than any the labor movement has seen for some time. Terzani has been accused of the murder of one of his fellow worker and comrade-in-arms, Anthony Fierri—no less! The charge of murder against Terzani has as its purpose the shielding of the real criminals—the Fascist Khaki Shirts of America.

The workers are familiar enough with this specie of frame-up. But if proof be needed listen to this statement by Art Smith who boasted before an audience of 1,000 in Philadelphia, on July 23rd that his organization had "murdered" one radical and sent 19 others to a hospital at a New York meeting recently! Enough said!

Workers! Defend Terzani! The bloodthirsty capitalist class must not be permitted to make another labor martyr of Terzani! Send contributions immediately to Herbert Mahler, treasurer, Terzani Defense Committee, 94 Fifth Ave., New York City.

Clubs, Tear Gas, Riot Guns Used in Milk Strike

Richfield Springs, N. Y.

During the last four to five years the farmers in the New York milk district have been exploited to the limit by the big dairy companies. Naturally, therefore, when some slick organizers from up-state began to set up the Dairyman's League the farmers all supported it hoping that it would solve their problems. But they soon learned otherwise. The organizers soldified their own control in the league and though they told the Borden company that they were on their side, the result was that the farmers received even less for their milk than before.

Farmers Get It in the Neck

The dissatisfaction continued to grow, the conditions became unbearable and the farmers appealed to the governor to step in and appoint a Milk Control Board. By that the farmers expected to get a square deal. In March the Milk Control Board was appointed, the farmers were happy, the New Deal apparently was approaching; but again they got it in the neck.

The Milk Control Board classified the various grades of milk and set a price on each classification. The lowest grade was to be that containing three and two-thirds percent of butter fat for which the farmers were to receive 1

J.L. Lewis Betrays Miners at Coal Hearing

The NRA has blown life into the United Mine Workers Union and has given Lewis and Company a new lease on life. After a score of years of the most brazen betrayals and sell-outs, John L. Lewis is appointed Labor's representative on the NRA. If this were the only act at our disposal to determine what the Roosevelt Government thinks of labor it would be sufficient for condemnation. However, the present government of the imperialists have a long record for the few months they are in power; a record of clever reform, and sugar coated measures for greater subjugation and exploitation.

Workers throughout the mine area are flocking to the folds of the U. M. W. A. Not that they have any faith in Lewis and Company, but because they think that they will get a new deal under the NRA, through the conservative union. "The sell-out in western Penn., by Lewis a few weeks ago and the revolt against Lewis and Company brought out in bold relief what the actual situation is. Nevertheless, the absence of a Left wing in the U. M. W. A., and the capitulationist right wing, class collaboration policies of the Progressive Miners of America all favors the Lewis stronghold upon the miners together with the help of the government.

Lewis and Class Collaboration

Lewis, speaking before the code hearing said: "The Recovery Act means a rebirth—not the bringing into life again of the forces of former years which we have found impossible. It is now a recognized fact by the most disinterested and authoritative opinion, both within and without the industry, that it cannot save itself without involving the cooperation and supervision of the Federal Government." Lewis recognizes that the coal industry is a sick industry even if he did not recognize this as part of the decay of capitalism. He also recognizes that some form of nationalization is necessary to pull the coal industry out of the rut. The NRA, as a first step in this direction, will start this process and if more drastic government steps are necessary they will be taken to insure the operators profits.

Lewis says: "We knew from long experience in the industry that it could only be stabilized and restored to a normal condition through a code which would be national in its scope and its provisions." But Lewis never thought it was necessary to have a national miners policy and national strikes. If Lewis thinks it is good for the operators and the government to have a national policy then why does he not think that such a weapon would also be good in the hands of the miners against the operators. The separate agreements, one after the other; the strikes on district scales, while across the line the other miners worked year after year, all indicate who Lewis is talking about when he thinks a national policy will be good.

According to Lewis, capital and labor benefit as follows: "The employer is the greatest beneficiary of the Recovery Act. On the other hand, what do the workers either by mind or brain, expect from the Recovery Act. Nothing beyond the right to organize and cooperate with the employer, and to receive what they have always been denied—a fair participation in the output of industry." In fact the workers won't even get these crumbs Lewis speaks of.

Lewis and Company is discredited throughout the industry, however the NRA class collaboration plan will give these labor agents a new lease on life. A Left wing must be built in the U.M.W.A. where they

2 Young Negroes Slain by Lynch Law in South

Once again the Negro hating and working class baiting southern bourgeoisie has shown its unique method of meting out justice to that doubly exploited section of the southern proletariat — the Negro.

In the dark hours of early Sunday morning, August 13, Sheriff Shamblin and some deputies decided that for "safety's sake" they were going to transport the three young Negroes, Dan Phipps, A. T. Harden and Elmore Clark, charged with a typically southern felony—murder of a white woman—from Tuscaloosa to the larger city of Birmingham, Alabama. A lonely, untraveled road was picked for the journey. Two cars made up the caravan. One car carrying the sheriff, a deputy or two and the prisoners and another following with deputies "for protection". When the journey was about half completed the sheriff ordered the trailing carful of deputies to return. This was at the darkest and quietest intersection of the road. The sheriff's car with the handcuffed Negroes in it resumed on its way. They had not gone far when a mob waylaid the car, and ordered the sheriff to hand over the Negroes to them. All went as if re-

N.Y. Furniture Strikers Repulse Manoeuvres of the Employers

The militant strike of over 1500 upholsterers is nearing settlement. The Furniture Manufacturers Association has been brought to terms by one of the greatest strikes in the history of the trade. They have been forced, at the moment when victory is in the grasp of the strikers, to call in the NRA to "mediate the dispute".

And the NRA has acted. On August 15th, the Washington conciliator, Colonel Leopold Phillips, chairman of the Bureau of Conciliation, came to an agreement with the Furniture Manufacturers Association at the Pennsylvania Hotel, (the headquarters of the NRA). The agreement, which was to serve as the "code" for the furniture industry, calls for a "sliding" wage scale beginning with a 60c an hour minimum, in place of the $1.40 per hour, demanded by the union; a 40

N. Y. Dress Workers Gain as Strike Ends; One Union Needed

False Policy of Stalinists Leads Left Wing Workers into Blind Alley. Reentry of Left Wing into I.L.G.W. Cannot Be Delayed. Vital for Enforcement of Settlement

The big strike of dressmakers of New York and nearby points for elimination of the sweatshop, which involved some 60,000 workers, has come to a conclusion with some gains for the workers. The strike lasted only a few days but displayed all the power and militancy for which the needle trades workers have become known. It was the most complete strike seen in this industry for a long time.

The overwhelming mass of the workers involved struck under the banner of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union, but the I.T.U.L. union dress section made common cause with the former. In this a certain progress must be recorded. At least it is a far cry from the position of the Stalinists, who are in control of the I.T.U.L. union, took in the strike in 1929 when this union declared it would remain on the job in face of the I.L.G.W. strike. But it is a change which is compelled by the hammer blows of events. In essence there has been practically no change in the bankrupt trade union policy of the official party leaders.

International Consolidated Union

It is necessary to add to this that at the present moment the I.T.U.L. union is pressed right up against the wall. Essentially the strike was one to establish recognition of the I.L.G.W. as the sole union in the industry to the exclusion of any other. It will have to be admitted that in this respect the strike also went far toward attaining its objective. The settlement which is arrived at is one between the I.L.G.W. and the manufacturers under theegis of the local NRA administrator, Grover Whalen. It resulted also in the much more complete organization of jobbers and manufacturers. Apparently all accepted the settlement enthusiastically and cheered for Grover Whalen.

This gentleman did not fail to make clear, as an inducement to their opportunity to make an end to the Communist influence in the industry. Proceeding from this the manufacturers will undoubtedly extend recognition to the I.L.G.W. even to shops where it was not formerly recognized. The strike affected practically all shops, organized and unorganized. Subsequently this union's officers have been kept busy lining up new members, organizing throughout the industry.

Gained 35-Hour Week

There was not a great deal of difference in the demands advanced by the two unions. It would be too much to say that these demands were all gained, but the actual settlement represents an improvement over past actual conditions and, if enforced, will mean a step forward for American labor. Undoubtedly the most important gain is the 35-hour five-day week. In this respect the I.L.G.W. has demanded 30 hours while the I.T.U.L. union demanded 35 hours. Both unions had demanded the abolition of piece work; the settlement, however, retains this system for certain of the crafts, while otherwise the scale agreed upon for week workers represents an improvement from formerly actual conditions obtaining.

This progress made by the New York dressmakers will undoubtedly have its effect in further stimulating the American workers to fight more tenaciously for their right to organize and for a better standard of living regardless of all the empty demagoguery of the NRA and regardless of its class collaboration brakes. One cannot disregard the pernicious class collaboration influences in this strike and its settlement. But it would be idle to conjure what could have been accomplished with a militant union leadership. We know the splendid militant tradition of the rank and file. The important fact remains that this forward step will lend its impetus to new advance elsewhere.

One Union A Necessity

But that is only one side of the question. Another one remains pressing ever harder for a solution. It can perhaps be approached most concretely from the point of view of the situation as existing at this moment in the needle trades. It is common knowledge amongst the rank and file workers that the present essential question is: Will this new agreement be enforced? Such a question could be answered in the affirmative only provided two necessary conditions obtain. First, that the rank and file members are ever watchful of their officials and that the Left wing definitely assert itself in this direction. Secondly, that a unity between the two unions be accomplished in such a way that the Left wing union has become an integral part of the mass movement. In reality the attainment of the former is conditioned upon the latter.

Long since we have specifically proposed this as an orientation for the I.T.U.L. union of that section of the needle trades. We proposed that it seek re-entry into the I.L.G.W. upon the basis of no discrimination, their membership rights and democratic union rights being guaranteed. This was a pressing necessity then and the possibilities for success of such a policy were reasonably good. Today it is even more than a pressing necessity, it is a matter of life and death in the Left wing union. There can be no real progress for the mass movement without such a policy.

THREATEN PUBLIC TRIAL OF BOLSHEVIK-LENINISTS IN MOSCOW

The following highly significant incident occurred at the Congress of the United Federation of Teachers (Red Trade Union) of France which met on August 24th in Reims, France.

Pressed by the delegates for an answer and an explanation on the case of Victor-Serge, a Bolshevik-Leninist now in exile, the representative of the Soviet teachers federation stated officially from the platform:

"Victor-Serge as well as other 'Trotskyists' formed part of a counter-revolutionary group which has just been discovered. A public trial will take place in Moscow and their accusations and proofs will be given."

Is this another one of the famous amalgams of Stalin and his thermidorian allies to exterminate the Bolshevik-Leninists, the men who fought in the most dangerous battlefronts of the civil war?

If there is any truth at all in this declaration of the Soviet delegate then it is a sign that the baiting of the Left Opposition can no longer proceed on the old basis. It needs new justification in the eyes of the proletarian vanguard which has grown dubious and alarmed at the continued viciousness of the Stalinist persecutions.

WHO BREAKS THE STRIKES?

"Wholesale arrests were made today by State troopers and Sheriff's deputies in their effort to break the backbone of the ten-day-old strike of milk producers." This statement appeared in the New York Times of August 11.

Openly and brazenly this mouthpiece of American finance capital proclaims that the sheriff's forces, that is the forces of the political state, of the government, are acting to break a strike by wholesale arrests. Its headline announced: "200 Milk Strikers Seized Up-State." In sub caption appeared the addition, "Trend Pleases Lehmman"—that is, the governor—"He says: 'Sheriffs are Handling Situation Adequately'."

Of course this trend pleases the governor. It equally pleases the big dairy companies. A strike broken by arrests and by previous attacks by state troopers, using tear gas, clubs and riot guns. A strike broken by force and violence.

That is what pleases them. In this instance the strikers were poor farmers. In many others the strikers are workers; but the treatment is the same, and if there is any difference, it is on the side of greater viciousness.

Does any worker still doubt that the government under capitalism, whether it be democratic or republican, functions to protect the rich against the poor. Does any worker doubt that it is a class government functioning to protect the interests of capitalism, to defeat the aims and aspirations of the workers and to beat down their resistance with sledge hammer blows. It is the capitalist state in operation. But this is only one more example added to countless similar experiences. American labor history is replete with these bitter lessons. Many workers' lives have been sacrificed and often their organizations have been laid waste in strike struggles throughout the country. Such is the record of the capitalist executors in the government.

Will the workers draw the necessary conclusions from this? Will they understand that there is no other way to advance their interest? Right now they are being set into motion, pressed forward by economic necessity, but a correct direction cannot at all be assured unless the correct conclusions are drawn from all these experiences.

That implies first of all a recognition of the true nature of present day class society and the function of the capitalist government within it. With that as a basis it will be easier to distinguish the wolves in sheep's clothing, the honey worded labor lieutenants of capitalism who play hand in glove with the government to disorganize and defeat the workers. With that as a basis it will also be easier to recognize the necessity of the working class building its own revolutionary party to carry on the struggle for the overthrow of the capitalist system of society.

Political Character of Strikes Under N.I.R.A.

The NRA slave codes of the capitalist class and its effects upon the American working class have been explained in the columns of the Militant and by the Left Opposition ever since the Gillespie Trade Union Conference prior to the act becoming a law. In the meantime, we have been hammering away on the question of trade union policy in the different industries. A correct analysis of the NRA must first be presented in order to present a correct program of struggle against the new capitalist offensive. Within the ranks of the other forces of the labor movement confusion still reigns. The socialists are still fighting within their organization over the question of an analysis of the NRA. Other groups say little or nothing except that they are against the NRA. The Stalinists are also opposed to the NRA but have not answered the burning question of how to fight the NRA. In every union where they have fought the capitalist and reformers codes, the Stalinists have trailed behind them, not only in demands presented but also in many cases on the demands adopted as a law.

The capitalists projected the NRA in an attempt to solve some of the difficulties confronting them. However, the steps taken in this direction have created other contradictions. The most important of these new contradictions thrown to the surface is the one dealing with the trade unions. When the act became a law, it carried with it the outlawing of strikes as soon as the codes become finally adopted. In the meantime, an increasing number of strikes took place. These were not only a continuation of the wave of strikes just prior to the NRA as an effect of the upturn in production and increase in prices but also as a struggle for the right to organize and to bring pressure to obtain better conditions as the codes were being considered.

This wave of new strikes at the time the codes were being considered threatened to upset the NRA, especially the Penna. mines struggle. A special emergency measure was adopted. The establishment of the NRA Adjustment Board, an arbitration board to consider all strikes. The NRA outlawed strikes after the codes were adopted. The new measure outlawed strikes when the codes were being considered.

This means the workers face a new condition, a war measure condition in the trade union field. Trade union struggles of yesterday are now entirely changed—the new contradiction the capitalists themselves have created. Most of the trade union strikes of the past were listed as industrial and economic struggles and only the outstanding strikes took on a political nature of a high degree. Under the NRA EVERY STRIKE BECOMES A POLITICAL STRIKE AT THE VERY START. A strike against the capitalists is a strike against the STATE.

This brings to the surface as the most important working class question and opposition to the NRA—the workers right to strike, the right to organize. The capitalist intend to smother them in class collaboration, in arbitration and by outlawing them. The class struggle cannot be stopped this way. It can only be warped, providing the Communists are not equal to the task.

In other words, the central point of the workers struggle against the NRA revolves around the Communist answer to the trade union question. All strikes against the capitalists now are political strikes against the capitalist state.

Around the fight against the capitalist, the capitalist government and the capitalist labor agent's NRA slave code, the workers fight for the right to organize, to strike and to live, must be woven the struggle for the other demands of the class at this stage. The stagger plan must be fought by the struggle for the six hour day the five day week with increase in pay. The capitalists relief substitutes must be fought by the struggle for unemployed and social insurance. The question of long term credits to the Soviet Union and recognition of the Soviet Union as against the capitalist maneuvers on this question must be brought to the fore. The struggle of the youth to obtain a social solution and recognition for the youth denied a chance to make a living by the "abolition" of child labor.

The trade union question of the working class has now become the central point of the workers struggle against the NRA and the outlawing of strikes. Violators of the codes can be fined and imprisoned. This means strikers. This means trade unionists.

AMONG THE YOUTH

L.A. Yipsel Suspended for Union Activity

The following appeal is from a militant Los Angeles Yipsel who has begun to see the reactionary nature of the leadership of the Socialist party and their youth wing, the Y.P.S.L. Her being expelled from class activities on the picket line makes this document more than an appeal—a warning to all revolutionaries within the socialist youth organizations as to the real drift of their leadership towards class collaboration and strike breaking. The appeal speaks for itself.—Ed.

LOS ANGELES.—TO THE MEMBERS OF THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S SOCIALIST LEAGUE

COMRADES:—The State Executive Committee has declared me suspended from the Young People's Socialist League without voice or vote for a period of two months pending further investigation of my activity with Communists.

Every member of the Y. P. S. L. must understand the reasons for such arbitrary actions on the part of our leadership—its basic causes and its inevitable consequences.

Charges when brought down to actual facts amount to two things: my activities in the union of my trade, the Needle Trades Workers Union and participation in the United Front Anti-War Conference.

In the name of what working class principles do these "leaders" of working-class youth bring a Yipsel up on charges for belonging to the only militant union in her trade?

The Needle Trades Workers Industrial Union has proved through struggle that it is a militant union fighting for and in the interests of the working-class.

While the leadership sits back and engages in petty discussions, the cause of the workers is being consistently fought by the Needle Trades Union. Even at this time in the face of brutal police terror, manhandling of women and beating up of men on the picket line, a strike is being waged in a millinery shop under the leadership of the N. T. W. I. U.

Instead of suspending a member for being active in a strike, those members of the State Executive Committee who by their silence and inactivity have tacitly sabotaged the strike, these Yipsel "leaders" should be severely condemned.

The Y. P. S. L. leadership charges me with Anti-War activity with the Communists. Who is accused and who are the accusers? It is now entirely changed—the new contradiction the capitalists themselves have created. Most of the trade union strikes of the past were listed as industrial and economic struggles and only the outstanding strikes took on a political nature of a high degree. Under the NRA EVERY STRIKE BECOMES A POLITICAL STRIKE AT THE VERY START. A strike against the capitalists is a strike against the STATE.

Chi. Y.C.L. Bureaucrats Expel 5 Militants

The bureaucrats of the Chicago Y. C. L. have found it necessary once again, to stem the tide of opposition which has developed amongst its members—by expulsions. This is the only answer which the statement endorsed by 6 comrades of the Y. C. L. solicited from the bureaucrats. Five expulsions and Probations for one. The appearance of the statement which precipitated the expulsions was provoked by the German catastrophe and by the tendency on the part of the C. P. to return to its devastating policy of the united front from below which was responsible for the German disaster. The statement concerned itself with these two essential points.

If the young bureaucrats expected that the German defeat and the expulsion of Albert Goldman from the C. P. would be received with silence on the part of the Y. C. L. members, it is only because they from the rank and file that they can no more gauge their sentiment.

The leadership was taken by surprise when it was informed of the actions of and in violation of the no fraternization law, organized a discussion meeting at which Lydia Beldel and Albert Goldman, prominent party members, spoke and presented their position. Subsequent to this, a debate was arranged in which the Stalinists were compelled to participate. Pressed for a statement, the youth submitted a 9 page document in which they clearly formulated their position upon a number of points.

The statement is introduced by pointing out that utter confusion exists among the leadership as well as the rank and file of the Y. C. L. on the question of the united front and Germany due to constant changes without explanation or analysis. Honesty and clarification are necessary in order to avoid a similar catastrophe. It proceeds to prove that the theory of the united front, from below and the theory of social Fascism advanced by the leadership of the C. P. are mainly responsible for the German defeat. The C. P. must severely condemn its action in Germany and repudiate these erroneous policies.

Hailing the C. L. Manifesto as a turn in the correct direction the statement of the comrades correctly warns from its (the manifesto's) acceptance of a Non-Aggression Pact with the Social Democrats. The document concludes with a remorseless denunciation of the existing bureaucracy within the organization, demanding a change (free discussion, a convention, no bureaucracy, etc.) if the organization is to exist and make progress. In compliance with the demands of the "Rotten Liberalism" Act (expel immediately all who disagree) the comrades were expelled.

The Spartacus Youth Clubs have followed with great interest this and other movements along the same line. These expulsions are indicative of the fact that there are in the Y. C. L. young comrades who are alert to the situation and who have the moral courage to present their view in face of expulsion. One must not look at this group as an isolated one; nor should the comrades consider that their work is now completed. To those who could not be intimidated by threats of expulsion in the face of such important events as Germany, we say that your work has now only begun. You have opened up stifled minds. You have begun to think objectively, to view things honestly. You must not stop at Germany. There is China and Britain, Russia and America. Stalinism has failed miserably. Why? Begin immediately to study these questions. Read the literature of all groups. Do not confine yourself to one side. If you study objectively our position along with others, we are certain that you will be in our ranks before long.

Study is not incompatible with participation in the class struggle. In the revolutionary movement they are inseparable. To those who shout that outside of the Y. C. L. you cannot carry forth work for your class, you must answer: no one has a monopoly on the class struggle.

Education and the Century of Progress

Chicago.—Last month the Chicago Board of Education struck the Chicago public school system a terrific blow which may make it permanent. After a secret meeting instigated by the secret Citizens' Committee they passed a bill which removes all the educational improvements made in the last forty years. They took these steps to end the "over-education" of the youth and to revive the school system from the "fads and frills" which were supposed to be stifling it. In one stroke they cut off, or severely curtailed the parental schools, physical education, junior high schools and a junior college. These measures to revive the "little red school house" are so disastrous that they deserve our immediate attention because they are ominous signs of the decline of the public school system throughout the United States.

This act was the solution of the Board of Education, to a critical financial situation in which the public school system has been in entangled for the last two years due to a premature depletion of the city treasury. For the last two years the public school employees have worked almost gratuitously and meekly like "true" patriots. The sporadic demonstrations they conducted plus a student's strike evoked nothing but a few spurious resolutions from the Board of Education.

B. of E. Chooses Graft

The B. of E. had two courses to choose; either curtail irretrievably the educational facilities of the Chicago schools and thus satisfy the disgruntled, childless taxpayer or follow the Strayer report and eliminate the graft which had eaten up the funds previously. In making their decision they followed the representatives of big business dictators of the citizens' committee, in Chicago. Graft was more favorable to them than an "educated citizen."

This fact is not as strange as it seems. The system of universal compulsory education extant today was instituted when American capitalism was expanding. It needed more trained clerks, professionals, skilled workers, etc., than our private schools could provide. Today our economic system is declining and needs fewer such servants. This means that it is no longer necessary for the youth to receive that training which was needed till now. The big industrialists and financiers do not think that physical education, junior high schools, free junior colleges and colleges are necessary or even desirable for the children of workers and poor petty bourgeoisie. In fact it is dangerous to have an army of unemployed youth who can think for themselves. They will be able to find no other outlet for their education than in radical thought. In the past, a little education to spice the dish of jingoism and chauvinism did not have bad effects for the capitalist lackeys decided to strengthen the effects of legal narcotics in education; civics and U. S. History. Then they reduced the antidote; scientific method, mathematics, laboratory work, etc., to ineffectiveness.

Decline in Education Marks Capitalist Decay

But this bill did not meet with the approval of the workers and the petty bourgeoisie of Chicago. They do not think that their children are being over-educated. The "little red school house" is an anachronism today and the workers are fighting against its re-establishment. But their protests have so far been of no avail against the Board which ignores them.

At the same time that this fight against education is conducted in Chicago, Chicago is also the scene of festivities which land capitalist civilization and its achievements to the skies—The Century of Progress. Strangely enough this action of the Chicago school authorities is as much a part of the Fair as the machines which decorate its interior. Instead of being a blot on a perfect picture it is an indispensable part of it.

Not only have the last hundred years witnessed the growth of the machine but also it has seen the rise and early stages of the rapid decline of the capitalist system of production. Little over one hundred years ago the young and vigorous capitalism in the United States began one of the wildest rides down the rocky road of history that time has even witnessed. Today it is a decrepit, tottering centurion, exhausted by its ride and rotting with many contradictions and diseases which its mount has helped to intensify.

The editor to the Chicago Fair should note the shrewd line of the Fair on the one hand and the measures for curtailing and degrading public education on the other. They are both integrally connected.

Progressive T. U. Center Disrupted by Right Wing

Some months ago the workers of the midwest states organized a Progressive Trade Union Educational Committee with headquarters at Gillespie, Illinois. The program and policy adopted was presented in the Militant some months ago. The whole Left wing approved the program and policy with the exception of a small Right wing led by MacFarlane and Walker, secretary and chairman of the Committee.

We are now informed that a secret meeting was called by the Right wing, over the heads of, and without the knowledge of the duly elected Executive Committee. At this secret meeting the policy was ignored and a new independent "Federation of Labor" was established. The new organization consists of several independent crafts: Teamsters, Motion Picture Operators, Painters, etc., in the small towns of the coal fields, the logical carry and break, that follows the trail of the Progressive Miners Union break with Lewis and Company.

This new craft federation comes to "life" after the NRA takes shape and the workers are flocking into the A. F. of L. where they will be at the mercy of the bosses agents, the labor fakers, unless we build a powerful Left wing.

The whole affair raises a few important questions. First, what is the position of the Right wing leadership of the PMA Percy and Keck, etc.? Now that a big section of the Right wing is ready to make amends with Lewis and Company, and do not want to be hampered by the Left wing or such a Progressive trade union committee, would it not be a wise policy on their part to wipe out the Left wing in the PMA as they are, and kill the Progressive Trade Union move by MacFarlane and others kills the committee.

On the other hand—what are the Stalinists doing. The Stalinists have ideological control of the Executive Committee of the Progressive Trade Union Educational Committee. What are they going to do about this? They did not use the P.T.U.E.C. for the Cleveland Conference. Will the Stalinists allow the Progressive Trade Union Educational Committee to be killed by the Right wing? They cannot prevent the accomplished split, but they can call an executive committee and utilize the PTUEC with its correct policy as a sectional grouping of Left wingers to be connected nationally with the other Left wing bodies.

FROM THE MILITANTS

Examples of N.R.A. at Work in St. Louis

St. Louis.—Comrade Oehler's prediction that the NRA would not solve but intensify the basic contradictions of capitalism is being borne out to the letter here in St. Louis, which may be taken as an example of all the large industrial cities. The basic contradiction of capitalism is the tremendously accelerated growth of productive forces on the one hand, (which throws thousands of workers into the ranks of the unemployed) and a steadily contracting market on the other. It was in a futile attempt to solve this contradiction that the Roosevelt administration came forward with its N. R. A. plan and its demands for a 40 hour week and a minimum wage scale.

Burden Loaded on Workers

A striking example is the garment workers strike reported in another column of the Militant by comrade Murphy. The manufacturer signed a code agreeing to the 40 hour week and a minimum wage scale of $12 a week. In order to preserve their profits the entire burden of the code agreement had to be loaded on to the shoulders of the workers—mostly girls and women—who were already brutally exploited. A piece work scale was worked out by the bosses and handed to the workers. Under this scale many of the girls found it impossible to make their minimum.

Naturally they were fired and more efficient workers hired in their place. It was not a case of "newcomers" or inexperienced girls that were weeded out by this process. On the contrary, many of them were workers who have been employed in the trade from 5 to 10 years. In the shop where our comrade Rose Casano was employed seven girls were thus dismissed but since comrade Casano enjoys a great deal of respect among the girls in her shop, they carried on a militant fight for the seven girls fired and they were reinstated.

The Same Trick

Another concern which is putting across the same scheme is the notoriously low wage concern, the Artistic Furniture Co. The "depression" wages of this outfit was $1.00 a day for eight hours work. Now since the code has been signed many of the "old" men (old in years as well as in service) have been dismissed because they can't make their minimum. In their place are hired young and husky men, many of whom are former boys drifting into the city, lured by the golden promises of the N. R. A. A "good" upholsterer can make from $15 to $18 a week. We have no worthwhile contacts in this factory but are working in that direction. As is to be expected the shop is bitterly anti-union and two workers have already been fired for talking organization.

Last week 500 employees of the Western Cartridge Co. of East Alton, Ill., walked out in a body protesting against the code and demanding a radical revision of it.

The reactionary ILGWU officials have already announced that at this time it is not a question of wages (heaven forbid!) but only the question of union recognition. Taking advantage of this, the Amalgamated which has some influence here, immediately began to talk about wages and shop conditions and because of this has gained additional prestige among the workers. It has also the additional advantage of being backed up by the socialist party, particularly the Yipsels who have shown exceptional courage and militancy on the picket line, not only in the garment workers strike but also in the molders strike at the Jackson-Evans Iron Co.

Interested Only in Pie-Card

The officialdom of the ILGWU is, of course, as in all other A. F. of L. unions interested only in one thing—the dues and the salaries derived from the dues. Hence its bid for the support of the bosses by laying low on the question of wages. But the workers whose exploitation has been doubled and trebled under the NRA will have something to say about this matter and the leadership will be pushed in a "leftward" direction whether they like it or not.

On one occasion during the strike when our comrade Casano was to be refused a place on a committee because it is known that she is a Communist, a girl in her shop who is hostile to Communism, took the floor to protest saying: "Who knows but that we all may be Communists before this thing is over." She was warmly applauded. The A. F. of L. bureaucrats may find it necessary to revise their past policies—in words at least.

Just as the socialist party and the Musteliet act as a brake on the leftward swing of the working masses towards Communism so it is that the Amalgamated acts as a brake in the needle trades to prevent the workers, disgusted with A. F. of L. tactics from finding their way to the class struggle unions.

Stalinists Win with the Mayor

And it is just here where the rub comes in. The Stalinists have no unions worthy of the name. The NTWU is only a shadow, and should comrade Casano step out, its already insignificant influence would melt away like snow under a mid-summer sun. In spite of the noise

POLITICAL BLOC (Extra-Parliamentarian)

The united front of working class organizations and a political bloc of two organizations against other organizations are two entirely different things. The same elements enter into both but the relationship is entirely different. It is one thing to call a united front of all organizations and find one or more refusing to join. It is another thing to form a political bloc between two organizations as a united front.

The difference between a united front and political blocs as FORMS of united action cannot be settled within the frame work of the discussion on the question of the united front tactic. The differences between two forms can only be understood properly when the theoretical and political questions underlying the question of the united front are considered. It is often possible for organizations of opposite theoretical positions to momentarily pose tactical questions in the same light, as far as surface indications reveal. Such "similarity" is not sufficient grounds for a political bloc. Such a "united front" would only result in blundering and confusing the basic theoretical and more fundamental differences between these organizations. Such is the question and relation of the Right, Centre and Left Opposition.

Davenport Stalinists Use Hooligans

Davenport, Iowa.—The first open air meeting of the branch was held Saturday, August 5, 1933, at the Washington Square where about fifty workers listened to comrade Papum exposing the NRA. The party as usual became frantic due to the renewed activity of the Left Opposition, and immediately methods were devised to disrupt the open air meeting.

They got hold of a degenerate, with whom it is well-known there is something wrong in his upper story, to get up and rave at the speaker, threatening arrests and howling at the top of his voice. But the meeting was not broken up in spite of this rotten method of the party who have to resort to such means because they cannot answer the conclusive arguments of the Left Opposition. It is well-known that the party member called and hauled this depraved individual by the name of Frank Holliday to the place of the meeting.

Not satisfied with the threats that were made at the meeting the party leaders mobilized for the extermination of the Left Opposition, by force, if necessary. So they proceeded to get one of their erstwhile leaders, Ray Secoy, drunk and on Wednesday August 16th they waylaid, with another gangster name unknown, comrade Papum who was on his way to his fishing camp along a lonely road and proceeded to attack him. The fight was only stopped by a stranger and his wife from a house nearby.

It would not be amiss to describe this Ray Secoy who is aspiring for leadership in the party, but who was defeated, due to the activities of the Left Opposition, for the Section Executive Committee at the last election on which he had served up until that time. He is known locally as a degenerate of the worst type. He is trying to utilize the same methods as he previously did in his hijacking of workers by hold-ups for which he has served time once in a penitentiary and another time in the local county jail.

These local leaders of the party are especially vicious due to the exposure by the Left Opposition of their incorrect policies, by the fact that the district leadership of the party, in District 8, has made them scapegoats for the wrong policies of the Central Committee and the District Committee.

It is evident by the above actions that the party leadership will stop at nothing to prevent the Left Opposition from being active and presenting its ideas to the workers of the tri-cities.

The Left Opposition of the tri-cities appeals to all workers to combat such terrorist activities as the party leadership is at this time displaying in order to cover up their miserable failures which are only a part of the national fallacies brought about by their incorrect tactics and policies.

St. Louis Dress Workers Strike for Recognition

St. Louis.—The ILGWU of St. Louis has declared a general walk-out for the industry. To date about 90 percent of the shops have joined the strike. Some 2,500 workers out of the 3,000 employed in the trade have walked out and more are leaving the shops every day. The largest and nationally known shops are effected by the strike.

The reason for the strike is that the bosses have signed the NRA but refuse to pay the minimum wage. The grievance of the place workers is that under the present rates they cannot make the minimum pay. To meet this condition the bosses speed up the machines and if the workers cannot make the minimum they are fired.

THE MARXIAN CONCEPT OF THE UNITED FRONT

The purpose of the united front is, (1) to bring to bear the greatest amount of working class pressure possible against the capitalist system, and (2) to gain our class objective and immediate class interest, (3) to train and educate the masses and their organizations in action, (4) to expose in action all misleaders, agents of the capitalists, and opportunists, and (5) to win the rank and file to class struggle and revolution under the leadership of the Communist Party. This leadership cannot be guaranteed in advance, it must be won in action. The united front must at no time result in a compromise on principles.

The united front is (1) a temporary agreement, (2) between working class organizations, (3) on immediate demands, (4) in action, (5) where each organization retains its organizational independence, (6) refrains from slander and personal attacks, (7) but maintains the right of minority expression and political criticism, (8) no exclusion of working class organizations, (9) and where continued effort must be made to bring into the united front those organizations that refuse to participate.

The organization with a Marxian program has nothing to lose and everything to gain by united action of the working class. Marxism will stand all tests in theory and practice.

—HUOO OEHLER.

Some of the shops pay the code scale to some workers and not to others. Lay-offs are prevalent. About 20 pay checks were photographed which ranged from $1.00 for three days and $3.50 for four days.

The Yipsels have some influence among the shops and have shown great militancy on the picket line. Yesterday 18 pickets were arrested for picketing the shops still working. For singing the Internationale and Solidarity they were arrested on the charge of "disturbing the peace". Among the pickets arrested was comrade Rose Casano of the Left Opposition.

The speeches by the workers are fair but they lack leadership. About all the A. F. of L. gives them is a few radical phrases and then: "We must stick to our (!) government and the N. R. A." The same reactionary stuff over and again.

But in spite of the labor shames the workers are militant. The walls of the old jail echoed with the strains of the Internationale. The cops just stood and gaped in astonishment.

Comrade Casano has been doing fine work and was one of the first to get the workers in her shop to down tools 100 percent. About 100 workers were employed in her shop. The L. O. has offered speakers as well as pickets to the strikers. It is doing all it can to help the strikers and gain influence among them. The Stalinists are nowhere to be seen.

N. Y. FOOD WORKERS MEET FOR UNITED ACTION

Last Tuesday, Aug. 22, in response to a call by the Amalgamated Food Workers Union for united action of all food workers organizations, a mass meeting was held in Palm Gardens Hall, N. Y. More than one thousand workers were present. The TITUL was at hand but the vague references made by its speaker on the subject of united action under a united organization called forth a very cool reception from the workers. Gitlow, (representing the A. F. W. U.) on the contrary, played up this very thing that the party speaker omitted and fairly brought down the house.

Impressions of Fascist Germany

When I arrived in Berlin during the middle of May I went directly to the home of my good comrade S. On my previous visit in February he had invited me to come next time to stay at his house. Now I found a police seal on the door and somehow it helped me to make up my mind very quickly, to get out of the house and make no inquiries. I knew then that both comrade S. and his wife were in the clutches of the fascists. The vision of the savage beatings with steel rods always applied to Communist prisoners sent a cold shiver down my spine.

Halls upon workers' homes were still going on, no less dramatically but more "ordnungsgehemmt". Formerly the groans of the victims could be heard on the outside. Now all sounds were muffled. But the terror was still used by the Nazis to show the possible doubters who was the master. It also provided an outlet for the acrimonious hatred deliberately fostered and tempered to a white heat in every Storm Trooper. Swift and thoroughness had now been added to improve the earlier dramatic staging. These had become specific features of the process of German Fascism taking over power and consolidating its gains.

What a difference in the picture now presented from that of my first visit in February! Then there was an atmosphere as if before a big battle in which the opposing forces had not yet come to grips, had not yet really measured strength. A disquieting anxiety prevailed, a painful uncertainty as to what the next step would be. It was in the air, it was everywhere. Could it be possible? Were the fascists really going to be victorious? Apparently there was yet time to stop the onrushing horde. But time was precious. And then, in May, it had been settled, virtually without a battle. The important features of the "Third Reich" were visible and even the Nazis were surprised at the ease of their victory.

Most typical of the German scene now was the artificially drummed up enthusiasm flowing over into spectacular staged demonstrations. "Celebrating the National Uprising" became the general title covering them all, but almost any occasion could be used for a demonstration; and, besides, they served admirably to feed illusions to the Nazi plebeian following. Highlighting the rehabilitated imperial crown with the Swastika on public buildings meant the careful setting of the stage for a demonstration. Sometimes, in the rush, the Storm Troopers would forget about the national colors and the Swastika would go up alone; but the "enthousiastic" demonstrators did not seem to notice the difference. When the new nationalist reactionary spirit demanded a change of street names, their former obnoxious Marxian, or even more republican coloration, as for example changing Platz der Republik to Adolf Hitler Platz, or the rechristening of such streets as Bruberger Strasse, Karl Marx Strasse, Bebel Strasse, Eberts Allee, etc. a demonstration with the solemnity of a religious ritual would be staged. Similarly at the enunciation of a new program of worthless promises or the installation of new officials under the "Gleichschaltung". Even the burning of Marxian books had to have its festive setting in which would be sacrificed to the devouring flames the literary treasures not only of the German working class movement but also that which gave expression to the country's progress in science and culture.

The greatest demonstrations, from the point of view of numbers, were those on May Day which was converted into a Nazi day of labor. In a certain sense these Nazi May Day demonstrations became a test of strength of the regime. To the workers, with socialist and trade union tradition of long standing, it meant adding insult to injury. Still they could not escape it. For them attendance was made compulsory. Berlin on that day therefore found the bulk of its proletarian marching dejectedly with their footsteps heavy and their heads bowed in agony. In the Ruhr territory on the other hand, I was told, that in most cases they sent stories about along the marching ranks which in a jocular fashion took about the size of the potatoes this year; showing the clenched fist to indicate size (the "Red Front" salute).

May 2 witnessed the final and complete taking over of the trade unions by the Nazis, including their worst stockpiled treasures, and the arrest of practically every trade union official, from the top down. Outstanding among them were Lelup and Grassmann. Both had particularly distinguished themselves by their abject servility. Now the official report of the arrests gave them special mention saying laconically: "transferred to a hos-pitia". Of course, this was all done in typical Nazi fashion with appropriate proclamations about "the furthering of the interests of national elevation" and the protection of the united people against the "Marxist Bonzen". In reality it was no further important step in the Fascist process of "Gleichschaltung". Evidently they had reason to consider the strength of their regime as having fully stood the test; that at least was the verdict of Goebbels at a huge Berlin meeting of his party functionaries held a couple of weeks later. He presented what he called the recent major political achievements, enumerating for special emphasis four different events. First there were in the field of foreign affairs the demand at Geneva for German arms equality and Hitler's speech on foreign policy. At home there were the May Day demonstrations and the capture of the trade unions. Incidentally this also gives a picture of the Nationalist Socialist party political methods; the method of constantly keeping the followers intoxicated with the spirit of marching from victory to victory. All that was lacking was some ceremonial self-criticism. But that is not yet in the faculty of the Nazis.

"I mean that the National Socialist movement is to become the State," Goebbels said at this meeting. "In this the old guard possess an unquestioned privilege," he added amid the thunderous applause of the horde. A little later the party decided that the original hundred thousand members were to be provided with jobs immediately. Surely one could then better understand the reasons for the campaign to freeze out all so-called non-Aryans from their economic and professional positions. One of the very attentive observers of political developments in Germany at that time said to me: "On the day of the Jewish boycott the Storm Troopers had been whipped up to such a frenzy that a mere signal could have turned the whole affair into all the horrors of a Bartholomew's Night." The anti-Jewish campaign was gruesome in all its revolting details. But it was essentially a by-product of the real aim, namely, to cow the working class with a reign of terror.

It was difficult to imagine the German working class cowed or in abject submission. But a look at the Berlin North district soon convinced me that it was so. I stopped one day to read one of the Ullstein papers displayed for passersby. Beside me were two women. Their murmur and neat appearance told they were from the working class quarters. Both had their attention attracted to an article dealing with the trial of the Altona Communists.

3. Can the Social-Democracy Regenerate Itself?

German comrades testify that the social democratic workers and even many of the social democratic bureaucrats are "disillusioned" with democracy. We must extract all we can out of the critical moods of the reformist workers, in the interests of their revolutionary education. But at the same time the extent of the reformists' "disillusionment" must be clearly understood. The social democratic high priests scold democracy so as to justify themselves. Unwilling to admit that they showed themselves as contemptible cowards, incapable of fighting for the democracy which they created and for their soft berths in it, these gentlemen shift the blame from themselves to the intangible democracy. As we see, this radicalism is not only cheap but also spurious through and through! Let the bourgeoisie only beckon these "disillusioned" ones with its little finger and they will run on all fours to a new coalition with it. It is true, in the mass of social-democratic workers a real disgust with the betrayals and mirages of democracy is being born. But to what extent? The greater half of the seven to eight million social democratic voters is in a state of the greatest confusion, glib passivity, and capitulation to the victors. At the same time, a new generation will be forming under the heel of Fascism, a generation to which the Weimar constitution will be an historic legend. What line then will the political crystallization within the working class follow? This depends upon many conditions, among them, of course, also upon our policy.

Historically the direct replacement of the Fascist regime by a workers' state is not excluded. But for the realization of this possi-and the demand for the death penalty. Their eyes met in silence. It was a mutual dreadfully frightened expression. At that moment two trucks loaded to the bumpers with Nazi Storm Troopers approached. Their "Heilmurde" split the air. The women hurried away. That excessively charged atmosphere made one feel uncomfortable. A couple of weeks later I learned that the supreme penalty had been imposed upon four of the Altona prisoners. When receiving the verdict, the leader of the group, Meckler declared: "The death penalty is the highest honor to a revolutionist."

In February the fascists were only beginning their expansion, reaching out for every position within the state apparatus, cutting the ground from underneath their opponents while, at the same time, also moving by way of head-on collision. But the advance was still quite chaotic. The streets swarmed with the Nazi ruffians, moving in detachments in the process of taking possession, but not yet entirely sure of themselves. Members of the Steelhelmets would meet, click their heels and salute in the stiff Prussian military fashion, causing a jealous animosity among the Storm Troopers. Here and there could still be seen groups of unformed Reichsbannermen; but they were much more uncertain. The workers everywhere carried the expressions of bewilderment and fearful anticipations.

Did the German workers fall in the decisive hour because they were not ready to resist the Fascist advance? No, that would not be the conclusion of the attentive observer. For that there were too many examples of actual readiness. There were the instances of general strikes in the free city of Lubeck and in the city of Stassfurt protesting against the Nazi murders. In both cases all wheels were brought to a standstill. For anti-Fascist demonstrations would turn out oftentimes hundreds of thousands eagerly awaiting a decisive leadership. In Hamburg, at the time when Nazi Storm Troopers began to occupy the workers' headquarters, thousands of workers gathered in front of their buildings, ready to defend it. But the officials on the inside who were more frightened at this mass demonstration and anyway suspected a Communist plot, beseeched and enjoined their members to stay at home.

One incident of workers' bravery I observed personally. Although I arrived only as the smoke cleared away. It was at Neukoelln where I came one evening when Storm Troopers had made a raid on a restaurant frequented by Communists. I got near enough to see some brown shirts who lay sprawled on the street being picked up by their brethren. The workers had given a good account of themselves. But that was only one of the isolated, desperate efforts to fight off the mortal enemy. A centralized direction to these efforts, a firm policy, or a serious attempt to unite the working class was not at hand. The parties in which the German workers, through their tradition of organization discipline, had placed their confidence, failed. In that lies the real explanation of the ease of the Fascist victory.

Stalin Reassures Hitler on Trotsky's 'Return'

Two or three weeks ago, the official Soviet news agency, TASS, denied the rumor that Trotsky is returning to the USSR. The solemn and categorical tone of this denial gave cause to believe that the Kremlin was pursuing some important political aim. But not in the field of internal politics, for neither the denial nor the newspaper rumor against which it was directed, was published in the U. S. S. R. The denial was intended fully and exclusively for foreign consumption.

The sense of this denial will become sufficiently clear when it is recalled that about two years ago Trotsky wrote on the necessity of preparing the Red Army for a struggle against National Socialism. This article, not even mentioned in the U. S. S. R., found in its time a loud echo in the National-Socialist press. We know with what demonstrative friendliness the Stalinist bureaucracy received Hitler's coming to power. "Izvestia" wrote: "The public opinion of the Soviet Union has never entertained any plans, directed against the present current in Germany". These words signified nothing short of a demonstrative disavowal from Trotsky. Can there be any doubt that the article in Izvestia was written after a corresponding diplomatic inquiry from Berlin and that it had as its purpose to convince Hitler that Moscow holds unswervingly to the doctrine of socialism in one country?

At the time TASS published abroad the categorical statement that Trotsky "will not return" to the U. S. S. R., the Berlin paper, Vossische Zeitung, directed an official inquiry to Trotsky through its Constantinople correspondent as to whether he is really returning to Russia. The very fact of the inquiry seems unexpected and at the same time very significant, especially if the fact is taken into consideration that the Vossische Zeitung is now completely in the hands of the Nazis. Hitler simply ordered the former liberal paper, through its former liberal correspondent, to check up on the newspaper rumor of the coming return of Trotsky to Moscow and of the corresponding

The Overflow of the Cuban Revolt

The Cuban revolt to oust Gerardo Machado, has been successful. So general was the opposition to the "butcher" that Ambassador Welles, who was attempting to eliminate Machado peacefully, was not given time to bring his "mediation" to the hoped-for conclusion.

The disaffection of the army was the last straw necessary to swing the scales against the dictator proving that the Cuban generals still recognize the master's voice. American imperialism, after many months of bargaining with anti-Machado elements, had at last spoken clearly and the army shifted its allegiance.

There is every indication that the rank and file of the army would have mutinied en-masse against their officers and supported the already nation-wide general strike of the workers and petty-bourgeoisie, if their superiors had not come forward in support of the revolt at the time they did.

All the decisive forces were against the perpetuation of Machado's tyrannical regime. The workers and peasants together with the urban middle classes were the first to take up the struggle openly. American imperialism during the whole period since last February had given signs of its intention to peacefully replace Machado before a mass uprising that might carry the change too far, could get under way. On July 1st, the imperialist representative, U. S. Ambassador Sumner Welles, commenced his negotiations for that end, with the frank cooperation of almost all of the bourgeois opposition elements. The masses however, understanding in a confused and general way that some maneuver was afoot, took the offensive under the leadership of Communist and radical petty-bourgeois elements. The general strike proclaimed in the first days of August, received the wholehearted support of the Cuban working class, and was also utilized by the bourgeois oppositionists inasmuch as it was directed against the Machado regime. Wall Street's "mediation" move had failed, and now the only way to check the mass revolt was to be found in going along with it. The army caught between two fires both of which were directed against the government, joined the movement at the eleventh hour, and in the interests of Wall Street thus assuring the downfall of the dictator before the insurgent masses should get entirely out of control. Machado gone, Dr. Cespedes was hurriedly sworn in as provisional president and has already at this writing commenced to bring repressive measures to bear in order to check the mass movement, which barely commences to show the first signs of abatement.

Once unleashed, following the first reports of the "butcher's" flight, the fury of the populace was uncontrollable. The National Palace was sacked as were also the private homes of many of Machado's personal supporters and those of all his cabinet ministers. The offices of "El Heraldo de Cuba" Machadist daily were wrecked and the presses demolished. Many workers and soldiers under the leadership of members of the "ABC", systematically hunted down and slew those who had most distinguished themselves as murderers and torturers of enemies of the old regime. The police were either neutralized or powerless to interfere. Colonel Antonio Jimenez, chief of the "porra", Machado's extra-legal strong arm force, infamous for its prosecution of revolutionary workers and students, was among the first to encounter the wrath of the enraged populace. Jose Magrinal, who was sent to Mexico by Machado in January 1929 to assassinate comrade Julio Antonio Mella, did not even have time to hurry for his hole like the proverbial rat. In all, a score or more of Machado's "finest" have been killed. If the "butcher" himself escaped it was only due to his superior elusiveness and better protection.

The deposed tyrant, now in refuge at Nassau in the Bahamas Islands, may yet meet the fate of his cohorts. Meanwhile, he does not intend to suffer any unnecessary personal inconvenience, as is evidenced by the huge sums of money amounting into millions of dollars, that have in recent years been the posited by him in foreign banks, doubtless in anticipation of such a contingency. American imperialism will now be able to consolidate its forces in Cuba. A "new deal" for Cuba is already being spoken of quite openly, and the sending of four American warships to Havana is not so much an episode of it is symptomatic of the spirit of this "New Deal". Attempts will be made to smooth over the differences and contradictions of imperialism and native capitalism at the expense of the workers. This new situation will open broad perspectives of struggle for the Cuban workers, as no possible arrangement under capitalism can solve the contradictions of Cuba's economy except at the expense of the workers.

The new situation is pregnant with great possibilities for the Communist party and the proletariat. But in order to fulfill its role, our party must analyze realistically all the factors in the situation. The present mass movement raised by the general strike, must be utilized to the limit in order to better entrench our party among the masses, democratic demands must be raised and consistently fought for in order to gain every possible advantage from the period of confusion that is bound to ensue, and which the "concentration" government of Dr. Cespedes, even with Wall Street's direct and complete support, cannot entirely eliminate. Hundreds of exiles and political prisoners are returning to Cuba from their places of exile abroad, and from the detention colony on Isla de Pinos. Among these in addition to Communists are also many petty bourgeois aspirants for political jobs. Among these latter, a jockeying for power, hardly intended to calm matters, is bound to take place. All indications point to a period of internal struggles among the diverse sectors of the bourgeois and imperialist camps. If an attempt at a democratic regime is made, it can only be temporary as the continued crisis is not such as to permit of democratic forms. Some form of bourgeois dictatorship under imperialist tutelage is inevitable. The only road out of Cuba's permanent economic crisis is that of the proletarian revolution. But if this is to be seriously considered the Cuban Communists must lay aside their opportunistic slogan of an "anti-imperialist and agrarian revolution". This slogan can only lead the proletarian vanguard deeper into the slough of nationalism. —R. N.

STALINISTS REFUSE L. O. REPRESENTATIVE RIGHT TO SPEAK

Youngstown, Ohio—About three hundred workers attended the August First Anti-War demonstration of the Communist party here. Representatives from the Unemployed Councils, Steel and Metal Workers Industrial Union, the International Labor Defense, and John Marshall, Communist candidate for governor, spoke. But a representative of the local Unemployed Federation was not given the platform in spite of the fact that it had endorsed the demonstration and had a request of the C. P. through L. Mack several days ago that one of its Executive members be permitted to speak specifically on the local Federation. Perhaps the fact that the speaker it had proposed was L. Newby of the Left Opposition had something to do with the Stalinists' "inability" to spare five minutes of its program for other than official C. P. speakers. —N.

At the 7th congress of the Russian Communist Party, in March 1928, during the discussion of the party program, Lenin carried on a decisive struggle against Bukharin, who considered that parliamentarism is done for, once and for all, that it is historically "exhausted". "We must..." Lenin retorted, "write a new program of the Soviet power, without renouncing the use of bourgeois parliamentarism. To believe that we will not be thrown back, is Utopia..." after every setback, if class forces inimical to us should push us to this old position, we shall proceed to what has been conquered by experience—to the Soviet power..."

Lenin objected to a doctrinaire anti-parliamentarism with regard to a country which had already gained the Soviet regime. We must not tie our hands beforehand, he taught Bukharin, for we may be pushed back to the once abandoned positions. In Germany there has not been and there is no proletarian dictatorship, but there is a dictatorship of Fascism; Germany has been thrown back even from bourgeois democracy. Under these conditions, to renounce beforehand the use of democratic slogans and of bourgeois parliamentarism means to clear the field for a social democracy of a new formation. Leon Trotsky on the Question of Fascism and Democratic Slogans

Why Fascism in Germany is called upon to play a role entirely opposite to that which it played in Italy, remains incomprehensible. Because "Germany is not Italy". Victorious Fascism is in reality not a locomotive of history but its gigantic brake. Just as the policy of the social democracy prepared the triumph of Hitler, so the regime of National Socialism inevitably leads to the warning-off of democratic illusions.

3. Can the Social-Democracy Regenerate Itself?

German comrades testify that the social democratic workers and even many of the social democratic bureaucrats are "disillusioned" with democracy. We must extract all we can out of the critical moods of the reformist workers, in the interests of their revolutionary education. But at the same time the extent of the reformists' "disillusionment" must be clearly understood. The social democratic high priests scold democracy so as to justify themselves. Unwilling to admit that they showed themselves as contemptible cowards, incapable of fighting for the democracy which they created and for their soft berths in it, these gentlemen shift the blame from themselves to the intangible democracy. As we see, this radicalism is not only cheap but also spurious through and through! Let the bourgeoisie only beckon these "disillusioned" ones with its little finger and they will run on all fours to a new coalition with it. It is true, in the mass of social-democratic workers a real disgust with the betrayals and mirages of democracy is being born. But to what extent? The greater half of the seven to eight million social democratic voters is in a state of the greatest confusion, glib passivity, and capitulation to the victors. At the same time, a new generation will be forming under the heel of Fascism, a generation to which the Weimar constitution will be an historic legend. What line then will the political crystallization within the working class follow? This depends upon many conditions, among them, of course, also upon our policy.

Historically the direct replacement of the Fascist regime by a workers' state is not excluded. But for the realization of this possility it is necessary that a powerful, illegal Communist party form itself in the process of struggle against Fascism, under the leadership of which the proletariat could seize power. However, it must be said that a creation of a revolutionary party of this sort in illegality is not very probable, at any rate it is not assured by anything in advance. The discontented indignation, fermentation of the masses will, from a certain moment onward, grow much faster than the illegal formation of the party vanguard. And every lack of clarity in the consciousness of the masses will inevitably help democracy.

This does not at all mean, that after the fall of Fascism, Germany will again have to go through a long school of parliamentarism. Fascism will not eradicate the past political experience, it is even less capable of changing the social structure of the nation. It would be the greatest mistake to expect a new lengthy democratic epoch in the development of Germany. But in the revolutionary awakening of the masses democratic slogans will inevitably constitute the first chapter. Even if the further progress of the struggle should in general not permit, even for one day, the regeneration of a democratic state—and this is very possible—the struggle itself cannot develop by the circumvention of democratic slogans! A revolutionary party that would attempt to jump over this stage, would break its neck.

The question of the social-democracy is closely connected with this general perspective. Will it reappear on the stage? The old organization is irrevocably lost. But this does not at all mean that social democracy cannot be regenerated under a new historic mask. Opportunist parties which fall and decompose so easily under the blows of reaction, come back to life as easily at the first political revival. We observed this in Russia in the example of the Mensheviks and the S. R.'s. German social democracy can not only regenerate itself, but even acquire great influence, if the revolutionary proletarian party should set up a doctrinaire "negation" of the slogan of democracy against a dialectic attitude towards them. The Prædium of the Comintern in this field, as in so many others, remains a gratuitous assistant of reformism.

4. The runderlities Improve On Stalinists.

The confusion in the question of democratic slogans, has revealed itself most profoundly in the programmatic theses of the opportunist group of Brandler-Thälheimer on the question of the struggle against Fascism. The Communist party, the theses read, "should unite the manifestations of discontentment of all (!) classes against the Fascist dictatorship". (Gegen den Strom, page 7, the word "all" is underlined in the original). At the same time, the theses insistently warn: "The partial slogan can not be of a bourgeois-democratic nature." Between these two statements, each of which is erroneous, there is an irreconcilable contradiction. In the first place, the formula of the unification of the discontentment of "all classes" sounds absolutely incredible. The Russian Marxists did at one time abuse such a formulation in the struggle against czarism. Out of this abuse grew out the Menshevik conception of the revolution, later on adopted by Stalin for China. But in Russia, at least, it was a question of the collision of the bourgeois nation with the privileged monarchy. In what sense can one speak, in a bourgeois nation, of the struggle of "all classes" against Fascism, which is the tool of the big bourgeoisie against the proletariat? It would be instructive to see how Thälheimer, the manufacturer of theoretic vulgarities, would unite the discontentment of an unemployed worker. How else can one unite a movement of "all classes" if not by putting oneself on the basis of bourgeois democracy? Verily, a classic combination of opportunism with an ultra-radicalism in words!

The movement of the proletariat against the Fascist regime will acquire an ever greater mass character to the extent that the petty bourgeoisie becomes disappointed with Fascism, isolating the possessing summits and the government apparatus. The task of a proletarian party would consist in utilizing the weakening of the yoke on the part of the petty bourgeois reaction for the purpose of arousing the activity of the proletariat on to the road of the conquest of the lower strata of the petty bourgeoisie.

It is true, the growth of the discontentment of the intermediary strata and the growth of the resistance of the workers will create a crack in the bloc of the possessing classes and will spur their "left flank" to seek contact with the petty bourgeoisie. The task of the proletarian party with relation to the "liberal" flank of the possessors will consist, however, not in including them both in a bloc of "all classes" against Fascism, but on the contrary in immediately declaring a decisive struggle against it for influence on the lower strata of the petty bourgeoisie.

Under what political slogans will this struggle take place? The dictatorship of Hitler grew directly out of the Weimar constitution. The representatives of the petty bourgeoisie have, with their own hands presented Hitler with the mandate for a dictatorship. If we should assume a very favorable and quick development of the Fascist crisis, then the demand for the convocation of the Reichstag with the inclusion of all the banished deputies, may, at a certain moment, unite the workers with the widest strata of the petty bourgeoisie. If the crisis should break out later and the memory of the Reichstag should have had time to obliterate itself, the slogan of new elections may acquire great popularity. It is sufficient that such a road is possible. To tie one's hands with relation to temporary democratic slogans which may be forced upon us by our petty bourgeois allies and by the backward strata of the proletariat itself, would be fatal doctrinarism.

Brandler-Thälheimer believe, however, that we should only advocate "democratic rights for the laboring masses": the right of assembly, trade unions, freedom of press, organization and strikes. In order to emphasize their radicalism more, they add: "These demands should be strictly (!) distinguished from bourgeois democratic demands of universal democratic rights". There is no person more wretched than the opportunist who takes the knife of ultra-radicalism between his teeth!

Freedom of assembly and the press only for the laboring masses is conceivably solely under the dictatorship of the proletariat, that is, under the nationalization of buildings, printing establishments, etc. It is possible that the dictatorship of the proletariat in Germany will also have to employ exceptional laws against exploiters: that depends upon the historic moment, upon international conditions, upon the relation of internal forces. But it is not at all excluded that, having conquered power, the workers of Germany will find themselves sufficiently powerful to allow freedom of assembly and the press also to the exploiters of yesterday, in accordance with their actual political influence, and not with the extent of their treasury; the treasury will have been expropriated. Thus, even for the period of the dictatorship there is in principle no basis for limiting beforehand the freedom of assembly and the press only to the laboring masses. The proletariat may be forced to such a limitation; but this is not a question of principle. It is doubly absurd to advocate such a demand under the conditions of present day Germany, when freedom of the press and assembly exists for all but the proletariat. The arousing of the proletarian struggle against the Fascist inferno will take place, at least in the first stages, under the slogans: give also to us, workers, the right of assembly and the press. The Communists, of course, will at this stage also carry on a propaganda in favor of the Soviet regime but they will at the same time support every real mass movement under democratic slogans, and wherever possible will take the initiative in such a movement.

Between the regime of bourgeois democracy and the regime of proletarian democracy there is no third regime, "the democracy of the laboring masses". True, the Spanish republic calls itself "the republic of the laboring" even in the text of its constitution. But this is a formula of political churlishness. The Brandlerian formula of democracy "only for the laboring", particularly in combination with the "unity of all classes", seems to be especially designed to confuse and mislead the revolutionary vanguard in the most important question: "When and to what extent to adapt ourselves to the movement of the petty bourgeoisie and the backward strata of the working masses, what concessions to make to them in the question of the tempo of the movement and the slogans on the order of the day, so as more successfully to rally the proletariat under the banner of its own revolutionary dictatorship?"

Discussion on the German Defeat

The article below represents the first installment in a discussion on the problems of the German situation after the victory of Fascism. Comrades are invited to state their views which will be printed as discussion articles.—Ed.)

In the course of events in Germany, which culminated in the complete victory of Fascism, the international proletarian movement finds itself face to face with an entirely new situation. In its objective essence it means a new historical stage; the inauguration of a new revolutionary period with its serious implications not only for Germany but for the world as a whole. That it will be fraught with new attacks upon the workers, with prospects of imperialist wars moving much closer, with new serious dangers to the Soviet Union and also with new revolutionary possibilities, goes without saying.

In measuring the consequences of these events the international Left Opposition has some time ago made clear that for this new situation the orientation, the position and the terminology of the past will no longer suffice. We thereby placed ourselves entirely upon the basis of the new historical situation created by the victory of Fascism and the collapse of the German Communist Party. Where we had previously emphasized the immediately pressing problems for a change of course of the party and of the Comintern to prevent the Fascist victory, that is, where we had emphasized the short perspective we now place before ourselves the long perspective. Where we before, in pressing for a change of course, also held the position of reform of the party, we are now compelled to recognize its complete breakdown and to orient ourselves upon that basis. To this extent there was unanimity within the international Left Opposition. In this we also met with sympathy and considerable agreement from other working class groups stirred by the course of events. Some doubt, however, did naturally arise when the question was posed fully in the concrete: What must follow the breakdown of the party? Can there for us be any other course than that of a new party? To pose the question that way was such a radical departure from our former position of a party fraction fighting for reform of the party. But this was necessitated by the historical change which had taken place and, in the first instance, the doubts could only emerge wherever the full significance of this change was momentarily lost sight of. These doubts are disappearing and in their place we have a greater clarity.

In order that we here in America may better understand what is involved in this question of whether or not a new party in Germany we must endeavor to fully appreciate what the historical change means to the working class in general and to the German proletariat in particular. We have already mentioned that it means a new revolutionary period. No further proof of that is needed than the tangible evidences of experience since German Fascism came into power. What needs particular emphasis, however, is the seriousness of the scope of the working class defeat. First the Social Democracy miserably exposed its bankruptcy followed by the bankruptcy of the Communist party. Both parties were numerically powerful yet they disappeared in face of the onslaught of the Fascist regime. Today there is no revolutionary party in Germany. This is the greatest defeat recorded in working class history. It is the culmination to a series of defeats suffered by the Comintern beginning with Germany of 1923, through the disaster of the Chinese revolution and back to Germany in 1933. And yet all these defeats occur under the conditions of the downward spiral of capitalism, during the very period of its bankruptcy being the most glaringly demonstrated. This is the frightful paradox. And because of that the responsibility for the policies and strategy which brought such disaster becomes only more times greater. Of course, the Comintern leadership, the Stalinist leadership, must be held entirely responsible. Once again the importance of a working class revolutionary party has been demonstrated, but this time in a negative sense. Already from the time of the Communist manifesto we knew that the emancipation of the working class was unthinkable without its own revolutionary party. It was the absence of such a party, or to put it more precisely, the failure of the Stalinist party to perform this function, which accounts for the Fascist and not the proletarian being victorious. In seeking the reason for that, when traced to its source, the verdict will read: It is because we had in Germany a party of national Socialism instead of a party of international revolution. For proof of this, wherever doubts or disagreements still exist outside of our ranks, we need not confine ourselves to the inescapable conclusion that the theory of Socialism in One Country can produce nothing else but parties of national Socialism. We can add the advice to the comrades to study the numerous declarations of German party leaders on their program of national and social emancipation. This program is of course only a reflection of the basic party and Comintern orientation.

Today, after this frightful defeat, the German party leaders, speaking from emigration, and behind them the Comintern leaders, commit the double crime of stubbornly denying the historical character of the defeat and add to it the attempt of maintaining the dangerous illusions in the minds of the Communist workers that Hitler will soon get out of business.

But as Hitler remains and consolidates his power the disillusionment will inevitably set in. New and more frightful demoralization will result. The Communist workers will leave the Stalinist party leaders in disgust and despair. Today these gigantic experiences are fresh in the minds of the Communist

United States at London Confab

The World Economic Conference, just concluded at London, met at the most critical period of world crisis. The victory of Fascism in Germany and Japanese aggression having heavy over the conference. Between these realities and American imperialism, the conference was unable to end satisfactorily for the leading European powers. In this situation, 1933 represents an accumulated 1913, and therefore, many countries left the conference with fear of tomorrow.

Conclusions drawn from the London Economic Conference indicate that the United States was not only able to hold its own position, it was also able to leave the gathering in a stronger position. Imperialist powers and capitalist nations do not enter peace conferences and economic conferences with any illusions about their ability to solve the "objectives" listed for public consumption. This is especially true of American imperialism under the Roosevelt government.

The real objective of the economic conference that met at London was the imperialist struggle for points of vantage, at the expense of the other powers in the preparation for more intense economic and military wars. Peace conferences are cloaks for greater economic and military wars.

The high sounding phrases and humanitarian cloak was pierced by the reality of the economic conflicts and imperialist antagonisms at the very opening of the London Conference. Prime Minister MacDonald, in behalf of Europe, and especially in behalf of England's hegemony over Europe raised the forbidden question of war debts. This move revealed an attempt of a European united front against American imperialism which came to London with the intention and plan to further the process of putting Europe on rations.

The powerful pressure of American imperialism and the tremendous contradictions in Europe since Hitler took power smashed this attempted united front. This first attempt was repeated on several occasions but to no avail. The next attempt to drive American imperialism from her strong position was the European effort to peg up the dollar and obtain the temporary stabilization of international exchange. England was part of this bloc, half concealed and half open, nevertheless, the bloc and plan was shattered, especially after Roosevelt's statement on this question. Next the die-hards under the leadership of France organized the Gold Bloc. This move, in the long run played into the hands of American imperialism because it widened the gap between the French and British interests and thereby gave America a better position in this three cornered fight.

It is true that Germany played no outstanding role at the conference at the rise of Fascism to power in Germany caused a shake-up and a realignment. It contributed to the success of America against Europe.

American imperialism went to London well armed for the battle against Europe, as well as Japan. Some of the weapons in the hands of the American representatives were pounded out in the first days of the Roosevelt administration. This move was cloaked as part of a national policy but was pointed out at that time in its true international relation in the columns of the Militant. The Banking laws and farm relief amendment, which were important international weapons as well as internal weapons were used very effectively at the conference.

America went off the gold standard, repudiated the gold clause, gave the President power to inflate currency as well as other forms of inflation and to reduce the content of the dollar by one-half. If the American representatives did not hold this threat over the London conference another story would have been written. These weapons were very effective in helping the American representatives in shattering the united front of the European powers against America. The mere threat to use some of them resulted in excellent results at London as well as within the country. The internal policy of the Roosevelt administration is an integral part of this international struggle. It is two sides of the same problem.

Economic collaboration and organized production is as hopeless as non-aggression pacts (regardless of what Litvinoff says). No one but liberals and half-wits expected such from London. America desired more from the London conference than the other powers. The London conference can be summed up as a prelude to a more intense on-workers and yet there is no discussion permitted by the party leadership. Inquiries into the correctness of the official line are taboo. Those who express doubts are branded and expelled. From these facts it follows that what still exists in Germany of sporadic activities by the official party remnants is not at all the beginnings of an orientation based upon the new conditions but only the tail end of the past. After that follows the void, for there can be no other perspectives for a party leadership which denies the existence of the new historical conditions.

The facts being so, one can brand only as criminal light-mindedness the final conclusion of the Comintern resolution adopted after the German defeat; the resolution of April 1. This resolution finds that it is necessary to strengthen the party and all the mass organizations of the working class.

"To prepare the masses for decisive battles. For the overthrow of capitalism and for the overthrow of the Fascist dictatorship by an armed rising."

In other words, the armed uprising is placed on the agenda in the midst of the greatest defeat yet suffered by working class. Upon what prognosis does it rest? First of all upon the Comintern bluff that the cause of what has happened in Germany is Social Democracy. Its part of the betrayal never needed to be doubted; but that does not in the least explain the Comintern and its position. Secondly it rests upon the foundation of the Comintern affirming the infallibility of its characterization of "Social Fascism," thus nullifying and giving the lie to any expressions for desire of a united front with social democracy. Further it rests upon an estimation of the preceding governments of Papen and Schleicher having been Fascist governments the same as Hitler's. Finally it rests upon the analysis, as presented in the resolution, that there was no revolutionary situation in Germany. Yet a complete historical change has taken place. But the change is not toward strengthening the possibilities of the proletarian revolution. On the contrary, the Fascist reaction is immensely strengthened, the German working class defeated, the Communist parties elsewhere declining, demoralized and impotent. In face of this the armed insurrection is placed on the agenda by the Comintern resolution. Criminal light-mindedness is about the mildest characterization one can find for this.

The international Left Opposition poses the problems facing the German working class, and the world movement, from the point of view of opposite considerations. To rebuild upon an entirely new foundation what lies shattered in Germany, its general working class movement and above all to rebuild the revolutionary party, that is the task. There can be no more talk about the old basis or the old formulae. The problem is to build new. The Left Opposition proposes an orientation toward a new party in Germany liberated from the deadly embrace of bankrupt Stalinism. —ARNE SWABECK.

Very truly yours,
Col. Leopold Philipp,
Chairman, Bureau of Compliance.

He added the following postscript without the knowledge of the union officials:

"This letter was sent to help pacify the labor leaders." The whole fraud of the NRA as the impartial arbitrator in strike disputes is here shown up in all its nakedness. After secretly conspiring with the bosses association to put across starvation wages in the industry, the NRA sends a hypocritical "reprimand" to the very elements with whom he made the conspiracy.

Now, when we have the bosses licked is the time for solid ranks in the strike. Let there be no talk of going back to work. NO FAKE SETTLEMENTS. Without the recognition of the union you are helpless to enforce whatever conditions you have achieved by the strike. Don't let the boss pull any promises to groups of men in the shop. It's too late for that. If he wants to settle, make him settle with the union. The time is past for herding unpolished stones under the slave conditions of the past 3 years. —LANKIN-COWL.

slaughter on Europe, a greater drive by America to put Europe on rations, a prelude to the imperialist world war—in which America hopes she can duplicate her role of 1914-1918.

The Paris Soir paper summed up the World Economic Conference in the following words: "If we allow the depreciation of overseas currency to continue, their rivalry will be more than ever irresistible and our reserves will be wasted. It is only a question of time until European industries will be controlled by the United States." —HUGO OEHLER.

are such forces in order to give direction to the revolt of the disillusioned workers in the very near future. Proper tactics will be able to guide such a struggle to a higher level (than the recent western Penn. experience).

P. M. A. Capitulation and Stalinist Blunders

The Progressive Miners of America lost their most favorable opportunity and now the fruit of the fight wage policy has resulted in lost ground. Their capitulations policy has not even enabled them to get in on the NRA bantwagon. The right wing, or at least a big section of it, is ready to go over to the folds of the UMWA. The left wing must intensify its work toward the realization of its policy. If the Progressive Miners of America had called a national conference prior to the NRA becoming a law as advocated by the left wing and had conducted a left wing policy, a different story would be written. However, the wrong policies of the right wing of the PMA, and the whole series of Stalinist blunders for years in the trade union field means that we have to retrace our steps to obtain a running start for the coming struggles which are sure to develop in the shock and decayed coal industry. The reorganization of this industry through the NRA will cause increased class antagonisms between the operators and miners as well as between the large and small operators.

The National Miners Union could have saved the day some time ago if the Stalinists had a correct trade union policy, understood the united front and used a little common horse sense. Now they are pushed into a more difficult corner. Due to the Stalinist's wrong policies and the lost ground, our task is to retrace our steps through the wing of the UMWA and the PMWA. Then the Communists can once again take the lead in the coming struggles. To continue to play with the paper National Miners Union is to waste valuable time and retard the movement of the class.

and three-fourth cents per quart. The better grades were priced at from 2 to 2 1/2 cents per quart. But the big dairy companies, including the Dairymen's League classified all milk alike and paid an average of 1 3/4 cents per quart. The farmers thus found that they were again sold out. From then on their conditions grew from bad to worse. Most of them cannot meet their taxes, not to speak of interests and payments on mortgages. A degrading poverty set in. The farmers reached the end of their endurance. A breaking point came. The strike was declared and spread to seven counties involving many thousands of farmers. At their meetings the farmers agreed not only to hold back their own milk supply but also to picket the milk stations. There they took care of the scabs in the effective manner of dumping their milk.

"Striking Against the Government"

The owners of the big dairy companies, however, could lean back in their swivel chairs saying: "You are not striking against us, you are striking against the government. Meanwhile Governor Lehman the willing tool of the dairy companies, concentrated all the state troopers in the territory to give the striking farmers a lesson in law and order, enforced by clubs, tear gas and riot guns. He proclaimed that all law abiding citizens are to be protected, by that he meant the scabs. He proclaimed that all law breakers, meaning the striking farmers, must be prosecuted. Several hundred were subsequently arrested.

The striking farmers demanded as their share 45 percent of the price at which milk retails in the cities. This would mean about 4 to 5 cents a quart. The trouble is, however, that the farmers have no organization. They are merely loosely held together by pressure of the desperate conditions under which they suffer. Nevertheless they all expressed themselves as ready to fight to a finish, stating that they had nothing to lose. At the time of this writing a truce has been declared and it remains to be seen whether the strike will be renewed, whether the big dairy companies, aided by the state forces, will be able to enforce their kind of an agreement.

The roads here in all directions have been patrolled by about 500 state troopers equipped with steel helmets and gas bombs. How many sheriffs and deputies were added to this force I do not know but in many instances actual wholesale deputizing took place. The Dairymen's League asked the governor to also call in the National Guard. For the time being that is held in abeyance. There is no sign of the Milk Control Board offering a solution, but meanwhile the farmers are learning rapidly that the government is not for them but against them. —GADFLY.

U.S. Holds High Cards in Cuba

The anti-Machado movement was essentially anti-imperialist, at different times different classes came to the front and occupied the center of the stage. The students and the petty bourgeois constituted the left wing of the nationalist front. While the proletariat remained passive they fought the military dictatorship with terroristic methods. Sections of the bourgeoisie went in for heavier work. They organized military insurrections which were put down.

The direct intervention of the proletariat into the struggle precipitated the crisis which drove Machado out. The general strike has been described as a "passive, revolutionary" one. It is unquestionable that the proletarian organizations, many of them, distinctly left in political orientation, were opposed to both Machado and his imperialist masters. But the press dispatches fail to show the revolutionary content of their participation in the struggle.

Pre-Revolutionary Situation

The situation which developed was a pre-revolutionary one. It required the determined intervention of the proletariat under the leadership of a resolute, revolutionary vanguard to develop the situation into a revolutionary one and prepare for the seizure of power. The demands which the workers made, not on their bosses, but on the new government before it had an opportunity to consolidate its power, were modest to an extreme: immediate freedom of all imprisoned workers; repeal of certain legislation affecting wage scales; stricter enforcement of the eight hour day law; recognition of the Confederación Nacional Obrero de Cuba, the national trade union center; and regulations to put in force lower prices for foodstuffs.

These are essentially democratic demands. All the more astonishing is the statement of the Central Committee of the American Communist Party in the Daily Worker of August 4: "Butcher Machado is gone, driven out by the mass revolutionary uprising of the Cuban workers, peasants and toiling population, organized around the general political strike, which was initiated by the Communist Party of Cuba!" The question arises: if the Communist party is so well rooted in the proletariat that it can organize a general political strike why did it not put forward demands corresponding to the situation?

The truth of the matter is that the Communist party did not organize the strike and is not, unfortunately a decisive factor in the situation; that the Daily Worker is boasting; and that the proletariat with inexcusable modesty marched behind the bourgeoisie against Machado. That is why the struggle did not rise above an anti-Machado movement. The modesty of the proletariat below and the skill and pressure of American imperialism above combined to confine the anti-Machado struggle to an anti-Machado movement. The job of Summer Welles consisted in easing Machado out to allow the rising tide of discontent, and slipping in a substitute of the same servile stripe, but one more agreeable to the population. The situation created by the intervention of the proletariat very nearly upset his plans. But the "disinterestedness" of the proletariat which demanded nothing "unreasonable" or "unpatriotic" for itself allowed Roosevelt-Welles to retain the cloak of friendly mediation, that is to say, to keep the lid on the anti-imperialist movement, without resorting to more forceful measures.

None the less the mediators were worried. They had to allow the people to blow off steam. They utilized the anti-Machado sentiments of an entire country as a safety valve. The hatred of the people for Machado took on violent forms. The members of La Porra were hunted down like rats and killed where they were found. The Presidential Palace was sacked. The Lleras de Cuba a Machado paper was also sacked. The soldiers and police stood by and even lent a hand occasionally.

Céspedes' Job

In this way mediation canalized the anti-imperialist movement. The hears. The sheriff did exactly as ordered. He did not lift his little finger in protest—not to mention his gun. The youngest of the three Negroes, Dan Phipps, 18, and A. T. Harden, 16, were slain outright. Blumore Clark, 28, was saved from death only by a ruse. He played dead and after the lynch mob left crawled to the house of a Negro family where he had his wounds dressed and cared for.

2 Young Negroes Lynched in South

If ever the phrase cool, calculated and premeditated murder could be used, this is it. The sheriff was warned that a mob had organized to lynch the Negroes. He was warned not to move them without sufficient protection, yet he deliberately sent home the trailing car of deputies on the darkest part of the road. He made absolutely no effort to resist the lynchers. The case is clear.

That typical southern hypocritical yawning of southern courtesy and fair play is again to the fore. Always after another lynching, "Justice will be done," rants Judge Foster. And he immediately sets about pointing his finger at the international Labor Defense which had offered to defend the boys against lynch justice. The boys were undoubtedly terrorized against the use of the I. L. D. The attempt on the part of the southern bourgeois to shift the onus of responsibility for this crime will go unheeded by the southern white and Negro workers. These workers will recall that it was due only to the mass pressure of the working class throughout the entire country and even throughout the entire world set in motion by the international Labor Defense that the Scottsboro boys are still alive. They will realize as they must that for a poor exploited Negro of the south there is only one kind of justice meted out in the courts—lynch justice. The legal murder of Dan Phipps and Harden are no accidents. Rather it is the rule in the south. To defend himself from the heinous fury of the southern ruling class the Negro must learn that only by uniting in common struggle with the exploited poor whites of the south against their common exploiters will a measure of safety be gained for him. Lynch law is the law of the southern ruling class.

As we go to press we learn that a committee under the auspices of the Scottsboro Action Committee, the National Committee for Defense of Political Prisoners and the American Civil Liberties Union has been formed to demand from Roosevelt immediate action in Tuscaloosa and to force the arrest of Judge Henry B. Foster and Sheriff R. F. Shamblin in connection with the murder of the two young Negroes. —M. GLEF.

shooting and sacking, thought the mediators, is like a thunder-storm. It makes a noise and it passes. But this thunderstorm did not pass quickly enough to snuff the mediators. As long as the people were in motion the movement contained within itself the possibility of developing to a higher stage. President Céspedes faces the serious problem of... preventing the successful mass revolution from becoming too revolutionary." N. Y. Times, August 14, 1933.

And if it went far enough it would make necessary armed intervention to induce it to subside. In that case the whole of Latin America with the help of England would raise a tremendous cry against American imperialism with the resulting shifts in trade more favorable for England at "our" expense. The lessons of Nicaragua and Haiti have not passed Wall Street by without a trace.

Still treading warily Roosevelt ordered warships to Cuban waters—without marines aboard just to protect American citizens and property. No intervention intended. And the Cuban army has been ordered to shoot down any violations of "peace." The holiday is over, say the mediators. Slaves, back to your yokes.

The policy of Roosevelt in the Cuban situation is an extension on an international scale of his domestic policy. American imperialism is learning to speak a new language. For a time and for a purpose it is forgetting the accents of harsh command. The mailed fist is there. But it is clothed in velvet. Soft words now fall from Uncle Sam's lips. Friendliness beams on his face. He believes and practices mediation!

The reason is not far to seek. The crisis of American capitalism cannot be solved on a domestic scale alone. Europe, Latin America and Asia are the markets to which American capitalism must export to realize its surplus value. The assault on Europe has already begun. The assaults on Asia and South America are in preparation. That is the meaning of the trade parleys with the South American countries, as far as South America is concerned. And Roosevelt is careful not to jeopardize them by blunders of Hoover-Stimson type.

Céspedes and the new deal for Cuba will no more solve the problems of Cuban economy than the policies of Machado. Whatever makeshift is worked out will be a temporary scheme to protect the profits of American capitalism on the backs of Cuban masses. The condition of the Cuban masses can be improved and the problems of the revolution solved only by struggle against Céspedes and Wall St.

By themselves the Cuban masses cannot throw off the yoke of American imperialism and Cuban capitalism. The socialist revolution in Cuba is dependent on the revolution in the United States. That is true for Latin America as a whole. But to the Cuban proletariat can fall the honor of entering upon the revolutionary path before the more backward American proletariat. For that is necessary a Communist party rooted in the proletariat marching on a correct internationalist road. In Cuba and all over the world the Stalinist theory and practice hold back the movement. The revolution in Cuba cannot grow to its full stature until the Communist party strikes off the shackles of Stalinism. This the newly formed Cuban Left Opposition must help it to do. —T. STAMM...

FONTAMARA

A remarkable book! From the first line to the last it is directed against the Fascist regime in Italy, against its lies, its violence, and book of pseudo-political propaganda. But revolutionary passion is raised not to such heights that it creates a truly artistic work. Fontamara is only a poor, god-forsaken village in the South of Italy. In the space of the book's two hundred pages, this name becomes a symbol of the whole Italian countryside, its poverty, its despair, but also of its indignation.

Silone knows the Italian peasantry remarkably well: the best 20 years of the author's life, according to his own words, were spent in "Fontamara". He knows how to see and sentimentalize are for life as it is, how to generalize what he sees by means of the Marxist method and then to embody his generalizations into artistic images. The story is told by the peasants, canon, paupers themselves. Despite the exceptional dexterity of this style, the author executes it like a real master. Some chapters have a stupendous force!

Has this book appeared in the Soviet Union? Has it drawn the attention of the publishing houses of the Comintern? The book deserves a circulation of millions of copies. But no matter what the may be towards works of truly revolutionary literature, "Fontamara"—we are convinced—will make its way into the official bureaucracy may be towards works of truly revolutionary literature. To assist in the circulation of this book is the duty of every revolutionist. —L. TROTSKY.

The Left Wing's Place Is in A. F. of L. Unions

The most convincing answer to the question of Left wing trade union tactics raised anew by the Roosevelt policy has been indicated by the instinctive action of the workers themselves. In tens and hundreds of thousands in various trades and industries throughout the country, the workers are streaming into the conservative labor organizations. A. F. of L. unions which in many cases were reduced to skeletons during the recent years, are experiencing a stormy revival.

If we wish to keep a live contact with the masses, hasten their inevitable disillusionment with the grandiose swindle of the N. R. A. and steer them into great class battles we must march with this instinctive movement and influence it from within. The Communists must urge the workers to join in this main stream which is flowing now in the channel of the A. F. of L. and unions of a similar type. And, what is no less important, the Communists must go with them in full force and without hesitation. To stand aside from this living movement with its present direction and arbitrarily prescribe a different path would only mean to rob the mass movement of its dynamic revolutionary nucleus, to paralyze resistance to the unholy combination of the bosses, the government and the labor fakery and condemn the Left wing to an isolated sectarian facility just at the time when conditions begin to mature for its wide expansion in the labor movement.

Yet, from all accounts, this is the ruinous course which the Stalinists, who year by year do everything they can to discredit, disorganize and discredit the Left wing, have imposed on the trade union conference at Cleveland. For these organizers of defeat every catastrophe only serves to justify the policy that brought it about and to seek new fields for its destructive influence. Faced with the overwhelming developments in the needle trades where, thanks to the blunders and crimes of the Stalinists, the resurgent movement of the workers has led to the reintegration of the reactionary forces and the virtual destruction of the Left wing organizations, the collective Stalinists could think of nothing better to do at Cleveland than to prescribe a universal application of the bankrupt policy.

In the Daily Worker for August 28th, the gruesome wisdom derived from the new developments is announced as follows:

"Answering Muste on urging workers to join the A. F. of L. Stachel said we are against this, except in certain cases like the Railroad Brotherhoods, as the A. F. of L. is organizing the workers for betrayal and not for struggle."

This is what they have learned from the great trade union developments which are taking place before everybody's eyes. This is the incredible deduction from the Left wing catastrophe in the needle trades. Are the masses themselves going to the A. F. of L. unions of their own motion? This question, which is decisive for the elaboration of an intelligent and realistic approach, does not exist for these harlequins. Didn't the resolutions of several plenums of the Comintern and the Profintern and the Party and the T. U. U. L. instruct the masses to join the "red unions" and stay away from the A. F. of L. And if the workers, under the impact of events and of pressure of various kinds, have taken a different path, how can that possibly necessitate an amendment to various Plenums? It is quite clear that nobody but a counter-revolutionist could make such a suggestion.

"The A. F. of L. is organizing the workers for betrayal." Insofar as the leadership is concerned, there is not a class-conscious worker who can have any doubt on this point. The discovery is not original with Stachel. But the assertion of the fact does not prevent the betrayal. Neither does it prevent the workers from entering the A. F. of L. unions. In this circumstance it is quite obvious that the organization of the struggle against the betrayal can begin only inside these unions. To stand aside from the surging movement into the old unions on the ground that the bureaucrats have treacherous designs means only in effect to facilitate the treachery and free the hands of the traitors. This is the essence of the Stalinist trade union policy imposed on the Left wing for a number of years and now again proclaimed at Cleveland.

We cannot have anything to do with such a policy. The class-conscious workers have to adjust themselves to reality and connect themselves closely with the living movement of the masses. Cut-and-dried schemes are of no use in trade union questions. Different industries present different problems. There is no universal formula to fit every situation. But the main

DEMAND THE 7TH CONGRESS!

Is the Communist International dead? This question may well now be asked more insistently, more sharply than ever. It demands an answer.

At this moment the Second International has just concluded its special international congress. The Amsterdam International of trade unions recently held its congress. Left Socialist parties from various countries are now meeting in special conference. Only the Comintern remains silent. There are no signs of its Seventh World Congress.

It is now five years since the Sixth World Congress. Five years marked by the most severe capitalist crisis ever known. Five years of the most fatal consequence to the world proletariat, culminating in the disastrous German defeat. Five years filled with dreadful experience of false policy pursued by the Comintern leadership. The German proletariat lies prostrate, trampled underfoot by the Fascist hordes. Its revolutionary party is obliterated. The Communist parties elsewhere, misguided and disoriented, are declining in numbers and declining in influence. The Soviet Union, once the proletarian tower of strength, is facing the greatest danger in its existence. And now a new reactionary period has been inaugurated with the Fascist victory posing new problems in all their magnitude to the world revolutionary movement. But its general staff fails to meet. Again we ask: What has become of Lenin's International?

The Second International leaders gathered under the heavy shadows of these terrible defeats and their own openly demonstrated bankruptcy. A motley crew of peripatetic betrayers attempting to shove off the burden of responsibility and attempting to find new avenues to capitalist ministerial posts. Though they failed entirely, as could be expected, to draw a balance of events the rank and file Social Democratic workers are now proceeding to do it for them. This is manifested in the many currents of Social Democratic workers everywhere moving in a Leftward direction, toward Communism. But at least the Second International called its congress. Not even that much sign of life is displayed by the Comintern.

Do the Comintern Stalinist leaders fear to give an account of their stewardship openly before the world proletariat in a World Congress? If so—and there are good reasons to believe that such is the case—that will prove even more fatal than the combined results of their disastrously false policies and orientation. That could only mean that the Comintern is entirely wiped out as a world revolutionary force for the future tasks.

But what about the millions of Communist workers? Their heavy tasks still lie before them. What about the still existing official Communist parties? Are they content to become reduced to impotent nationalist sects without an international revolutionary leadership? Will they raise their voice in a powerful demand for the convocation of the Seventh World Congress? We address this question to the American Communists. You must know what your international leadership has to say, what it intends to do. Demand that the Comintern leaders give an account of their stewardship!

NRA Reveals Its True Role in Strike Situation

It is an Instrument for Greater Class Collaboration and Simultaneously a Means to Make Strikes Illegal

As the N. R. A. moves forward to conquer new territory its true intent becomes ever clearer. Most recently this has been established in two directions both of which fit the plans for strengthening of monopoly capitalism. On the one hand are the notable efforts to make the NRA a perfect class collaboration machinery carefully guarded by the reactionary labor leaders. On the other hand are the efforts to use this machinery as an additional club against working class resistance properly backed up by the means of force at the disposal of the government.

For the first instance we need only refer to the concrete example of the recognition by the coal codes of the John L. Lewis union to harness possible miners' revolts against forcibly imposed slave conditions of which such vivid manifestations were recently displayed. For the second instance telling proof is available in the attempts of the New York NRA administration, under Grover Whalen, to outlaw the T. U. L. union shoe workers strike because the manufacturers had plastered the Blue Eagle signs on their windows.

Industrial Codes to Prevent Strikes

The Recovery Administration now admits that the progress registered on the coal and auto codes came just in the nick of time to avert a general strike in the coal fields with possibilities of spreading to the auto industry. That is how they express it, those who naturally count upon its efficacy to crush workers' resistance. But even in this they may count without their hosts. The coal code with its projected forty hour week and $4.00 a day wage, with a differential to $4.20 in the South, leaves all the old problems of unemployment with its misery and the general unbearably low standard of living as before. But—and this is significant—it contemplates complete recognition of the United Mine Workers throughout the fields. In this manner it is hoped to perfect the class collaboration machinery. An accomplishment not without importance for it is precisely from this industry that the worthy administrators received their greatest shocks and entertained the greatest fears of mass rebellions.

At the initial stage of the code negotiations the coal operators remained adamant insisting upon their "sacred rights" to run the industry open shop or company union as they pleased. Evidently they now see things differently. It is not that their desires, first of all for the open shop and secondly for the company union, have changed. No, it is a question of accepting the lesser evil. Militant unionism they fear above all.

It has been comparatively easy for the bosses to obtain the Blue Eagle sign. They have not been loath to display it even though confessions in the shops remained either the same as before, or certainly unsatisfactory to the workers. That was the case of a group of shoe manufacturers in Brooklyn. It did not, however, deter several thousand workers from striking for decent conditions under the banner of the T. U. L. union. The NRA administration headed by Grover Whalen pounced upon this as a test case. Six pickets were arrested charged with illegally striking NRA shops, and charged with being a Communist union.

By this action Grover Whalen, out of ambition and clownish stupidity, revealed the strategy the capitalist will pursue to bolster up the NRA and against working class militancy. First they will strike down the Left wing unions and the Communist movement. If this serves their purpose of keeping the workers in leading strings of the class collaborationist A. F. of L. unions and the arbitration structure of the NRA, they will rest their assault there, at least for the time being. But if the workers press forward along the paths of struggle the capitalists will not hesitate to make strikes everywhere illegal. That is what is revealed in this case, and that is also the danger to the labor movement as a whole.

Russian Recognition A Class Question for World Labor

The recognition of the Soviet Union by the United States is rapidly drawing closer. The first breaches in the financial blockade of Soviet Russia have been made, with Soviet bonds being freely offered for sale in this country, and the government-controlled Reconstruction Finance Corporation financing purchases of cotton by the Soviet agency.

Objectively the recognition of the Soviet Union is a great gain for the workers' state, and therefore a revolution for the cause of the world revolution. Yet we must recognize that this gain is being accomplished only on the basis of the temporary coincidence of the immediate needs of the bourgeois American state and the Russian workers' state. Sometimes it happens that two lines which go in very different directions may cross at a point—but only at one point, only in a temporary and limited way.

The American state wants bigger markets for its products, to help it get out of its typically capitalist crisis, and it wants to lay the foundation for some kind of military agreement which will help it in its plans for imperialist expansion against the Japanese.

The Soviet State wants help in carrying out the second Five-Year Plan, first and foremost. It negotiates with the American government as one state with another, solely on the basis of these temporary coincidences of immediate aims.

Unity of Proletarian Interests Is Still the Issue

The fundamental differences between the two states, which are far more important than the secondary immediate purposes, have been kept in the background by the Soviet government. The fact that the Soviet State is, first and foremost, a workers' state, has played no part whatever in the change of American policy toward recognition.

The Left Opposition, true to its fundamentally internationalist outlook, has consistently based its proposals for "Long-Term Credits to the Soviet Union" on the needs of the workers' State in Russia and the working-class in America. These needs are identical, based on both fundamental and permanent interests; these two lines do not merely cross and coincide at a particular point, but are one all the way through. The international solidarity of the proletariat means that not only the immediate interests of the American worker will be served, in that he will get a job making products for the Soviet Union, but also his ultimate interests in building up the first fortress of the world revolution.

The Stalinists have consistently refused these proposals, have refused to mobilize the working class

Youth Day Must Prepare for Real Anti-War Fight

At the height of the patriotic hysteria of the last World War, when the leaders of the Socialist parties proclaimed civil truce with the capitalists and supported their national master class, a small, but courageous group of revolutionary socialist youth met at Bern, Switzerland, July 1915, to organize the youth of the various European countries against capitalism and war. Undaunted by the war frenzy, in total disregard of the universal chauvinistic public opinion, with the single aim of furthering the movement for the emancipation of the working class, irrespective of personal consequences, these young revolutionary fighters considered the next steps to be taken, and proclaimed the first Sunday of every September, International Youth Day—the day of demonstration against capitalist militarism and war.

The Young Communist International, the inheritor of the best traditions of the Socialist Youth International formed at Stuttgart in August 1915, and the militant traditions of the Bern Conference, continued the practice of International Youth Day. In the early years of its existence it succeeded in mobilizing broad masses of young workers on this day as a culmination

Concrete manifestations of ferment within the various Socialist parties, as a result of shattering of faith in the Second International, are multiplying rapidly. Left Socialist groupings and parties are emerging and groping their way, with much confusion, but nevertheless in a Leftward direction. Outstanding among these manifestations is the conference under the auspices of the "International Committee of the Independent Revolutionary Socialist Parties," convened at Brussels, August 27th and 28th.

No sooner, however, had the conference been issued than the Leftward developments became more distinct and more decisive. Most notable is the trend toward the Left Opposition. While these parties and groups are trying to find their way they are simultaneously repulsed by the Stalinist bureaucratic ultramilitarism and bankruptcy. The Left Opposition ideas are penetrating deeply into the membership of several of these groups. Numerous and increasing are the instances of pressure in this direction. Further discussion and clarification is the need of the hour, and the prospects that several of them, or important parts of them, will fully find their way may be enhanced.

Among the initiators of this conference are included the Independent Labor Party of England, the Independent Socialist Party of Holland, the S. A. P. of Germany, the Norwegian Labor Party and independent Socialist parties and groups of Switzerland, Poland and elsewhere. The reason for the calling of the conference is said to be: "The complete failure of the Second and Third Internationals and their affiliated parties to offer any effective opposition to the attacks of capitalism on the workers throughout the world."

Confusion Is Still Apparent

However, in what this failure consist is not yet clear to the initiators. In their confused way they speak of this preliminary conference as an attempt to prepare for a world congress the purpose of which is to bring together the representatives of working class organizations, which accept the basis of revolutionary struggle for the achievement of Socialism, for unity against "Fascism, war and capitalism." Invitations to participate were sent to all "Socialist, Communist and working class organizations. In other words the parties of the Second and Third Internationals, both of which have failed, and, of course, neither of which will attend. On the other hand among organizations which can on this basis support such a conference are the Right wing Com-

L. Trotsky's "Pacifism".

Diplomatic routine has its advantages so long as events move along the old tracks. Confronted with new great events, it wanders off. A most dangerous thing is not to appraise any enemy exactly only because his system extends beyond the bounds of routine. To reduce the problem to the assertion that Hitler is a demagogue, an hysterical person and a comedian, means to close one's eyes so as not to see the danger. It is not all hysteria that leads to the seizure of power. At any rate, there must be method in the hysteria of National Socialism. Wee to those who do not understand this in time! The leaders of the German labor organizations refused to take Hitler seriously: while they considered his program reactionary and utopian, they proved incapable of appreciating his dynamic power. The same danger may be repeated in the domain of world politics.

Up to May 17, many thought that Hitler would proceed with violence in the question of the Versailles treaty, and that he would apply to the European regime the same methods as to the Reichstag building, Marxian literature and the Jewish department stores. Nobody really knew where the lightning would come from and where it would strike. But neither could anybody predict twenty-four hours in advance the crushing of the trade unions according to all the rules of a gangster assault upon a bank.

Hitler's speech in the Reichstag staggers one with its unexpected pacifism. By this alone it has attained its most immediate aim. It is always advantageous to take an opponent by surprise. His adversaries are fairly embarrassed. Highly experienced diplomats have allowed themselves to be at least halfway assuaged by a few well-calculated pacific sentences, after having allowed themselves to be frightened by Papen's strident phrases. John Simon has gratefully noted in the Chancellor's speech the moderate tone of a statesman. That is also the impression of Austin Chamberlain. Contrasting Hitler to Papen's the Morning Post has discovered in the declaration the "soft accent of the South". The entire press has declared: The whole atmosphere has suddenly become less tense. At the same time, the hypothesis has been expounded: the shrewd diplomat Mussolini has brought Hitler to reason; the pressure from Washington has undoubtedly not been without influence. And consequently: the chances of the disarmament policy have manifestly increased. What a flagrant blunder! The psychological secret of the hubbub is simple: whoever expects to meet a madman brandishing an axe and encounters instead a man with a Browning hidden in his hip-pocket, cannot fail to experience a feeling of relief. But that does not prevent the Browning from being more dangerous than the axe.

There is no luck, on the other hand, of distrustful people who see in Hitler's declaration only an episodic maneuver occasioned by the unfavorable echo to the speech of Papen: it is enough, at least for a few weeks, to deceive public opinion and then one will see. An all too simple explanation! The menacing harangue of Lord Riallsman provoked by the speech of Papen, may, it is true, have served as the impulsion to Hitler's intervention. But all this relates to the order and to the tone of political declaration, that is, it touches only the technical side. Behind the diplomatic fencing, however, are concealed much deeper factors and plans. It would be just as false to take Hitler's pacifism at its word as it would be to dismiss the declaration of a "demagogue" without penetrating into its sense. The political problems consist in establishing the inner relationships between Hitler's declaration and his real plans, that is, to try to understand by what ways Fascist Germany hopes to attain those ends which it cannot and will not name. The past must already have adequately shown that if there is fantasy and delirium in the policy of National Socialism, this does not mean that Hitler is incapable of weighing realities: his fantasy and delirium are in expedient conformity with his real political aims. That is our point of departure in

Mooney Stays in Jail; Crook Free

"Sacramento, California, August 19, 1933.—Asa Keyes, who as Los Angeles District Attorney was convicted in 1928 of criminal conspiracy and sentenced to five years in San Quentin prison, received a full pardon from Governor Rolph today. Keyes has served eighteen months of his term.

"After reading letters and petitions urging executive clemency, some from—former Chief Justice M. H. Sullivan, and Supervisor Judge Edward I. Butler, who sentenced Keyes, Governor Rolph said it gave him 'great pleasure' to pardon Keyes and 'wish him every success'." (N. Y. Times, August 20.)

Temps and Stalin Against Trotsky

Temps of August 13th publishes a cable from its Moscow correspondent which we recommend to the attention of every thinking Communist. The cable seems to have been written directly in Stalin's office. Trotsky "will in no case return to the Soviet Union"; "Trotsky never was a friend of the peasantry"; "no reconciliation is possible between Trotsky's policy of permanent revolution and the policy of... socialism in one country". All this is said, it is clear; not to scare the bourgeoisie but on the contrary to pacify the public opinion of the French bourgeoisie.

To fool the foreign workers Stalin orders the official Communist press of the West to say that Trotsky is an ally, a prop and hope of the world bourgeoisie. But the Temps correspondent astiduously assures the French bourgeoisie that "Trotsky

The Workers' Path Is Through Struggle

Evidently Bill Green did not dare to support this raw deal. Undoubtedly, from this point of view, it revealed too soon the true intent of the NRA. Because of the growing pressure from workers everywhere for their rights to organize and to fight for better conditions he found himself obliged not to be associated with this assault. Besides this untimely exposure also threatened the success of the delicate work he is doing to maintain the illusions among the workers that the NRA is for their benefit. Rank and file unionists in many other industries might draw their own conclusions from a strike in any one instance being declared illegal.

Nevertheless it is necessary that the workers begin right now to draw the proper conclusion from this assault. Grover Whalen and his associates, due to the determined attitude of the militant Brooklyn shoe workers, have been compelled to heat a retreat. But it is by no means a final one. The assault was a part of the real intent of the NRA. It is sure to be renewed elsewhere. It means for the workers to be on guard and to learn the lessons implied. They will also soon realize that regardless of the Blue Eagle signs the only path the working class can pursue to better their conditions is the path of the class struggle.

FROM THE MILITANTS

Conservative Unions
Grow in St. Louis

St. Louis, Mo.—The American workers are on the march! Strikes everywhere. Pennsylvania, North Carolina, Missouri, New York, California. In every town and hamlet, in every industry and occupation, workers are daily marching up to the bosses and demanding higher wages, shorter hours. The prices of the necessities of life are rising. The workers are losing their "individualism"; are learning to "stick together."

These strikes are for the most part bare-ups, not planned struggles of an organization. The "revolts" express the accumulated resentment of the workers against the past four years of hellish suffering. After the workers gain their demands or a portion of them, the "rebellion" is usually over. In most cases there is not yet a full understanding by the mass of strikers, the need of permanent union organization. They do not foresee the coming winter, the next spring....

With the worsening of conditions, as NRA inflation continues, union organization will be forced on the agenda of every shop, factory, and mill in the United States. The Communists recognize this, and plan accordingly. Big struggles are ahead—the present strikes will appear as molehills to the mountains on the horizon of tomorrow.

The capitalists and their government officials have considered the probabilities of the Communists gaining control over the haphazard strikes and have already laid plans to "avert" the danger. The "democratic" statesmen are using the same methods that proved so successful during the last "democratic" war. A pact with the wolves in cheap clothing, the labor fakery, capitalism promises through its government that it will "recognize the rights of the workers to organize" (into AFL unions) if the AFL bureaucracy will agree to "prevent strikes and walkouts."

The "Great labor leaders," Green and Lewis, naturally agree with any proposal for "industrial peace" and so they are drafted by the militarist, Johnson. The first duty of the Industrial Peace Board, being to phone by long distance the local leaders of the 70,000 striking Pennsylvania coal miners and instruct them to "get the men behind the National Recovery program by going back to work."

With the blue eagle of the NRA on their breasts, the American flag in their hand, and patriotic speeches in their mouth about the new Messiah, Roosevelt, the AFL is accomplishing the organization of hundreds of thousands of workers through the country. The AFL organizers are now met with open arms by the at-their-wits-end bosses.

Even the Southern bourgeois responsible for the Gastonia and Harlan nightmares now give the glad hand to their arch enemy of yesterday, the American Federation of Labor. According to AFL figures, over 150,000 workers have been organized "down South" within the past couple of months.

In St. Louis, within less than sixty days time, the AFL Organization Committee has written over 20,000 membership cards. And their "recovery" campaign is only in its infancy.

The method of organization varies. Sometimes it is openly acknowledged as a joint drive in the employer and the AFL organizer to "ensure industrial peace." The Johnson, Stephens, Shinkle Shoe Company, open shop for years, suddenly locked out its employees, remained closed for several days, and then refused to re-hire any worker unless he first joined the Boot and Shoe Workers' Union! Waving the American flag, Shinkle's two columns ad explained that they were henceforth going to operate "under the provisions of the National Code."

Generally the agreement between the labor fakery and the company is kept more or less under cover. For example the organization of the workers employed at the Chevrolet Plant and the Fisher Body Company, by the Automobile Industrial Workers' Union, an affiliate of the AFL. Already over 2,000 workers have joined, signifying their need of higher wages. But the union officials announce that they are going to proceed in an "orderly and careful manner." They are not going to make any wage demands upon the employers "just yet." All they want is union recognition "in conformity with the NRA." In Silent Cal style, the employers pun. They state they would "rather have a company union."

The Industrial Ladies Garment Workers' Union has now a membership of over 3,000 in St. Louis. As prophesied, the baby outfit is swaddling clothes fast. Approximately 90 percent of the silk and 65 percent of the cotton garment workers joined the union to date in order to fight against the piece-work stretch-out system and wage scales of $5.00 and $10.00 a week. M. Bialis of Chicago, vice-president of the ILGWU came to St. Louis to "prevent trouble." He is a middle with representatives of the local garment manufacturers' association, forgetting about the workers wage demands, abolition of piecework minimum wage, etc. in his vehement insistence that "first" must come the recognition of the union. The near-sighted manufacturers replied that they would wait until the completion of their industry's code of fair competition. So tomorrow night a meeting of the union membership will be held; a general strike call will be the likely outcome. The Left wing will try to convince the workers of the necessity of a settlement of all their grievances during the strike—and not merely struggle for the abstract right of union recognition.

N.Y. Doll Workers
Call Strike

One thousand Doll and Toy workers of Greater New York have gone out on a general strike, with at least that many more coming out as we go to press. The Doll and Toy Workers' Union, Local 18230 of the American Federation of Labor, called the strike after a mass meeting of the workers had voted unanimously in favor of it.

The conditions in the trade were so bad that the workers could stand it no longer, and they would have struck at beginning of the season, in June, but for the fact that there were two unions in the field, the A. F. of L. union and the Independent Union. Now the latter appears to have left the field and, though it is the middle of the season, the strike has been called with every prospect of winning.

The conditions in my shop, and this true of all the others, were such that dippers and grinders averaged about ten dollars a week apiece, where in 1929 they used to make fifty dollars a week on the average. The two main reasons for these terrible conditions, of which the above is merely an example, are the piece work system of paying and the contracting system of letting out work. The abolishment of these two evils, and the enforcement of all the other demands of the union would be of the greatest benefit to the Doll and Toy workers.

The demand of the Union, as put forth in a leaflet calling for the strike are the following:

1. Recognition of the Doll and Toy Workers Union No. 18230
2. Maximum work week of thirty hours
3. Wages equal to the 1929 scale
4. No overtime nor Saturday nor Sunday work
5. Equal distribution of work in the slack season
6. Abolishment of contractor system
7. Wages shall be paid weekly on a stated pay day
8. Dismissal wage
9. Safety and sanitary provisions to be adopted
10. No home work
11. No workers under 17 years of age to be employed
12. Employment should be made through the union office.

The spirit of the strikers is high and they mean business. We expect to hold out until all our demands are granted so that we can again make a decent wage for a higher standard of living under good working conditions.

—A DOLL WORKER...

N. Y. Mirror Workers
Organize Union

Proof of the fact that workers are now becoming conscious of the need of organization is afforded even within the smaller sections of light industry. The New York Novelty Mirror Industry is an example. A number of young workers, driven to desperation by the systematic declining of their living conditions, unheard of wage cuts, lengthening of hours, unpaid for overtime work, firing upon the least sign of protestation, some time ago declared a strike in one of the shops and began picketing immediately. These young workers lacked trade union experience, and unaided by anyone had difficulties in surmounting in forming an organization. But as it matured in the process of the struggle they quickly learned that unless they extend their victory and drew in other shops to their aid they would fail in their task.

Aided by a member of the Left Opposition, a worker of the trade, plans were quickly laid to accomplish their aim. Workers in other shops, hearing of the example set by one shop, needed very little coaxing. And within a short period of time the strike extended to other shops. But because of the above mentioned obstacles—lack of organizational ability, no functioning apparatus, the strike was discontinued. Nevertheless it was not in vain, a partial victory was scored by one or two groups, in obtaining a 25 percent increase in wages.

Union Extends to All Crafts

In the midst of the strike, the union took shape and crystallized into the Novelty Mirror Workers' Union. At first the intention of the inexperienced union organizers was to organize only certain crafts, and although ignore the other workers. But after systematic explanations and persuasion by the member of the Left Opposition the former decisions were rescinded and the doors were opened to admit all workers employed in the industry.

The industry comprises some twenty or more shops, in greater New York and New Jersey. It employs some three hundred workers, of which a good number are highly skilled, glass cutters, bevelers, polishers, silverers, who in former

The New England Shoe Unions

Question of Amalgamation and the Blue Eagle Code

Boston.—In our last article we stated that at present the three outstanding problems in the New England shoe industry were: (1) those of amalgamation, (2) those connected with the agreements which terminated August 1, and (3) those presented by the federal government in placing the shoe code not far down the list. Now have these problems been approached?

Amalgamation gets lip service from everybody. Nolan, head of the Protective, speaking at the National Shoe Convention on invitation, praised amalgamation. Actually, he and Mahan of the National, after trying to arrange a fusion could arrive nowhere, because there wouldn't be enough jobs for the henchmen of each. The workers distrusting these bureaucrats took up the initiative. On the invitation of one local they sent representatives to a planning board whose purpose is to force through amalgamation. This planning board consists of rank and file representatives of the majority of the locals in the National, Protective, and Independent (Salem). The planning board has over sixty members, a few being former members of the TULU union which has dissolved. This group, under the leadership of Klarfeld, has made every effort to get this body to go ahead with amalgamation over the heads of the union by calling an amalgamation convention.

Opposed to the TULU group are the Lovestonites led by I. Zimmerman of the Brooklyn local. They have gained prestige by their efforts in the original Boston and Chelsea strikes, which they helped lead. At that time their position was that the National must be organized—with increase in pay, if possible, but without if necessary. The TULU group called them traitors, etc., because in many shops they sent the workers back without increase. Their answer was "Wait until August, then with a strong union and a busy season we will get an increase that will mean something." Another bone of contention was the use of the state board of arbitration. This also the Lovestonites insisted was temporary and would go in August. They continued the workers.

The Issue of Amalgamation

Now let us return to the planning board. The Lovestonites insist that if the planning board takes the initiative in the amalgamation procedure that they will be playing right into the hand of the bureaucrats who will split away, taking the conservative workers with them. Zimmerman, in an article in the Labor Age attacks the Communist party group openly claiming that they want this split, hoping to get control of those workers who would rally to the planning board if a split occurred. He says all amalgamation must go through regular union channels. In this he is correct. The planning board meetings have degenerated to a fight between the C. P. and the Lovestonites, a fight which is reported to have included the use of fists.

When the National held its convention in early June, amalgamation was approved and a committee of five was elected to meet with a committee of five from the Salem Independent and five from the Protective. This provisional committee was to go ahead with the amalgamation. The Salem Independent Union immediately appointed five on a similar committee, and the two groups met for discussion, awaiting the convention of the Protective at the end of July, hoping that the Protective would appoint a similar committee.

Comrade Cooperstein of the Left Opposition is on the Salem committee and several of the five representing the National are Lovestonites or under their influence. The setting up of this provisional committee with complete power for amalgamation was followed by a fight in the planning board. Zimmerman proposing that this board go on record as limiting itself to amalgamation propaganda only. Klarfeld pointed out that the Protective has still to meet, and that they might not vote for amalgamation or for a committee. However the planning board backed Zimmerman. In the meantime it is said that Nolan of the Protective proposed to the National group of five a plan of amalgamation. This plan years were earning as much as fifty and sixty dollars. To-day their wages have been cut in half and in some cases to even less. Only recently the union gained considerable strength through the addition of a number of shops, which comprise the most skilled and better paid workers, including also a number of women. To-day the young organization of more than seventy is growing daily as workers come to realize the many advantages that can be gained through a union.

This is taking place, to be sure, not without the usual hardships and confusion attending the formation of a union by a group of inexperienced workers. Leadership is naturally slow in developing. However there are good possibilities and the union in this small industry will grow. A temporary Executive Committee has been elected representing every shop and craft which is engaged at the present in drafting a Code covering the entire trade, and forming shop committees to manage a possible strike that looms in the near future.

—A MIRROR WORKER.

amounted to having the other two unions move into the Protective headquarters until January 1, and that then they could discuss amalgamation.

Officials in Log Rolling Game

At the Protective convention a committee of five was elected but they were only given power to meet the other two groups and ask them for their plan of amalgamation, obtaining this they were to report back to the convention. Zimmerman had submitted a plan of amalgamation to the two groups representing the National and Independent, but no action had been taken. Nolan had got wind of this plan and was afraid that the other two groups had already adopted it, so he took this means of finding out. The three committees met and the National and Independent groups insisted that they had accepted no plan. The Protective group then presented, unofficially, Nolan's old plan mentioned above, which the others opposed. The National and Independent groups were then invited to the Protective convention where they pleaded that the Protective give its committee powers equivalent to their own. Finally a committee was elected, and claims to have powers equivalent to the other groups of five. In the meantime the TULU shoe union of New York with a membership of about 1500 has asked permission to send a committee of five. This has been opposed by J. J. Jones of the Lovestonite group who claims that they come not for unity but for splitting. He bases his argument on a statement made by a conference of representatives of various shoe unions in New York. This statement asserts that the TULU group after joining with them broke away declaring that it could not unite with any group that did not accept the TULU principles. (Incidentally, this conference in New York intends to unite the shoe unions there and then to join the amalgamation negotiations in Mass.) Comrade Cooperstein spoke in favor of admitting the five from the TULU, and the committee decided this way.

What Was Done to the Wage Increase?

The National agreements with the manufacturers terminated August 1. The reader will remember that the Lovestonites answered all criticism in March with the joyous prediction "Just wait until August 1." The Lovestonites and their sympathizers were high in the union. June went and half of July and not one step was taken to get most of the locals busy determining what the new prices should be. This should have been started back in June. Some locals received notice to take up prices only on July 19—eleven days before August 1. We hold the Lovestonites directly responsible for the fact that when August 1 came the prices had not been decided and in some cases lists had not been presented by the union. Instead of playing petty politics they should have centered on this major task. They cannot say that the question was not brought up. They deliberately did not act!

So when August 1 came everything was confusion. The National demanded that the manufacturers give a flat 20 percent increase with a forty-hour week during negotiations. While the manufacturers delayed (knowing that the code was around the corner) and privately it is said, offered 15 percent, the National took the men out on "holidays." Then the manufacturers gave their flat refusal, and the union called a strike. This strike consisted of putting a couple of pickets in front of each shop, although no attempt was made by the manufacturers to get workers.

The Blue Eagle Appears

Into this situation came the blue eagle. Mahan and a committee were called to Washington where they are humble pie out of Perkins' hand. Their big speeches they delivered to each other on the train coming home. They brought back a temporary 20 percent increase which means only a 3-13 percent increase, since the hours are now 40 instead of 48. And who is to decide the permanent increases, if any? Our old friend, the state board of arbitration! The agreement is for a year, with a no strike clause, and 60 days notice (this last to give the bosses plenty of time to prepare against a strike).

The workers were given patriotic speeches by one of the committee close to the Lovestonites and the locals accepted the decision with a few dissenting voices.

We see that there have been many disappointments. However, conditions in the shops have certainly changed for the better. The workers now dare to tell the boss where he gets off. Following the March strike at least 60 workers in Boston were put back in their shops after being fired by the boss. This was done on the unions request, not one case going to arbitration. The wages under the National are much higher than those under the Protective, and already three shops are moving from Boston to territory under the Protective.

Will Amalgamation be Achieved?

The important question now is amalgamation. The planning board is a Soviet representing the locals. It is a true rank and file expression, not a Communist party artifact. It is, however, not official. All attempts to weaken it are to be derided. On the other hand if the planning board does more than propaganda for amalgamation, the bureaucrats will yell "Moscow, Reds, etc.", and a split will occur leaving the radical workers isolated. The Provisional committee should be allowed to prove its worth with plenty of pressure through propaganda by the planning board. Even if the Provisional committee fails to agree on amalgamation, a part of it could call an open convention with more authority than the planning board should and Provisional committees closer together should be supported.

An open-air mass meeting of the International Left Opposition of Toronto took place Friday, August 18 in Earlscourt Park before an interested crowd of about 1500 workers. The meeting was organized as the chairman, comrade Chris Doran, announced, in the interests of the fight of the workers for free speech and assembly.

The first speaker was comrade M. Spector who pointed out that the reasons for the growing repression in Canada and throughout the world was because capitalism was decaying and its further existence was possible only through the introduction of Fascism, the restriction of the workers rights and the forcing down of the workers living standards. The capitalists were now only way out for the workers into a new imperialist war and the only way out for the workers was through organization for the Social revolution. He further pointed out what was behind the present Swastika movement in Toronto and finally the fallacy of the Commonwealth Co-operative Federation as a party to free the workers from capitalism.

The Bolsheviks under Lenin and Trotsky in 1917 showed the workers the way to emancipate themselves and the International Left Opposition holds to this same program. The speaker concluded with the demand for the repeal of section 98 and the freeing of all class war prisoners. Comrade T. Mill added a few words and the meeting was thrown open for questions and discussion.

A Reformist Has His Day

As Buckley of the Toronto Trades and Labor Council and one of the leading spokesmen of the C. C. F. was invited to take the platform. Buckley spoke for fifteen minutes in which he attempted to justify the C. C. F. and explain why the class struggle in Canada could be resolved through the use of parliamentary methods only. Buckley was against all dictatorships whether it be socialistic or capitalist.

Comrade Spector when he took the platform to reply asked the assembled workers whether they would rather be under a dictatorship of the workers over the capitalists or a dictatorship of the capitalists over the workers because there was no in-between. The workers dictatorship would be in the end do away with all dictatorship and class repression, the capitalist dictatorship must today in its present period of decline, increase the repression and suffering of the workers in order to maintain its class rule.

In a masterful way, comrade Spector tore all of Buckley's arguments to shreds and tatters and exposed the C. C. F. as a party to save capitalism despite all its "socialistic" phrases.

The meeting was a huge success and a decided gain for Communism and the Left Opposition.

SUCCESSFUL MEETING

On August 23, another big open-air mass meeting was held in Earlscourt Park, with comrades J. Macdonald and M. Spector as the principal speakers, and comrade Chris Doran as chairman.

Comrade J. Macdonald dwelt on the capitalist crisis, the bankruptcy of the old political parties and the present belated attempt of reformism, which has shown its bankruptcy and worthlessness on a world scale to resurrect itself anew in Canada, by exploiting the radical trend to the Left of the Canadian workers, farmers and sections of the city petty-bourgeois. He warned the workers that the C. C. F. will only be able to repeat the failure of reformism in Europe.

When comrade Spector took the platform the C. C. F. supporters made a futile attempt to disrupt the meeting, which met the significant resistance of the workers. The speaker was able to handle the situation quite easily and continued with more fire his short talk, which was a reply to several questions asked of him by C. C. F. supporters.

This meeting like the previous one was very successful. The criticism of reformism in this C. C. F. etc., and a split will occur leaving the radical workers isolated. The Provisional committee should be allowed to prove its worth with plenty of pressure through propaganda by the planning board. The Communist party group were wrong in maintaining their TULU unions back in the March days. When offered five on the Provisional committee in July, they dissolved their union. This was wrong again. They were correct in their attacks on the negotiations and the "holiday." They are wrong in their desire to have the planning board proceed with amalgamation. The Lovestonites on the other hand are right on amalgamation procedure but have played a shameful role in the negotiations. These positions are irreconcilable at present.

Growth of Fascism in England

Edinburgh.—The advent of Hitlerism has given the impetus to the formation of Fascist groups in Britain. Brown Shirt, Blue Shirt, Green Shirt and Black Shirt organizations are coming into existence in different parts of the country and all of them seek to emulate Herr Hitler.

In Scotland, a Scottish Fascist party has been formed under the leadership of Weir Gilmour, a former member of the Labour party. This group plays upon the religious and nationalist feelings of the Scottish workers by calling upon them to support such things as Home Rule for Scotland and the expulsion of the Roman Catholics from Scotland, while Gilmour also advocates the formation of a Scottish industrial union.

In London, a Green Shirt organization has come forward with an appeal to the youth of England. The young men and women must save the British Empire from ruin by means of supporting the much discussed currency scheme known as the Douglas Credit System which, once adopted would bring prosperity to the shores of Britain.

The outstanding personality in the ranks of the British Fascists, however, is Sir Oswald Mosley, another former member of the Labour party and a member of the Labour government. He has organized a Black shirt group known as the British Union of Fascists and in the capacity of propagandist he has published a book in which he outlined the main features of the Corporate State. Mosley has paid several visits to Italy and is a great admirer of Mussolini.

However he sees certain flaws in Italian Fascism and he would remedy these weaknesses upon the basis of rationalized British industry with a new political structure adapted to British traditions. The monarchy would be retained as the great unifying force in the Empire but the House of Lords would be abolished as being antiquated and in place of the present parliament there would be a National Corporation elected from the best brains in banking, industry and politics. The state would settle all industrial disputes and the trade unions would be forbidden to strike but would be called upon to aid the state in the reconstruction of industry. In order to achieve this delightful scheme of things, the forces of anarchy must be overcome. And Mosley sums up this part of the program as meaning the struggle against Communism which must first of all be destroyed in Fascism is to triumph.

All the Fascist groups take up this latter point with great enthusiasm. Their literature abounds with threats against prominent Communists who are being at the root of all the troubles that afflict mankind and especially the British Empire. The numerical strength of the Fascists is uncertain but they probably number 10,000 and are much-time the favorite theme of music hall comedians and the popular cartoonists. But despite this ridicule they have started actively to interfere with strikes and Communist meetings and are obviously being financed by certain sections of the capitalist class. Their main recruiting ground is the middle class and the lumpen-proletariat—quite a useful combination for any dirty work—and their ranks are likely to be considerably strengthened as the crisis deepens or if the working class should swing to the Left.

The numerical weakness of Fascism is in direct contradiction to the tremendous interest that is being taken in the subject of Fascism in general. The popular press devotes whole pages to the development of Hitlerism in Germany and each new atrocity against Jew or Communist in line with the particular policy being pursued by the given newspaper. Hitler is written up as a hero or a villain. His policy is praised by the Daily Mail or vigorously attacked by the Manchester Guardian. The latter newspaper has led the field in the matter of exposures of German Fascism and unlike the organ of the Labour party, the Daily Herald, has made the defense of Jew or Communist a special feature. While in contradiction to the organ of the Communist party, the Daily Worker, it has found space for the brilliant analysis of the German situation by comrade Trotsky although it took pains to point out that it disagrees with Trotsky's belief in the world revolution.

All the political parties have discussed the Fascist question and they are all in opposition to Fascism but the organs of the Conservative party advise the youth of Britain to watch and learn from Hitler whose easy triumph is welcomed with ill-concealed delight. The rapidly decomposing Liberal groups have declared against Hitlerism but their spokesmen enunciate policies that are as near to being Fascist as makes the difference hardly discernible. Thus the parties of the capitalist class are leering at Hitler but endeavor to hide their admiration under a cloak of mock condemnation.

When we turn to the working class movement we find a strange scene of confusion. All the parties are against Fascism; all are apprehensive as to the nearness of the monster; all have talked and demonstrated against German Fascism but all are entangled in a net of confusion when it comes to the question of how to defeat Fascism, of how to destroy the reptile before it releases its deadly sting. In this connection all are agreed upon the necessity for a united front. But when we come to the question of just what is meant by a united front then we come up against certain peculiarities of the British labour movement that have made it the despair of its comrades in other lands.

Will the British Workers Learn from the German Experience

Thus when the Communist party approached the Labour party, Trades Unions, Cooperatives and the Independent Labour Party for a united front against Fascism they singled out not the most important issues around which unity must be built but presented these organizations with a complete industrial and political platform embracing everything from the Versailles Treaty to the legal rights of the trade unions. The Labour party and the Trade Unions replied by stating that while they were against Fascist dictatorship they were also against Communist dictatorship and whilst they agreed upon the necessity for a united front they could not join with the Communists but would call upon the workers to join the Labour party to show the world the peaceful path to Socialism.

But this position did not suit the intelligentsia of the Labour party now comprising the Socialist League, a recently formed group of Fabians, ex-members of the I. L. P. ex-members of the C. P. and including J. T. Murphy, Colonel Malone, Raymond Postgate, C. D. H. Cole, and Sir Stafford Cripps. They also would have nothing to do with the Communist party but they thought that the question of Fascism raised the other question of the policy of the Labour party. In the course of their speeches and writings they succeeded in formulating a brand new program.

They declare that the Labour party may gain a parliamentary majority at the next general election but that then the capitalists would let loose the forces of Fascism. To meet this situation the Labour party must request the king to create a majority of Labour peers in order to abolish the reactionary House of Lords. Then an emergency Powers Act would be passed with the consent of the king. Parliament would be dissolved and a country would then be ruled by a series of Orders in Council which would be operated by a body of National and District councillors appointed by the Labour cabinet and would also empower the armed forces and the police to deal with the Fascists pending the socialization of the banks, mines and railways, etc.

This wonderful scheme, in which the monarchy would cooperate in the establishment of Socialism, was immediately seized upon by the leaders of the Conservative party who labelled it "Fascist" and much to the disgust of Lansbury, Clynes and Henderson, the Labour party was accused of secretly planning a dictatorship. The executive of the party and the General secretary of the trade unions have, of course, denounced the scheme and have even hinted that they may deal with the members of the Socialist League as they previously dealt with the Communists, i. e., by throwing them out of the Labour party. In reply, the Socialist League have been at great pains to point out that they only wish to deal with Fascism in a Constitutional manner and that they are just as much against dictatorship as is Lansbury and in the course of the controversy they arrive at the remarkable conclusion that German Fascism is no dictatorship.

Thus the editor of their monthly organ, the Socialist Review, writes: "The Nazi regime is no dictatorship. Hitler and his henchmen were every one of them elected to do just what they are doing—bait the Jews and suppress the Communists." The fact of the matter is that the Labour party is saturated with love for the constitution and both the Rights and the "Lefts" would seek to destroy Fascism by lawyers' tricks.

The Communist party has no illusions as to the constitution and even the leaders of the Independent Labour Party are becoming somewhat clear on this point but, nevertheless, all is not well with the anti-Fascist united front of these two bodies. Beginning on the basis of no criticism it was not long before the leaders were busily engaged in attacking each other. And when Fennell Brockway accused the Third International of having betrayed the interests of the working class movement, Pollitt replied by calling Brockway a counter-revolutionary. And declaring him to be "worse than any Trotskyist" he urged the rank and file of the I. L. P. to deal with its leaders.

In the midst of this word war—fare a section of the united front broke down. The Lancashire, Wales, North Eastern branches of the I. L. P. refused to continue the united front and make an appeal to the National Council which proved ineffective. The latter body met in conference and after three days' labor produced yet another policy for the I. L. P. But in the course of the debates on this policy a split took place over the question of continuing the united front with the Communist party. John Paton, general secretary of the I. L. P. resigned and five members of the National Council voted against the new policy which was only carried by a majority of four votes.

Thus the I. L. P. looks like losing yet another portion of its already greatly reduced membership. While one section staggers back to the Labour party and a few members go over to the Communist party, the main section will hold on to their precarious role of centrism, swinging between right and left. The latter wing of the party is being led by Maxton and Brockway who are endeavoring to stem off the evil day of complete dissolution. They are now supporting the world congress of all revolutionary working class organizations to be held in Paris. They do not favor a criticism of the policies of the Second and Third Internationals but desire a discussion on "positive revolutionary principles". At the same time they leave the door open for an entry into the Stalin stronghold by declaring that "the German Communist party held correct revolutionary principles but applied them wrongly," while "the cooperation of the I. L. P. and the C. P. is beginning to unify revolutionary activity that may well facilitate the creation of a united revolutionary movement."

Both the I. L. P. and the C. P. are at low ebb and it well known that wires are being pulled in order to push on the formation of a United Communist Party in Great Britain composed of a fusion of the two forces. Such a move would give a temporary lease of life to the bankrupt Stalinists as well as to the I. L. P. reformists but soon the contradictions of the Stalin line would bring the shaky structure down again.

The danger of Fascism has brought to the forefront the basic problems confronting the British working class movement and the brief experience of the united front movement of the I. L. P. and the C. P. has once again proved that there are no short cuts to success. At the same time it has revealed the Communist possibilities lying latent in the application of the united front if based on sound principles. Neither the I. L. P. nor the C. P. possess these essential qualities—hence the failure to take advantage of the weakness of the discredited labour party.

the support of grain prices, in 1932 there were provided 67 millions, now 125, nearly double the amount. The "Dreadner Bank" receives 100 millions. The expenditures for military purposes were raised from 636 to 670, and including the special department of Herr Goering, Aviation, to 745 millions, that is, an increase of over 100 millions. On top of that must be added the concealed expenditures of the budget (which is free from any kind of control, and the tax relief for capital ownership, already mentioned.

The secret of spending more money and yet saving expenses is easily solved. They took away from the poorest, in order to be able to give to the richest. The war cripples and war orphans receive, instead of 1313 millions, only 1040 millions, that is, 25 percent less. The expenditures for the unemployed are reduced from 945 to 520 millions, that is, cut down by almost half. That a "balance" in the budget should be established, at least in the theory of the budget estimate, is a miracle. But this miracle is not brought about by any magical power of Hitler's, but through the starvation of the disinherited and the hell of the concentration camps.

Jobs Are Not Spared
But even the unemployed are not spared in this campaign of robbery. The budget estimate for 1933 closes, both in revenues and expenditures, at 400 million marks lower than in 1932. How was this trick of a saving in expenditures worked, in spite of the lavish increased spending for the sake of increased profit on capital and for the militarization of Germany? For

Disarmament and War - V.I. Lenin

(This article was published by comrade Lenin in October 1916, in the Social-Democrat, the Bolshevik publication issued in Geneva, Switzerland during the war. It is of especial importance now, when preparations are being made for an Anti-War Congress with the participation of Barbusse and other pacifists. It clearly states the revolutionary line in the struggle against war, and distinguishes it from petty-bourgeois pacifism. To read this document now enables one to measure the distance which separates the line of Lenin and that of Stalin, the "greatest disciple of Lenin".—Ed.)

One of the main arguments in favor of disarmament is that, and it is not always directly expressed: We are against war, in general, against any war, and the most definite, clear and unequivocal expression of this view of ours is the demand for disarmament.

We have dealt with the incorrectness of this argument in an article on the Junius pamphlet, to which we refer the reader. Socialists cannot be against every war, without ceasing to be socialists. One must not let himself be blinded by the present imperialist war. For the imperialist epoch, just such wars among the great powers are typical, but democratic wars and insurrections too, are absolutely impossible, such as for instance wars of oppressed nations against their oppressors, for their liberation from oppression. Civil wars between proletariat and bourgeoisie, for socialism, are inevitable. Wars between victorious Socialism in one country against other countries, bourgeois or reactionary are possible.

Disarmament is the ideal of Socialism. In Socialism society there will be no wars, consequently disarmament will be realized. But he is no Socialist, who expects the realization of Socialism without the social revolution and the dictatorship. Dictatorship is state force, which supports itself, immediately, upon force. Force in the twentieth century—as in the epoch of civilization in general—is neither the fist nor the club, but the army. To take disarmament into our program would mean to say: We are against the use of arms. In that there is to be found just in little Marxism as if we were to say: We are against the use of force!

We want to point out that the

international discussion on this question has been carried out mainly, if not exclusively, in the German language. And in German, two words are used, the distinction between which is hard to reproduce in Russian. One is (Abruestung) "disarmament", and is used, for instance, by Kautsky and the Kantians in the sense of limitation of armaments. The other is (Entwafrung) "total disarmament", and is mainly used by the Lefts in the sense of abolition of militarism, in the sense of abolition of every militarist (warlike) system. We are speaking in this article of the second demand, which is prevalent among some revolutionary Social-Democrats.

II.
An oppressed class, which does not endeavor to learn how to use arms and to possess arms, would only deserve to be treated like slaves. Without becoming bourgeois pacifists or opportunists, we must not forget that we live in a class society, and that there is not and cannot be any other way out of it than the class struggle and the overthrow of the power of the ruling class.

In every class society—whether based on slavery, serfdom or, as at present, on wage labor—the oppressing class is also armed. Not only the present standing army, but also the present militia—even in the most democratic bourgeois republics such as Switzerland is the arming of the bourgeoisie against the proletariat. This is such an elementary truth that it is scarcely necessary to spend much time on it here. It suffices to point to the use of the army (including the republican-democratic militia) against strikers, a phenomenon which is the same in all capitalist countries, without exception. The arming of the bourgeoisie against the proletariat is one of the most important, most fundamental, and most significant facts of capitalist society in the present period.

And in the face of such a fact it is proposed that the revolutionary social-democrats set up the demand for total disarmament! That means the same as the complete rejection of the standpoint of the class struggle, the rejection of every thought of revolution. Our slogan must be: Arm the proletariat, to conquer the bourgeoisie, to expropriate and to disarm it. This is the only possible tactic for the revolutionary class, a tactic which arises out of the whole objective development of capitalist militarism and is prescribed by this development. Only after the proletariat has disarmed the bourgeoisie, can it throw all weapons onto the ash-heap, without being disloyal to its world-historical task; and the proletariat will undoubtedly do this, not only then, and in no case before.

If the present war produces fear among the reactionaries, the christian-socialists and the woezy petty-bourgeois, only horror and fear, only aversion to any use of weapons, to blood, death, etc., then we must say: Capitalist society is and always was terror without an end. And if the present war, the most reactionary of all the wars of this society, is preparing an end in terror, then we have no occasion to fall into despair. In its objective meaning the "demand" for disarmament—or, more correctly, the demand of disarmament at a time when before the eyes of the whole world, through the forces of the bourgeoisie itself, the only legitimate and revolutionary war, that is the civil war against the imperialist bourgeoisie, is being prepared, is nothing but an expression of just such despair.

If anyone says that this is a visionary theory, we want to remind him of two world-historical facts: the role of the trusts and of factory work for women on the one hand, the Commune of 1871 and the December insurrection of 1905 in Russia on the other.

It is the bourgeoisie's affair to develop trusts, to drive children and women into the factory, to ruin and skin them alive there, and condemn them to the worst misery. We do not "demand" such a development. We do not "support it," but we struggle against it. But how do we struggle? We know that trusts and factory work for women are a progressive step. We do not want to go backward, to handwork, to capitalism without monopoly, to home-work for women. Forward through trusts and the rest, and over them, to Socialism!

These considerations, which take into account the objective course of the development, can be applied with suitable changes to the present militarization of the people. Today the imperialist bourgeoisie is militarizing not only the whole people, but the youth too. Tomorrow perhaps it will go on to the militarization of women too. To this we can only say: So much the better! So much the faster is it going ahead! And the faster it goes ahead, the nearer we are to the armed insurrection against capitalism! How can the social-democrats let themselves be intimidated by the militarization of the youth, if they have not forgotten the example of the Commune? This is no "visionary theory", no dream, but a fact. And it would be very bad in fact if the social-democrats, in spite of all economic and political facts, were to begin to doubt that the imperialist epoch and the imperialist war must inevitably lead to a repetition of such facts.

A bourgeois witness of the Commune wrote the following in an English newspaper in May, 1871: "If the French nation consisted only of women, what a terrible nation it would be!" Women and children over 13 fought at the time of the Commune alongside the men. It cannot be otherwise in the future battles for the overthrow of the bourgeoisie. The proletarian women will not stand by passively and see how the well-armed bourgeoisie shoot down the poorly-armed or unarmed workers. As was the case in 1871, they will take up arms, and out of the present intimidated nations—or more correctly, out of the present workers' movement, which has been disorganized by the opportunists more than by the governments—there will develop, sooner or later, but with absolute certainty, an international union of the "terrible nations" of the revolutionary proletariat.

Now militarization embraces all of public life. Imperialism is a bitter struggle of the great powers for the division and redivision of the world, and therefore it must lead to further militarization in all countries, even in the neutral and the small countries. But what will the proletarian women do about it? Will they only curse at every war and every phase of militarism and only demand disarmament? Never will the women of an oppressed class, which is truly revolutionary, content themselves with such a miserable role. They will say to their sons:

"Soon you will be grown up. They will give you weapons. Take them and learn the craft of war. This knowledge is necessary for the proletarian—not in order to shoot at your brothers, the workers of other countries, as happens in this war and as the betrayers of socialism are advising you to do—but in order to fight against the bourgeoisie of your own country, in order to put an end to exploitation, to poverty and to wars, not with pious wishes, but through victory over the bourgeoisie and through their disarmament."

If anyone rejects such propaganda, particularly in connection with the present war, he would do better not to use his words about international social-democracy, about the struggle against war.

N.R.A. and Changing Forms Of Amer. Capitalist Economy

The launching of the NRA has brought out in bold relief the intellectual sterility of Stalinism in America. When we examine the columns of the Daily Worker, we find the usual blatant generalities. One looks in vain for a sober, scientific analysis of the issue, with a view to the establishment of a correct perspective for action on the part of the working class.

The most important feature of the N. R. A. lies in the fact that the new Roosevelt turn signifies the initial stage of an entirely new political and economic organizational form for American capitalism. It is the beginning of state capitalism—the final economic form of capitalist society. How soon a more advanced stage of state capitalism is reached will depend upon the juxtaposition of a number of political and economic factors.

It is altogether inadequate to call the N. R. A. "the Slavery Act" and let it go at that, as if capitalism in any of its forms is not slavery for the workers. To refuse to recognize this new turn, first, by clear analysis and second, by the posing of new slogans and tactics is to continue the "tail end" position that the Stalinists have always followed with unvarying consistency. Despite the recent notable increase in strike activity throughout the country, the overwhelming numbers of the American working class along with the petty bourgeoisie is still convinced that the Roosevelt program actually means the "re-employment of men and dollars." The present administration is very skillful and effective in the use of demagoguery. When will the disillusion come? Not until it has soaked thoroughly into the consciousness of the workers by their own experiences in the actual results and meaning of the N. R. A.

Under these conditions it is absurd to launch general appeals to fight the N. R. A. as a "slavery act" on a united front basis. These appeals will bring nothing concretely, but will weaken the possibilities for genuine united front action to become of utmost importance. The labor lieutenants, on whom the NRA relies to a considerable extent to successfully put it over, have in the meantime stimulated themselves into such activity as they have not seen in years. The labor provisions of the Act were specially designed to enlist the support of organized labor. Aside from the nullification arising out of bitter opposition by the big open shop industrialists, the law specifically and in so many words gives labor the right to organize and bargain collectively. The reason for this paradox lies in the realization on the part of the Administration that a threat was necessary in order to whip into line the recalcitrant industrialists.

The years of depression have created havoc in the labor organizations. More than one of the old unions have seen their membership decline and disappear. The rankers have been a bit apprehensive about their pie and and felt that something ought to be done about it. The NRA gives them the opportunity and they are seizing it with both hands.

A recent bulletin brings us the news, for instance, that in Akron, Ohio, 1,500 workers have joined the A. F. of L. United Federal Union of Rubber Workers while 2,000 have joined the steel union in the Youngstown district. When one considers that these two basic industries have been traditionally open shop, the news achieves real significance. This bit of news can be multiplied hundredfold for the country as a whole. Everywhere the A. F. of L. is busy organizing, Johnson's declaration that no police machinery will be set up to ferret out and prosecute code violations plays right into the hands of the A. F. of L. leaders. The tasks of organized labor under the NRA will be "simplified" for the time being to the extent that it engages in policing the industries.

What is the Left wing under the TUUL doing? It is reviving its social insurance bill as a main proposition to put before the American workers! Even if the "Communist" social insurance bill were more Left than that offered by the socialists, which it is not, the T. U. U. L. would still be widely dodging the main issue.

The reaction of the Left wing to the necessities of the moment must be immediate. The tasks before it are clear. Every effort must be made to get back into the conservative unions at once. Where Left wing unions already exists constituting a factor in the industry for which they are organized, they must be extended by well planned and executed organizational drives.

It is safe to predict that the time in which organization efforts will be tolerated will be short. Therefore, every possible advantage that the workers can squeeze out of the situation must be utilized. Swift, mass action will count a great deal.

Will the N. R. A. give us shorter hours and a minimum wage scale? Very well, then, we shall organize to see to it that we get no less than that which is granted to us. We shall fight to prevent the minimum wage scales from becoming the rule. We shall fight to retain present wage scales in a number of industries from being lowered to the minimum set by the codes and for wage increases to meet increased cost of living. Such should be the tenor of our argument.

Discussion on the German Defeat

The article appearing below is a second contribution to the discussion on the problems of the German situation after the victory of Fascism. The views expressed are those of the writer.—Ed.

L.
The victory of Fascism in Germany is now an irrefutable fact. The defeat of the German proletariat means, of course, an indubitable set back to the revolutionary reorganization of society. To minimize the Fascist victory is to open wide the gateway to subsequent disasters. But there is no less danger in overestimating it. Fascism is victorious but its victory is not final. Its triumph was gained in Germany over a demoralized proletariat. It won because the workers were demoralized by the betrayal of the party of social democracy and the party of Socialism in Germany. To draw erroneous political conclusions from this betrayal—to blame the workers—is to lead to further demoralization, despair and catastrophe on the international scale.

The "amazing thing" about the experience in Germany is that Hitler was able to come to power legally, i. e., that Hitler's assumption of the state power did not provoke elemental resistance on the part of the workers. The worshippers of the elemental are aghast at this discrepancy between the dynamic background and the inertia of the proletarian mass. The proletariat of Germany, they sigh, is the "best organized working class in the world" and yet despite its strength and organization, the Fascists literally slid into power without any resistance. Nothing approaching such passivity can be cited from past history. There are no analogies that seem to apply. The incentive to set them in motion seems to obtain, and yet the masses do not budge. Their lives are at stake and yet the workers remain docile, indifferent or stupefied. Learnedly, facts and figures are being culled to prove that the masses did act spontaneously in the past. Why, the same workers openly resisted the very same Fascists even before Hitler assumed power. Still more perplexing is the fact that even at the beginning of its historical journey the proletariat evinced unmistakable initiative. At their weakest, the workers tended "instinctively" to organize themselves, rising up spontaneously, throwing up their own leaders, and at times acting despite their leaders when the latter tried to stem their elemental urge. But now, almost on the brink of their historic goal, the workers seem paralyzed. Once Fascism assumes power, they permit it to crack their skulls and destroy their organizations. There are a number of revolutionists who are at present voicing privately their indignation, if not disgust with the workers of Germany and their "psychology." The German workers, they say, are after all Germans and like all Germans they have been drilled and organized to the point of becoming automatons, ready to goose-step no matter who commands. It is a shameful fact that today in America there are Marxists who produce such psychology to account for the passivity of the German workers. In order to explain the situation in Germany, they find it unnecessary to dig into the tragic historical course of the working class in Germany; the role of their parties explains nothing; the treachery of social democracy and the supplementary treacherous policies of the official German Communist Party explain nothing. Psychology explains everything—"the racial psychosis" fully accounts for everything, not only in Germany but in America also. Why are the American workers so inert? Are they not imbued with the psychology of rugged individualism and not the psychology of bay-foot, straw-foot? Answer—"They suffer from the racial American psychosis." Our rugged individualists, if they happen to be American workers are also provincial and hence "terribly backward." Clearly, the American workers—all workers—are to blame if they do not know how or why to fight; clearly, the workers and only the workers are to blame for failing to learn what their psychopathic leaders cannot teach them.

But according to our fetishists of the elemental, the American, just like the German worker is supposed to fight anyway, no matter what he knows and what he doesn't. Why aren't the American workers responding elementally like the American petty-bourgeoisie, the farmers, who are in open revolt? The farmers are acting, militantly they try to force their demands

NRA & State Capitalism

Concurrently, we must strengthen our unemployed work. Demand for social insurance, as well as all other related unemployed demands and activities must be constantly held in the foreground. We must particularly develop united front action among the various unemployed organizations in the field on every possible occasion.

If we are at all successful in dealing with the tasks that present themselves to us with such clearness, when the mass disillusionment sets in the vanguard will be recompensed by added strength and power. The Left Opposition wing can rally to its banner new valuable revolutionary forces by demonstrating that it is capable of understanding the new turn of events and applying correct Marxian tactics.—JOSEPH S. GIGANTLI upon the state, they mobilize—and the workers...? "They are still too backward," replies our revolutionary thinker. Small wonder that with such Marxists abroad one finds the most sanguine perspectives of the conjuncture in the American revolutionary press. The big bourgeoisie is prepared for riot, for spontaneous mass outbursts; it has put all its state machinery in order to meet the gravest eventualities, even to the extent of preparing the Army to take over the railroads, if and when necessary. The ruling class is alarmed by the lull below, fearful that the longer the masses remain dormant the sharper and more violent may prove the explosion. But the revolutionists are busy manufacturing alibis, maintaining their prestige, and screening their own bewilderment.

Is the big bourgeoisie of America merely hysterical from an acute attack of "crisis psychosis"? Not quite. Though somewhat distended in panic, its eyes see clearly nevertheless. For one thing the big bourgeoisie sees danger on the part of the petty bourgeoisie which as a class responds the quickest and easiest to the elemental in accordance with its subordination to bourgeois ideology which is propagated and instilled in all individuals in society by the bourgeoisie.

L.O. Holds Successful Meeting in N.Y.

Upwards of 500 workers came to the Irving Plaza Hall to listen to the report of comrade Max Shachtman on the fate of the second and third Internationals. An enthusiastic atmosphere was manifest throughout the entire proceedings of the meeting. Workers never before seen at Opposition meetings were in evidence through every part of the hall. Besides these there were scores of Party members and sympathizers. Lovestones, Socialists and every other shade of working class political opinion present. The questions upmost in the minds of the most developed elements in the working class movement—is there a chance for the revival of the International Socialist movement? Will there be a resurgent movement within the ranks of the Communist International after the Hitler victory in Germany?—these questions and others of a similar nature were posed by the speaker of the evening and developed and elucidated in a manner as to rouse in the minds of the workers present a serious and critical approach to the problems confronting all revolutionists at the present time.

Following the collection, the floor was thrown open for questions and discussion. Dozens of questions followed: Does the speaker have the temerity to say that the Communist Party is liquidated in Germany when the Communists there are painting slogans on working class houses? Why were the Italian workers defeated when they had such great leaders to guide them as Lenin and Trotsky? What is the direction of the Left Socialist groupings, S. A. P., I. L. P., etc? Why didn't the Left Opposition make a determined struggle against Fascism in action?

Quite a number of the questions revolved around the problem of a new International. To these comrade Shachtman replied that there was now a serious discussion going on in the ranks of the International Left Opposition and that as soon as a full and thorough discussion had been concluded and a policy democratically determined the L. O. would make its standpoint clear to the entire working class. It was after midnight when the speaker concluded with the questions, so it was quite apparent that discussion could not unfortunately be had. The meeting concluded with the singing of the Internationale.

Prepare Youth Day for War Fight

tion to its regular anti-militarist propaganda.

Today the heavy clouds of war looms over the entire world. The threat of Japanese imperialism to the Soviet Union, its robber war and conquests in China, the consolidation of German Fascism, the conflicts between the imperialist nations, England vs. the United States, Japan vs. the U. S., Germany vs. France, Austria vs. Germany, and so on, brood an impending massacre. The capitalist nations are reaching an economic and political impasse. It is becoming more and more difficult for them to settle their problems peacefully. France is armed to the teeth. Japan, England and the United States have been and are increasing their naval forces. Roosevelt is preparing the psychology of the American workers for a war situation. His national labor boards closely resemble those organized during the last war. Through the Civil Conservation Camps, the American bosses represented by Roosevelt's government are preparing a reserve of several hundred thousand young workers for the new imperialist slaughter.

...To counteract this process of militarization of the youth, little effective work is being done. The Stalinist Communist party and Young Communist League gives over to the Barbusse, Sinclair, and Dreiser the leadership of the struggle against war. In the trade unions, which are essential for war or anti-war purposes the Left wing is insignificant.

International Youth Day belongs to the militant and class conscious young workers. To give it real meaning to enshrine it in the hearts of the American youth an orientation of international revolution is necessary. Only on such a basis can an effective struggle against militarism and war be conceived. The Left Opposition youth will dedicate itself to this and endeavor to carry on the tradition of the handful of bold young fighters who met at Berne.

minut groups though all of them still defend the basic line of Communist policies which lead to the failure and disasters. These people still declare that what needs to be corrected is only the "third period" sectarian aspects of the Stalinist policies.

The resolution for the Brussels conference deals with Germany, declaring that the "victory of Fascism has shown to the whole world the bankruptcy of the Social Democratic and Communist parties." It condemns the coalition policy of the Social Democrats and their acceptance of the "lesser evil" theory. Both statements are entirely justified and correct. Yet the character of the conference cannot fully be judged in advance. As far as at least some of the initiators are concerned its prospects still stand between the camps of reformism and Communism. A first test will be afforded at the gathering now taking place and the prospects for the trend toward the Left Opposition gaining momentum must be said to be good.

The Issue Within the British I.L.P.

The attitude of the British I. L. P. to this conference is of interest. The right wing of its National Council has lined up against further co-operation with the Communist party. In turn the leaders of the latter label the I. L. P. leaders bag and baggage "counter-revolutionaries," "Fascists," "enemies of the Soviet Union," etc. The I. L. P. National Council, after many differences within it were revealed, finally decided that in regard to the conference resolution its view is: "That whilst both the Second and the Third International also bear a share of the responsibility (for Germany) the nature of the failure is different. The Social Democratic failure is due to its reformist and compromising policy. The Communists had correct revolutionary principles but applied them incorrectly."

In connection with these developments our British Left Opposition section appeals to the comrades of the Independent Labor Party" imploring them to make clear their position, especially on the basic problems of the revolution. The lack of this formulation makes it possible in the I. L. P. to find today those who stand for immediate admission to the Communist party rubbing shoulders with those whose rightful place is in the labor party. The I. L. P. has not yet fully found its way to the Communist position. Consequently it has not yet fully made the break with Centrism.

The British Communist party is now campaigning for a "United Communist Party." The unity is to be brought about by a "Unity Congress," and we are told a "democratic" one. But this congress is to be on the basis of the Comintern program. That is the program adopted at the Sixth Congress, the program of "socialism in one country," which separated the workers from the mass of trade unionists, which evolved the fatal theory of "Social Fascism," and which is at the basis of the capitulation and defeat in Germany. Our British Left Oppositionists say to the I. L. P.:

"It is impossible to talk of unity on such terms. But the I. L. P. cannot exist on the mistakes of the C. I. For this reason it is all the more necessary to begin an exhaustive discussion which shall aim at facing up to the main problems posed by the present world situation and by the experience of the past in order to formulate your own viewpoint. And such a discussion would have profound effects, not only inside your own organization, but also inside the C. P. G. B. and would be the first step towards the real unity of the best revolutionary forces on the basis of ideological unity."

Temps and Stalin

of repentance, as was done by Kamenev and Zinoviev... it would be impossible to accord him the permission to return to the USSR." To every politically literate person it can only mean that Stalin, "absolutely competent source," formally obligated himself to the agent of French finance not to admit Trotsky to the USSR even if he should sign a letter of repentance. "However, the correspondent adds in passing, it is not at all in Trotsky's character to sign such letters."

Temps carefully circumvents the contradiction of why "it would be impossible to accord Trotsky the permission to return to the Soviet Union," even in case of repentance, if he has no program, no adherents and is foreign to the masses. The experienced correspondent kept political discipline and did not ask any embarrassing questions of the "absolutely competent source." The categorical obligation of Stalin: Let the French stock market not fear a rapprochement with Moscow: "Trotsky will in no case be admitted to the USSR," sufficed for him this time. Yesterday Stalin made this pledge to Hitler, today to the Comité des forges.

Once again: let the Stalinists consider well this remarkable document. This is not chatter of the yellow, tabloid press. Not in vain did Jores once say: Temps is the bourgeoisie turned newspaper."

Hitler & the Prospects of War

the appraisal of the internal as well as the foreign policy of National-Socialism.

The guiding philosophical and historical ideas in the declaration are truly pitiful in their pretentious modality. The idea proclaimed by Hitler of the necessity of re-adopting the state frontiers of Europe to the frontiers of its races, is one of those reactionary utopies with which the National-Socialist program is studded. Present-day Europe is decomposing economically and culturally not because its national frontiers are imperfect, but because the old continent is cut up in every direction by customs, prison walls, separated by the disorder of the monetary systems, that is, systems of inflation, and crushed by the militarism which Europe requires to insure its dismemberment and its decadence. A shifting of the internal frontiers by a few dozens or hundreds of miles in one direction or another, would, without changing much of anything, involve a number of human victims exceeding the population of the displaced zone.

The assurances given by the National-Socialists that they renounce "Germanization" do not signify that they renounce conquests: one of the central and most persistent ideas in their program is the occupation of vast territories in "the East," so that a strong German peasantry may be established there. It is not by accident that the pacifist declaration, having suddenly and unexpectedly left the ground of the "ideal" separation of the races, warns in a half-threatening tone that the source of future conflicts may arise out of the "overpopulation of Europe, primarily of Germany: the East. And when, lamenting the injustice of the German-Polish frontier, he declared that one could without difficulty find "in the East" the solution capable of satisfying alike the "claims of Poland" and the "legitimate rights of Germany," he simply had in mind the annexation of Soviet territories. The renunciation of Germanization signifies, in this connection, the principle of the privileged position of the Germanic "race" as the seigniorial caste in the occupied territories. The Nazis are against assimilation but not against extermination of the conquered "inferior" peoples to their Germanization. For the time being, fortunately, it is only a matter of hypothetical conquests.

When Hitler asserts with indignation that the great German people has been transformed into a second class nation, and that this conflicts with the interests of international solidarity and the principle of equal rights for all peoples, this idea rings false from these lips: the whole historical philosophy of National-Socialism proceeds from the allegedly organic inequality of nations and the right of the "superior" races to trample upon and to exterminate the "inferior" races. Taken as a whole, the Hitler program for the reconstruction of Europe is a reactionary-utopian medley of racial mysticism and national cannibalism. It is not hard to submit it to an annihilating criticism. However, it is not the beginning of the realization of this program that is on the order of the day of the Fascist dictatorship, but the re-establishment of the military power of Germany, without which it is impossible to talk of any program whatsoever. It is only from this standpoint that the declaration offers any interest.

Hitler's program is the program of German capitalism, the most dynamic and the most aggressive of all, and which is at the same time bound hand and foot by the results of the defeat. It is this combination of potential strength and actual weakness that predetermines the exceedingly explosive character of the aims of National-Socialism as well as the extreme prudence of the most immediate steps towards the attainment of these aims. One can speak today of loosening and gradually untying the knots, but not of cutting them asunder.

Any revision of the treaties, especially of the system of armaments, would signify a change in the present relationship of forces: Germany would have to grow stronger, France weaker. Outside of this, the very question of revision has no meaning for Germany. On the other hand, it is quite clear that the rulers of France will accept no changes that would weaken its position to the benefit of Germany.

That is why the Nazis regard as illusory and fantastic any policy calculated upon an improvement of the international position of Germany by way of an agreement with France. It is from this conviction which, as will be seen further on, runs through all the political activity of Hitler, that flows the inevitability of a new conflict between Germany and France. But not today, nor tomorrow. It is precisely this "correction" with regard to time that Hitler makes in his declaration and, in this sense, it is not a mere "deception." When Goering set fire to the Reichstag, he risked nothing but the heads of his agents. The premeditated firing of Europe is a more ticklish enterprise. In its present state, Germany cannot make war. It is disarmed. This is no phrase, it is a fact. Bespectacled students and unemployed with a swastika band are no substitute for the Hohenzollern army. To be sure, here and there Hitler can partially violate the obligations dealing with armaments. But he will not resolve upon any open measure on a large scale which would involve him in a direct and flagrant conflict with the prescription of Versailles. Only some "fortunate" circumstances, in the form of complications between the heavily armed states of Europe, could permit National-Socialism, in the very next period, to execute a panther's leap, its "March 5th" in foreign policy. But in their absence, Hitler will be forced to confine himself to grand diplomatic combinations abroad and to petty military outbursts at home.

Potential strength does not liberate from actual weakness. If the Germany of the Hohenzollerns set itself the task of "organizing Europe" in order thereafter to undertake a new partition of the world, present-day Germany, thrown far back to the rear by the defeat, is forced to set itself once more those tasks which Bismarck's Prussia solved long ago: the attainment of the European equilibrium as a stage in the unification of all the German territories. The practical program of Hitler is today bounded by the European horizon. The problems of continents and of oceans are beyond his field of vision and can be of practical concern to him only in so far as they are interwoven and particularly the unemployed workers around the slogan of recognition and financial support to the Soviet Union. This was the logical outcome of the theory of "Socialism in One Country," which divorces the progress of the revolution in the Soviet Union toward Socialism from the interests of the revolutionary movement of the proletariat in the countries which are still dominated by capitalism. They have preferred to attempt to obtain recognition, not by the pressure of the masses, but by back-stage negotiations with the representatives of the capitalist class. Confronted with our slogans, they have denied that the proletariat would or could be mobilized around these demands, saying that the workers were too backward, that they would not understand, that it was a risky way of doing things, that it might arouse the antagonism of the bourgeoisie, that it might interfere with the cautious negotiations of the Soviet diplomats.

USSR Recognition A Class Question

This policy of sacrificing the permanent and ultimate aims of the international working-class to the temporary and immediate ones of the Soviet State, is essentially opportunistic. It gains its immediate aims by retreating. How far this retreat will go we do not know. The American government has in past negotiations with the Soviet government asked for guarantees against the use of Soviet recognition to further revolutionary activity in the United States, and has even demanded the abolition of the Communist International. We may doubt that the retreat will go that far, but at what point will it stop? Will that point be fixed by the intransigence of the Stalinist diplomats or by the insolence of the American negotiators?

A correct revolutionary strategy cannot be based on the subordination or opposition of the international interests of the working class to the immediate interests of the first workers' state. With or without Stalinist leadership, the only sound policy remains: to pose the fight for recognition as a working-class demand joining the interests of the American workers with those of the Russian workers, to carry our demands in the course of struggle from recognition and long-term credits to steadily higher levels, forward to the demand for a joint plan of economic collaboration and as our ultimate goal, the international planning commission for world economy.

Unite the Interests of the Soviet

But we are faced with the actual situation created by the policies of the Stalinist bureaucracy. We must declare unequivocally—we are in favor of the recognition of the Soviet Union, because it strengthens the workers' state. The government of the workers state, however, is in the hands of Stalinism. For the present, the interests of the Stalinist bureaucracy coincide with the immediate interests only of the Soviet State. The Left Opposition, on the other hand, always fights for the defense of the first workers' state as well as for the ultimate international revolutionary interests of the world proletariat. It is only the Stalinist apparatus that separates the two.

In defending the Soviet Union, we fight jointly with the present government, which is the Stalinist apparatus. When, and if, the interests of the apparatus or part of it conflict with those of the workers' state, as may occur in the event of intervention or a Thermidorian counter-revolutionary crisis, we defend the workers' state and call on the international proletariat to mobilize for its defense.

Even then the immediate question of the recognition of the Soviet Union will be settled, therefore, the Left Opposition still poses as its task the mobilization of the revolutionary vanguard of the international working-class for the support of the next stage of the needs of the Soviet Union, for economic collaboration and for international defense.—B. with the internal problems of Europe. Hitler speaks exclusively in defensive terms: this corresponds entirely to the stage through which renaissance German militarism must pass. If the military rule—the best defensive is the offensive—is correct the diplomatic rule—the best preparation for the offensive is to take care of the defensive—is no less correct. In this sense, Brookdorf-Rantzau, who had a taste for paradox, told me in Moscow: Si vis oclum para pacem.

Hitler is counting upon the support of Italy, and within certain limits, this is assured him—not so much because of the identity of internal regime (the parody German Third Reich is, as is known, a frankly Latin plagiarism), as because of the parallelism in—at least their negative—foreign aspirations. But with the Italian crust alone, German imperialism will not rise to its feet. Only under the conditions of support from England can Fascist Germany gain the necessary freedom of movement. There are no adventures, no declarations which smack of adventure! Hitler understands: every blow against the West (a blow against Poland) would rebound against the West, would promptly bring closer together England and France, and would oblige Italy to the greatest reserve. Every imprudent, premature, risky act of revenge-politics would lead automatically to the isolation of Germany and, given its military impotence, to a new humiliating capitulation. The knots of the Versailles treaty would be drawn still tighter. An agreement with England demands a self-limitation. But Paris—and Paris is just what is involved—is well worth a mass. Just as the agreement with Hindenburg, through the medium of Papen, permitted Hitler to accomplish his coup d'état in the form of an interpretation of the Weimar Constitution, so an agreement with England, through the medium of Italy, is to permit Germany "legally" to ravage and to overthrow the Versailles treaty. It is within this framework that the declaration of May 17 must be viewed. Hitler's pacifism is not a fortuitous diplomatic improvisation, but a component part of a grand maneuver which is to change radically the relationship of forces in favor of Germany, and to lay the bases for the European and the world offensive of German imperialism.

However, this is but one part of Hitler's program and only the negative part: to refrain from premature attempts at revenge is in essence the continuation of the Stresemann policy; it does not suffice to guarantee the active support of England. The declaration of May 17 contains a clear indication on the other, the positive, side of the Nazi program: the struggle against Bolshevism. It is not a question of the organizations of the German proletariat but of the struggle against the Soviet Union. In close connection with the program of the drive towards the East (Drang nach Osten), Hitler takes upon himself the protection of European civilization, of the Christian religion, of the British colonies and, against Bolshevik barbarism. From this historic mission, precisely and primarily from this mission, he hopes to obtain for Germany the right to arm itself. Hitler is convinced that on the scales of Great Britain the danger of German Fascism to western Europe weighs less than the danger of the Bolshevik Soviets in the East. This evaluation constitutes the most important key to the whole foreign policy of Hitler.

The most important, but not the only one. The National-Socialist dictatorship will not only play upon the contradiction between the West and the East, but also upon all the antagonisms of western Europe: there is no lack of them. Placing a cross over the fount of Austro-Hungary, Hitler pledges the special attention of Germany to the "young national states of Europe." He seeks auxiliary levers to re-establish the European equilibrium, proposing to the small and feeble states to rally around the vanquished and not the victor. Just as in its domestic policy, National-Socialism has assembled under its banner the ruined and the desperate, in order all the more surely to subject them to the interests of monopoly capital, so in its foreign policy Hitler will strive to create a united front of the vanquished and the injured in order all the more militantly to crush them in the future under the weight of German imperialism.

If Hitler has so eagerly accepted the English plan for armaments reduction, it is only because he counted in advance and with full certainty upon its failure. He did not need to take upon himself the odious role of the grave-digger of pacifist proposals: he prefers to leave that function to others. For the same reason, Hitler is not, hardly with his "warm thanks" to the American President for his declaration in favor of armaments reduction. The more broadly and extensively the program of disarmament is presented before the whole world, and the more inevitably it ends in a collapse, the more inconceivable will be Germany's right to rearmament. No, Hitler is not preparing to overthrow Versailles by violence—for violence one must have power! But he is counting firmly upon the prospect that, after the failure of the British program which he "supports," England, together with Italy, will support with all their might the right of Germany to strengthen its defense.... against the East. Nothing but defense, and only against the East!

The Cleveland Fiasco

The Cleveland Conference was another Stalinist "united front" masquerade which adds nothing positive to strengthen and unify the left wing of the struggle. That was to be expected. A service to the working class would have been possible there only if the conference had been convened under the sign of a change of trade union policy and a renunciation of the monstrous system of mistakes and crimes which have demoralized and decimated the left wing forces in the labor movement, robbing them of the possibility of playing their national role in the present beginning of a new rise in working class activity. Instead of that the whole affair was consecrated to the task of covering up the past and perpetuating the policies, methods and practices which have brought such tragic results.

From the point of view of trade union tactics, the class conscious workers have to reject the findings of the Cleveland Conference in toto. Faced with the overwhelming evidence on every side of a revival of the conservative labor organizations and a sweeping movement of the workers into them, a trade union conference at this moment can serve a progressive purpose only if it draws the inescapable conclusion. That is, to recognize that this new impulse of the workers for organization, even in the most conservative unions, is in itself a progressive development which the revolutionaries must assist and encourage and take part in. Regardless of variations in the process, due to the exceptional conditions in certain instances, it is absolutely clear to anyone who has eyes to see that this drift toward the A. F. of L. unions is the main line of union development in the new situation arising from the collapse of the Stalinist paper unions, the economic upturn and the inauguration of the NRA. A national trade union conference, called together in such a situation, must deal with main lines if it does not want to leave the track entirely.

The Stalinist engineers of the Cleveland Conference could not do this without revealing and admitting the falsity of all they have said and done and tried to do on the trade union field in the past period. They would have had to admit that life itself is refuting the contentions which they set up as rigid principles. They would have been obliged to recognize that the sectarianism and bureaucratic mismanagement of the paper unions under their control have brought under which operate as an objective factor to discredit and paralyze the independent union movement, to rob it for the time of its great vitality and by that to push the main stream of the awakening workers back into the conservative organizations, even into those against which they have previously revolted.

From the point of view of the proletarian united front the Cleveland conference was a comedy, unending and perhaps a little ridiculous than the previous exhibitions. As every vegetable has its season, so every change of the moon brings a new type of "united front". The "united front from below", which condemned all non-Communist leaders as fascists and excluded any cooperation with them, gave place to the approach to all reformist organizations for a united front with a non-aggression pact excluding criticism. This attempt to include everybody at any price is already out of date. The dealings with the fascists and Socialists in general are given up, in favor of the exclusive unity—and a touchingly affectionate one—with the "left social fascists", the "most dangerous" of the whole conglomeration of black shirts and brown shirts who lurked behind every bush.

This bloc in reality is a crude horse trade which must conduct on the principle of give and take, with the express proviso that the CPLA does not do any of the giving. Muste and Budenz sign their names to joint manifestos (which cost nothing), sit on the platform, and gain a certain rehabilitation before the Communist workers. This is a real gain for them. They are hot foot for this kind of "unity", and naturally so. But when it comes to the question of concrete agreements in any sector of the trade union field, they invariably balk. The "united conference" at Cleveland showed the Musteltes dissenting and keeping their hands free in every case.

All this is funny enough. But the sum total results of the Stalinist adventures in the trade union field are no joke. Just at the moment when the workers are beginning to stir again, to move in masses in sharp collisions against the employers—in a word, in a situation made to order for an advance of revolutionary organization and influence the reactionary labor bureaucrats reestablish their organizations and secure their positions and prestige on the support of new hundreds and thousands of workers, while the left wing suffers catastrophic defeats. The most outstanding illustration of this anomaly is to be seen in the needle trades.

But this superficial appearance of things is in reality a contradictory process which is not without positive aspects which promise much for the future. If thousands of the class conscious workers, caught in the overwhelming pressure of external forces, are turning their backs on the cut and dried trade union schemes of the Stalinists and reentering the conservative unions, this movement does not necessarily imply a retrogression on their part. Any movement toward trade union organization is progressive. And when this is accompanied by a profound disillusionment with the Stalinist dogma and the Stalinist leadership its progressive nature is by no means impaired. On the contrary, the decisive break of the advanced workers out of the straight jacket of Stalinism is the first and most necessary condition for the reemergence and flowering of a genuine left wing in the labor movement. And that also is the necessary basis for a reconstruction of American Communism.

Stalinists Ready to Give Up Saar to Hitler

One bloody sacrifice of the German working class is not enough for the adventures of the C. P. G. leadership. They are all set to commit a new crime. A crime which constitutes a crowning laurel worthy of all their previous deeds. A crime which shows up to a "left" their unconditional capitulation before the nationalist phrasology of the Nazis.

The negation of internationalism in proletarian politics and the headlong race with the Nazis for the exploitation of the chauvinistic instincts of broad masses in Germany—these are the fundamental causes of the class treachery of the C. P. G. "Tear the Chains of Versailles", "National and Social Revolution of the People", the united front with the N. S. D. A. P. (National Socialist German Labor Party)—i. e., the fascists under Hitler! During the "Red Referendum", the wailing of degenerate militarists and notorious labor assassins (like Major Giesecke, who later betrayed the whole party apparatus)—all these are important milestones in the German workers' path of sorrows. The consistent execution of such a policy, based on the fundamental error of nationalism, could not help leading to capitulation.

This course is now to be continued by the position of the party on the Saar problem. The party's position in this question is the most monstrous thing imaginable for Marxists and internationalists. The working class of the whole world must be made aware of what a completely degenerate bureaucracy is capable of. It is not in this case a matter any longer of theoretical dispute. No, it is simply a criminal offense.

The Saar territory, which is to be decided by referendum in 1935 as to how it wishes to shape its political future, has been under a League of Nations protectorate ever since the peace treaty. In the referendum the natives will have an opportunity to express their will in three ways: namely (1) for the maintenance of the status quo ante, that is, the present state of autonomy; (2) for annexation to France; (3) for the return to Germany.

Due to the social and economic composition of the Saar (preponderance of the coal and iron industries) there can be no doubt that the labor vote will play the decisive role in the referendum. It is also clear that nothing is further from the minds of the workers than the idea of desiring annexation to French imperialism. That possibility is excluded beforehand.

The Saar bourgeoisie is already today falling into step with the Third Reich. The Catholic Centre also. This surprises no one. The social democracy is of greater importance, however. For years they stood in the front ranks of the repatriation enthusiasts and there was no official celebration in Prussia in which some S. P. G. minister did not participate in the intonation of patriotic hymns to the German loyalists of the Saar proletariat. Today, after the S. P. G. has thus helped Herr Hitler into the saddle, after the latter has banished all the patriotic ministers to the concentration camps, the social democrats in the Saar are forced to revise their point of view most radically. They put forward the slogan

The Class Face of the N.R.A.

The class conscious worker who has pursued with any measure of watchfulness the unfolding improvisations of this latest "Great Effort" of capitalism will receive the Green-Wool legend of NRA's unionism with his tongue in his cheek. He will remember the sudden "strike truce edict" of the great labor friend in the White House following not on the trail of the powerful challenge to the coal bosses thrust out by the miners of Pennsylvania last July. (The promise, "fair", "pro-union" coal code is, by the way, still in the offing.) He has witnessed the Johnson-Ritchie comedy around section 7 (a) of the Recovery law. He has seen an automobile code adopted with a stridently anti-labor, open shop "merit" clause. He has heard the Recovery cop, Whalen, invoke the NRA for the arrest of peacefully picketing shoe and bakery strikers in New York. And so on down the line.

But even more striking than all these manifestations of the "pro-labor" tendencies of the Recovery administration are its acts which involve the parts assigned to Green, Lewis and Co. themselves. A national arbitration board is named: Only two representatives of "organized" labor. And what representatives? John L. Lewis, the reactionary czar of the United Mine Workers and Bill Green, Hoover's darling. Two labor representatives out of a board of seven.

The steel barons meet for a code hearing. Bill Green arrives as representative of the administration. The steel men rise in angry protest—they won't negotiate with the President of the A. F. of L. Green apologizes, swears he is not there, goes for a representative of labor but as a legitimate spokesman for the NRA. No use. You can't fool the good capitalist instincts of the steel men. They turn their heels on poor Mr. Green.

A few facts, an incident, that speak volumes! The case-hardened boss class will not give up its class positions one inch without a fight. They know that it is only the docile William Green. They know that he is ever ready to talk peace to them, to betray every last worker he represents.

But no matter. To accept him as an administration representative? The idea alone makes the steel barons see nightmares of a Soviet! Not an inch of such a concession, it sets precedents!

And the good General Johnson wears out his knees in genuflections before them, repudiates Green as representative and ruthlessly rehabilitates him upon the protests of his colleagues.

But enough—the class face of the NRA is unmistakable. For Roosevelt it represents an effort toward a revamping of capitalism by internal reform and through the mobilization of a huge class collaborationist machine. For the steel barons it is a risky experiment. They will not dent with Browder's "Fascist" A. F. of L. Green. Tomorrow they may have to deal with social fascist Norman Thomas and the day after tomorrow—with Left social fascist Muste? You never can tell. It isn't safe to give in to anyone who represents labor!

But the labor movement remains silent. The official Communist party shows no comprehension for the events or their possibilities. The left wing of the trade unions is out of the picture.

Only one solitary gesture of protest rises against this hypocrisy of the NRA: It comes—also—only from a lady social worker who has been appointed to a post in the administration.

Mrs. Kleeck of the Russell Sage Foundation withdraws her acceptance of the post on the grounds that NRA does not give labor sufficient representation, that it deprives the workers of their only genuine weapon of bargaining—the right to strike, etc. The lady liberal took the reformism of Roosevelt at its face value. Her protest is genuine. Of course, it is only the isolated protest of a sincere labor sympathizer.

What the NRA deserved was a protest from mass pressure by labor itself. That will come, that will be effective and take the road to workers' victory when the left wing realizes the tremendous opportunities afforded by the situation, when the Communists appraise and analyze the present situation realistically, when the militant section of labor penetrates the A. F. of L. and snatches the leadership of organized labor away from the Greens and the Wollis and the Lewises.

HANDS OFF CUBA!

Stalin Invites Pilsudski to Review the Red Army

The hangman of Communists, the jailer of thousands of workers and peasants, the fascist dictator of Poland has been invited by Joseph Stalin to participate in the Red Army demonstration on the anniversary of the Bolshevik revolution.

Marshal Joseph Pilsudski, whose vicious, bitter hatred and enmity to the Workers Republic is a secret to no one and which he has taken no pains to conceal is asked to come to Moscow to celebrate the overthrow of the landlords and exploiters; to review the army of Lenin and Trotsky. Sinister omen!

The revolutionary workers throughout the world must ask with horror what is the significance of this move that is so filled with implications of treachery.

Following close on the heels of Radek's visit to Poland, where he was feted and entertained in regal style by the editor of Pilsudski's official organ, the Gazeta Polska, the invitation to Pilsudski contains the serious warning that the Stalinist betrayal in Germany was but the first stage in their complete repudiation of internationalism.

The question becomes more insistent: Is the defense of the Polish Union to be entrusted to the Pilsudskis, the Herliots? And is the world proletariat to be sacrificed to that insidious end?

The heinous theory of Socialism in One Country has led directly to the capitulation before the Brown Shirts. Why? Because civil war in Germany might have disturbed the chimera of an isolated national socialist society. For these self-same reasons the Communist International has not met in Congress for more than five years to discuss the burning problems facing the working class of the world. In its stead are the non-aggression pacts—scraps of paper which will be violated at the first opportunity by the imperialists.

And now the logic of the Stalinist policy leads them not to call upon the world proletariat to observe the November revolution by a powerful struggle against fascism—and fascism is not in Germany alone—but by tender congratulations for the fascist Pilsudski. What can the Polish workers say to this invitation when they are clubbed, jailed and murdered for the observance of the Russian Revolution? Stalin is indifferent to them. What cynicism is expressed for the revolutionary movement in the sending to Pilsudski the dossier of the latter's record in the Polish nationalist movement in the Czarist days.

It is hinted in the bourgeois press, and has not been denied by the Daily Worker, that a military alliance between Soviet Russia and fascist Poland is in preparation. We sound the warning that there can be no greater betrayal of internationalism, of the interests of the working class, no greater danger to the Soviet Union than the consummation of such a perfidious alliance. Let the Communist workers take note. The cook is preparing us another property soup. This time it is Soviet Russia that is at stake!

U.S. Prepares Assault on Europe

The New York Times in an editorial on August 20, issues a warning against any attitude of panic should the NRA not succeed according to expectations. It says: "But it is now evident that the issues of the battle will not be decided by the first shock of attack. A long period of what may be called trench warfare is before the country."

The main issues of this trench warfare are already discernible—and it will have plenty of new and greater shocks of attacks, covered also by barrages of heavy artillery. First and foremost, in the order of importance, is the onslaught upon the world market to be launched as soon as the home front is sufficiently prepared. In other words we are facing the American imperialist offensive against Europe. Its further fate and even the fate of the recovery program, is bound up closely with this offensive. Conversely that will also influence the trend of the American working class movement in the coming period.

Let us say at the outset that this should not lead to a minimizing of the importance of the domestic market or of the significance of relationship of forces at home. On the contrary. Precisely that aspect must be the starting point of accurate estimation of American prospects in the world market. The huge domestic market is the stronghold and the reservoir from which proceeds the penetration since the world war has already left the American imperialist imprint upon Europe. But now operations are being prepared for a far more formidable scale destined to put all past ventures in the shade.

The American bourgeoisie needs to strengthen its hands at home in order to be able to move with that much more certainty abroad. Efforts toward this strengthening are taking place in three different directions which, however, all fit in to one pattern: Between the various financial and industrial units which make up the national economic structure; in the relationship between capital and labor and finally in the relationship of the government to both. The specific method, or instrument, by which this is hoped to be accomplished, is the NRA.

In regard to the first of these directions named, the most noteworthy factors are the reorganization accomplished in the financial structure of the country, eliminating some of its most antiquated features and immensely strengthening the great metropolitan institutions as well as the reorganization of industry on a much more formidable monopoly basis. Not only is this the monopoly form of the past large enterprises, but it is the addition of a degree of governmental supervision and control through industrial codes which facilitates the elimination of small competitors on a perfectly legal basis. In regard to capital and labor relations the efforts are distinctly to re-establish the old condition of "identity of interests" which was somewhat badly shattered during the crisis. The aim is not merely the "identity of interests" on the old narrow basis of collaborating directly with unions, exclusively craft in composition, and confined to the aristocracy of labor, or through labor banks, labor insurance schemes or stock ownership schemes—the methods of fattening the aristocracy of labor as a means of better keeping the proletariat under control. Such means are no longer sufficient. Moreover changes have taken place in the composition of American labor; the leveling process has not been without effects. Now the idea is to extend the "identity of interests" to an alliance based upon joint interests in recovery, to embrace the working class generally. First among the measures applied is the reorganization of labor power to the productive forces through reduction of working hours in order to blunt the most dangerous edges of the unemployment problem. Secondly, the affirming of the right to organization and collective bargaining which in reality means a tacit agreement to a further extension of the conservative unions for the purpose of cementing the alliance. Wages are, of course, to be adjusted to the needs of capital and its profit incentive. But for the whole it is hoped that the NRA machinery of labor ad-

The rapidly developing events in Cuba have found an answer in the "democratic" regime of Roosevelt. Warships are steaming full speed ahead to Cuban waters. Marines are being mobilized—not for intervention!—just to protect American lives and property. At the first serious threat to the money bags of the Wall Street oligarchs the mask is stripped from the face of the "liberal" administration and it reacts like the most honored of the reactionary regimes in United States history. For the workers in the United States the central problem is the fight at home against intervention.

The Cuban situation is developing with hurricane speed. De Cespedes and his concentration cabinet have been swept away. The regime was not one month old when the military, the students and the ABC dissident wing blew it into eternity.

Communists to Be Tried for Goering Reichstag Fire

On September 17 the trial of those accused in the German Reichstag fire will commence before the Supreme Court at Leipzig. Unquestionably this represents the most monstrous and most brazen frame-up yet recorded in working class history engineered with all the skill for which the Nazis have become notorious. The accused are Ernst Torgler, former chairman of the Communist party Reichstag fraction; Van der Lubbe, the Dutch Nazi dupe, and the three Bulgarian Communists, who had been living as exiles for some time in Germany. Demitroff, Popoff and Taneoff.

The Reichstag fire on Feb. 27, dramatically initiated the terror regime which today can claim among its victims hundreds of workers, killed or maimed for life; acts which in their gruesome details defy description, the battering and devastation of all semblance of working class organization, the muzzling of all freedom of opinion and about 80,000 victims suffering the horrors of the Nazi concentration camps. On Feb. 27, under the glare of the flames, Hitler said to the reporter of the London Daily Express: "You are witnessing the commencement of a great historical epoch. This blaze is the beginning." And strangely enough, although this date fell right at the height of the election campaign, neither Hitler nor Goering nor Goebbels were out on the stump; all were assembled in Berlin—waiting for the fire.

All aid by foreign counsel has been denied the accused by the Nazi government. No one not under strict Nazi discipline is to be allowed to pry into this frame-up. Among such foreign counsel offering their services were attorneys Arthur Garfield Hays of the United States, Branting of Sweden, the well known writer Romain Rolland and many others. These have now constituted a committee to conduct a public hearing at the Hague simultaneously with the Leipzig trial.

The coup d'etat was accomplished without bloodshed and with remarkable ease. The De Cespedes regime offered no resistance. Quietly and with "dignity" it abandoned the seat of power, saying only that the responsibility for the "burden of government" rested on other shoulders.

The painless amputation of the De Cespedes regime is to be explained by the fact that it failed entirely to enlist the support of the workers. Although the general strike came to an end with the return to work of the Havana bus drivers and later the stevedores and dock workers, strikes continued throughout the island in the cities and on the sugar plantations. These movements became ever deeper in character. Here and there the military attempted to put down the strikes but the soldiers, for the most part, FRATERNIZED WITH THE WORKERS. This strike movement cut away the ground under the feet of the government.

On the other hand the De Cespedes regime revealed its sympathies with American imperialism and the Michadistas. Not only had the De Cespedes regime organized Machado's escape, but it revealed a great reluctance to satisfy the popular demand for the arrest and trial of all the agents of the former dictator and the removal of his supporters in mayoralities and governmental posts. This infuriated the anti-imperialist elements of the petty bourgeoisie.

Finally the government signified its intention of cutting the soldiers' pay. This was the last straw. The soldiers rebelled. The movement developed with remarkable speed and immediately swept beyond its initial objectives. The soldiers of Camp Columbia, a Havana post, took to the radio and asked for the support of all enlisted men. The response was immediate. The entire army and later the navy joined the movement.

The rebellion of the military is a rebellion of the rank and file against the government carried out against their own officers. Their first action was to arrest all commissioned officers. And now for the first time in the present revolution the soldiers and sailors are putting forward THEIR OWN LEADERS. At the head of the army and navy stand non-commissioned officers. Throughout the army and navy the same selection is taking place.

The soldiers and sailors by themselves cannot constitute a regime. They need political leadership. In the present situation that has been supplied by the petty bourgeoisie. Under the slogan of the immediate convocation of a Constituent Assembly the petty bourgeoisie have erected a junta of five: four professors and a banker.

What will the petty bourgeoisie demand in the Constituent Assembly? The petty bourgeois masses are infused with anti-imperialist sentiments. The press reports that they signify their intention to fire on American marines should they be landed. A student jumps to the roof of an automobile and denounces American intermeddling.

The situation indicates that the demand will be raised for the abrogation of the Platt Amendment in the Cuban Constitution giving the United States the right to intervene with military forces in Cuba. The demand will also be made to denounce the treaty between the United States which gives the United States that right.

But the leaders of the new movement, the Junta, do not dare to say this openly. They are afraid of intervention by the United States to "protect foreign lives and property."

This lack of plain speaking characterizes the program of the new government. How could it be otherwise? The petty bourgeoisie have no social program. They cannot cope with the problems of modern society. Their position in society is a desperate struggle for existence between the capitalist and proletarian grindstones of the social process. They are incapable of conceiving, let alone carrying through, the revolutionary transformation of capitalist society; that involves the obliteration of their own existence as a class.

In the Cuban revolution the summit of their social vision is the Manifesto of their junta of professors and a banker. On the one hand they stand in awe of the American imperialist colossus: "Strict respect of the debts and obligations of the republic." This is assurance to the Chase National Bank and the House
